THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY

Founded by J.P.Chalmers in 1907

QUALITY

is the standard of measurement of the American people. They insist upon it in dress, in foods, in their luxuries and in their screen entertainment.

Goldwyn Pictures

without exception conform to this popular requirement. Fineness, refinent, "class"—whichever you choose to call it—is the dominant note in all productions that bear the the Goldwyn name.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription Price: United States and Its Possessions, and Mexico, $3.00 a year; Canada, $3.50 a year; Foreign Countries (postpaid), $4.00 a year. Entered as second class matter June 17, 1908, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879.

The Highest Quality in Positive Prints At The Lowest Prices

Through the highest standard of efficiency, attained by the Spoor-Thompson laboratory method of processing film, we are enabled to guarantee you a quality in positive prints unequaled by any other method.

We long ago passed the experimental stage, and under the most exacting conditions, have produced, and are now producing, a standardized quality that is equable and unchanged throughout the entire length of the film.

And this high quality is offered you at a price less than you pay for inferior process work.

Mr. Charles F. Stark, our sales manager, will give you details.

MITCHELL LEWIS

IN "CODE OF THE YUKON"

In this, his first Select Picture, Mitchell Lewis, who created the immortal role of Poleon in "The Barrier," is again presented as a simple, big-hearted fellow of the great Northwest.

The photodrama, like its leading figure, is strong, clean, virile.

in "THE SILVER KING"

A Paramount-Artcraft Special

By Henry Arthur Jones. Scenario by Burns Mantle. Directed by George Irving.

WILLIAM FAVERSHAM in "The Silver King" is one of those rare productions that leap into instant popularity.

Mr. Faversham is one of the most polished actors, one of the genuine artists of the screen and in "The Silver King" he has a play entirely worthy of his unusual talent.

Throughout, it is a distinguished performance, a production the entire industry can be proud of.

It is difficult to describe in words the charm of this melodrama.

It is a moving picture which should be shown to all who doubt the dramatic value of the screen, its power to portray genuine emotion, its sincere devotion to the art of intelligent amusement.

"The Silver King" is a picture that will build untold good will for the moving picture theatre.

What Is the Right Profit?

It isn't what you pay for pictures that determines profit

—it's the volume of business you do with them.

A picture that costs $25 and plays to regrets is not worth as much to you as one that costs a lot more but which packs 'em in.

Your measure of possibilities is the number of persons your theatre can accommodate.

And you don't make real money in the long run if only now and then you play to capacity.

You ought not to have to depend on occasional big features to keep on speaking terms with your banker.

The pictures you book on a group basis are your bread and butter

—the big features should be your jam.

"Little drops of water, little grains of sand,
"Make the mighty ocean and the pleasant land."

It is the persistent piling up of profits that counts.

That's the Fox Idea!

Profit doesn't pursue poor pictures! It is particular about the sort of company it keeps.

Profit results from finding the sort of pictures that public wants and then showing those pictures exclusively.

It isn't your opinion of a picture, or the producer's opinion

—it isn't what you think the public ought to have, or what you think it ought to want —it's what the public thinks that counts!

—it's through supplying public demand that live wire exhibitors are packing their theatres and maintaining a steady average of profits. That's the Fox Idea!

* * * *

Fox Pictures are made with only one object in view

—to please most of the people.

That's the basic Idea on which the Fox business is founded

—that's why the chain of Fox Branch Offices is girdling the globe more and more tightly every month

—that's why the circle of One Hundred Per Cent. Fox Exhibitors is constantly enlarging

—that's why Fox Stories stand out in such amazing contrast to those of other producers

—that's why the value of the Fox Franchise everywhere is becoming steadily greater and greater.

The Fox Idea means maximum profits for Fox exhibitors!

MOST PEOPLE KNOW WHAT THEY WANT-GIVE IT TO THEM

FOX FILMS

BOOK FOX FILMS-THEY ARE WHAT MOST PEOPLE WANT

Is Your House Getting It?

Thoroughness is the price one pays for success in the picture producing world and thoroughness is part of the Fox Idea.

You can't arrive at the public's estimate of what it wants through listening to any one man's opinion—if William Fox had done that he would have been interred financially long, long ago.

That "almost uncanny anticipation" of changing public taste which a competitor has attributed to William Fox isn't so much anticipation as it is preparation. William Fox has unique facilities for finding out what the public wants —and he takes the trouble to employ these facilities.

Scores of persons have voices in the verdict before a production is pronounced complete —from script to laboratory a picture passes a long and tortuous route involving critical reviewing by a trained staff and revisions that are innumerable. And then the productions—before they go to you—are submitted to the people. Fox Theatres provide the medium.

Fox Pictures are the only pictures which are given this advance test of popularity. William Fox is the only producer who possesses the facilities for making such a test.

And that is how William Fox knows what the public wants.

Fox pictures come to you bearing the seal of popular approval.

That's the Fox Idea.

* * * *

It is this invariable system that has made VICTORY PICTURES and EXCEL PICTURES such tremendous successes. These series of productions, issued for the first time last September, have been a steady source of amazement to exhibitors.

Good stories—capable direction—adequate production—have brought TOM MIX, GEORGE WALSH and GLADYS BROCKWELL into the first ranks of stars demanded by exhibitors —have given to PEGGY HYLAND, VIRGINIA PEARSON, MADLAINE TRAVERSE and JANE and KATHERINE LEE the sort of productions that insure steadily growing profits.

Uniform quality has been the outstanding feature of these pictures—has given to these two series an amazing succession of spectacular successes, unprecedented in the history of the motion picture business.

The way to insure the right profits in your theatre, all the time, is to

ALICE JOYCE in "The Captain's Captain"

SECOND RELEASE OF THE ALICE JOYCE STAR SERIES

Adapted from James A. Cooper's Widely Read Story "Cap'n Abe, Storekeeper"

Directed by Tom Terriss

IT is an entirely new Alice Joyce that you will find in this whimsical Cape Cod romance. This time she is the mischievous, irresponsible girl, always doing the unexpected, getting into a bit of a scrape now and then, but getting out of it again, and getting someone else out with her.

"The Captain's Captain" is a typically Happy Picture—brimming with smiles that are never forced. Its fresh delightful humor, its never-waning action and strong love story should make it one of the most popular of the Alice Joyce releases.

And supporting this beautiful star—whose box-office power is increasing with each succeeding release—is this all-star cast: Arthur Donaldson, Maurice Costello, Eulalie Jensen, Percy Standing and Julia Swayne Gordon.

GOLDWYN: A Great Name Built Solid During the Worst Crisis In the History of the World - - -

THE Goldwyn organization is two years old. It was conceived and launched in the middle of the world war when it required courage to tempt the fates by seeking to build a new wide-world mechanism. Today it is powerful and constantly expanding its reach into the world's far places.

The industry at large is puzzled by the growth and increasing importance of Goldwyn. But no customer of Goldwyn—domestic or foreign—or no internal factor in Goldwyn itself is puzzled for a moment over the success of the name and the organization.

Goldwyn has achieved the expected; has done what it set out to do; and intends in the future to achieve its present objectives. We have built soundly and cleanly. Within the organization there have been ideals and men with ideals to execute them. We have had the vision to see beyond a week, a month or a year and to discern the shifting currents in an industry where the tides turn quickly.

This is a clean nation whose people, no matter how fickle they may seem at times, like and demand the better things. Time and again in two years we could have catered to tastes of the moment and been rated shrewd and successful for doing so. But we have preferred to shoot straight at the mark, to build cumulative confidence on the firm, sound bases of integrity and quality.

Such a policy must be founded upon patience; upon willingness to work and wait. Goldwyn has proved rather than professed its friendship and serviceability to the exhibitors of the country. We have been from the start an independent organization, seeking friends but shunning alliances of all kinds that would hamper or restrict our freedom.

We have been untouched by the changes in the industry; have defied or escaped the predictions and forecasts. We have avoided bluster and sought to create a feeling of dependability in the minds of those we serve and desire to serve. And we feel that we have the finest group of stars associated with any one company name in the industry and that we are making, dramatically and technically, the best pictures available in the entire market. More than 6,000 individual exhibitor-customers give added strength to our belief.

THE powerful Chicago amusement magnate says: "I know why 'Smiling Bill' Parsons has caught on so quickly with his Capitol Comedies. He's a good showman and a wise one . . . . . He's the Ziegfeld of screen comedies."

Which means that "Smiling Bill" Parsons seeks and finds the loveliest girls in sunny California and surrounds himself with them in Capitol Comedies.

FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

Five New Year's Releases of the Ford Educational Weekly

PICTURE this great Government's operation of the national postal system; the vital drama of human communication; the linking up of absent ones with their homes; the conduct of our many-billioned volume of internal trade and foreign commerce through the medium of the mails. You will see this fascinating fact-drama in the Ford Educational Weekly's January 12 release:

"What Uncle Sam Will Do For 2 Cents."

Millions of Americans listened to the gloomy tales of critics and disloyalists that our Liberty Motors were a failure; were enveloped in plotting and scandal. Suddenly an official report revealed their splendid success. Now, in motion pictures, the Ford Educational Weekly's January 19 release depicts

"The Truth About the Liberty Motor."

How many grown persons or children know how the paper on the walls of their homes is made; how the patterns are made and imprinted; the articles used in the making of the paper? A most interesting fact story of an every-day article seen by millions of eyes is pictured in Ford Educational Weekly's January 26 release under the catchy title

"Hang It All!" The Story of Wallpaper.

Everyone has read in the newspapers for months about the great Hog Island shipyards near Philadelphia. The biggest problem that Woodrow Wilson took with him to the Peace Conference was "the freedom of the seas." Here in motion pictures you are permitted to see the construction of our nation's great mercantile fleet in the February 2 Ford Educational Weekly release:

"Carrying Old Glory to the Seven Seas."

Did you know that Canada has named a mountain after a woman whose place is established forever in the history of civilization—Edith Cavell, the martyred nurse who was slain by the Germans? In Ford Educational Weekly's February 9 release you will be shown the beauties of

"Canada's Mountain of Tears."

Effective with the New Year Goldwyn is the exclusive distributor of this greatest of all screen educationals. A fortune is spent upon the production of this remarkable weekly which, now playing in 3,000 theatres, will soon be seen in 7,000 theatres of the nation for each and every issue. Ask your nearest Goldwyn office for details or consult the nearest of the 10,500 Ford Motor Company sales agents who will take your application and deliver it to Goldwyn.

Form Your Own Opinions of Louis Bennison From These Reports

GOLDWYN is not going to tell you how fine Louis Bennison is; how sure of success he is. We are going to let others tell you—the great critics of the country over whose opinions we have no control:

SEATTLE TIMES: Welcome to our city, Louis Bennison. You have thousands of well-wishers out front.

BOSTON GLOBE: There is no one on stage or screen quite like him.

ST. LOUIS TIMES: That rare specimen; an actor in the best sense of the word.

ATLANTA JOURNAL: Louis Bennison brings a fascinating personality to the screen.

CHICAGO NEWS: He is irresistible; Bennison's comedy is rich and true. All of you are certain to like him.

TORONTO MAIL: No one should miss seeing Louis Bennison—he's a corker.

CLEVELAND NEWS: An absolutely new type of humorist—that's what Bennison is.

S. F. CHRONICLE: Bennison is the stuff of which the real big stars are made.

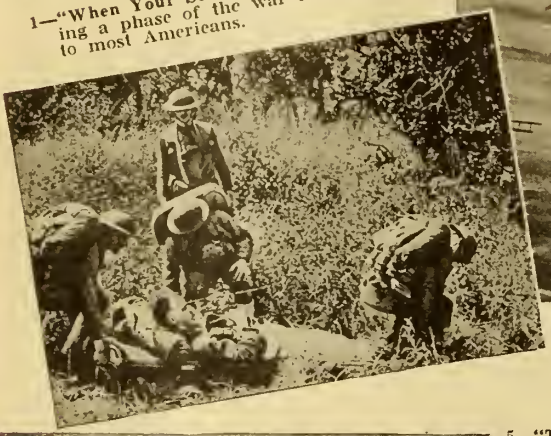
UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT—

U. S. A. SERIES

Each film covering a single phase of the world war

1—"When Your Soldier's Hit"—illustrating a phase of the war little known to most Americans.



2—"Wings of Victory"—a thrilling story of American resourcefulness in overcoming obstacles.

4—One of the impressive scenes from "Making the Nation Fit"—a film with a peace-time application.

3—"Horses of War"—a glorious bit of war history now presented for the first time.

5—"The Bath of Bullets"—an authentic close-up, showing how the "small" artillery does its work.

6—Perhaps the most exciting film of the entire series—"The Storm of Steel"—all about the "big guns."

Two Reels—one release every two weeks

First Release December 23d

THE United States Government made these absorbing feature films to illustrate the activities of specialized branches of war service.

They take the public "behind the scenes" and show the obstacles that had to be overcome before America could put a victorious army in the field against Militant Autocracy.

These thrilling two-reelers visualize, in authentic detail, the modern art of war.

Following are the films in the U. S. A. Series, with dates of release:

1 If your soldier's hit

Shows how wounded soldiers are taken care of and nursed back to health.

Released December 23, 1918.

2 Wings of Victory

A first-hand story of America's planes and aviators in the war.

Released January 6, 1919.

3 Horses of War

How horses helped make victory possible. A bit of war history now told for the first time.

Released January 20, 1919.

4 Making the Nation Fit

Putting the Army and Navy in first-class fighting trim—a film with a peace-time application.

Released February 3, 1919.

5 The Bath of Bullets

The part played by "the guns" in the winning of the war.

Released February 17, 1919.

6 The Storm of Steel

In which the United States Ordnance Department takes the public into its confidence.

Released March 3, 1919.

We issue a pleasant warning!

ONCE in a very long while the story, the star, the cast, the director, the title man and the photographer all happen to be right, and then is born the 100% picture. You remember "Skinner's Dress Suit", for example, and you know how you and your audience enjoyed it? Well, Metro will release in January a picture similar in type but, we believe, even more enjoyable because it is so human and its characters really live. It is better than we hoped or guessed when we read Frederick Orin Bartlett's story in the Saturday Evening Post.

It portrays the making over of a Millionaire skinflint, a type familiar to every city in the United States, into a benefactor and friend of humanity, who decides, under the guidance of his bright young nephew, that the real way to enjoy life is to spend money in making others happy.

The story is in all respects so charming, so appealing in its pathos and blithe humor, that we take this occasion to congratulate George D. Baker on his splendid supervision of the production, together with A. G. Kenyon who assisted in the adaption, Charles Swickard the director and the photographer Robert B. Kurrle.

We want exhibitors to know thus far in advance that this is a Metro All Star Series picture, not a special, and that by advertising and getting back of it they may reap the rich harvest which the picture warrants.

The play presents in a new light and its name is

Massachusetts and Rhode Island League Welcomes the Return of Exchangemen—Also Decides to Take Action Against National Association to Recover Money Spent

PASSAGE of a resolution calling for action against the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to recover money expended toward holding the national exposition in Boston and statements that a movement has been launched to form an opposition motion picture exhibitors' league in New England featured the fifth annual meeting and banquet of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in Boston on Wednesday afternoon, December 18.

Previous to the banquet, the annual meeting took place in the league rooms. Frank J. Howard, pioneer in the motion picture industry in this country, was elected president. Other officers chosen follow: First vice-president, W. B. Sproul, East Boston; second vice-president, Charles Moning, of Plymouth; secretary, H. I. Wasserman, of the Eagle Theatre, Boston; treasurer, Jacob Lourie, manager of the Beacon and Modern Theatres, Boston; board of directors, P. F. Lydon, M. J. Lydon, Charles Ross, A. Montague, A. Somerby, Charles Harris and A. H. Bailey.

Big Things Expected of Howard.

President-elect Howard is one of the best known men in the motion picture industry and big things are expected of the league under his guidance. The industry was in its infancy when Mr. Howard came on the scene. He was the first man to open a motion picture house in Boston. This show was put on in a store on Boyleston street, near the corner of Washington. His first two reels were "The May Irwin Kiss" and the "Twentieth Century Limited." President Howard opened the first film exchange in New England. Ten years later he sold out to the General Film Company. By this deal he cleaned up a sizable fortune. Recently he sold his interests in the Nathan Gordon chain of Olympia theatres and is today actively engaged as a producer with the Atlas Film Company at Newton, Mass.

Many Well Known Exhibitors Attend.

More than fifty of the best known exhibitors of Massachusetts and Rhode Island attended the league meeting. President Lydon was in the chair.

A lively discussion developed soon after the meeting was called to order. This was over the loss sustained by the league through the failure of the national exposition in Boston last July. It was pointed out by speakers that despite the fact that the annual convention of the league and the N. A. M. P. I.

By Herbert A. Smith

in Chicago passed a vote that manufacturers take part in the national exposition in Boston, a meeting was held in New York just previous to the date of the exposition at which the N. A. M. P. I. left the project stranded. It was further stated that the Massachusetts and Rhode Island exhibitors had spent a large amount of money to finance the publicity work of the national exposition.

Frank J. Howard

Take Action Against N. A. M. P. I.

A banquet was given in the Castle Square Hotel, advertising matter was distributed broadcast throughout the country and permanent convention headquarters has been opened. Then came the dropping out of the N. A. M. P. I. and the collapse of the project. Boston and league members bore the financial burden of the loss. The league voted to take action against the N. A. M. P. I. to recover all money which members put out to further the exposition.

The league appointed a committee whose duty it will be to bring about the employment of crippled soldiers in theatres and exchanges so far as possible. This was the committee named: Frank J. Howard, M. J. Lydon, and Ernest H. Horstmann.

Following the league meeting members went to the Lenox Hotel. Here a number of social gatherings were held until banquet time.

Banquet, as Usual, Is "Regular" Affair.

The banquet was a "regular" affair. Dinner tickets were $5 a plate. The menu was an elaborate one. A handsome souvenir note book was given each guest.

After the repast, President-elect Howard called the gathering to order. He drew attention to the fact that a request would be made of all exhibitors that they allow collectors to visit their houses on Saturday to collect money for the tobacco fund of the Twenty-sixth (New England) Division overseas. He said he hoped all theatre managers would aid this work.

President Howard then announced that on January 3 Mrs. Myron K. Miller of New York City would be at the Hotel Brunswick, Boston, at 8 p. m., to meet exhibitors and woman guests in an effort to start a film club in Boston. He stated further that Mrs. Miller had opened a campaign to organize film clubs for women throughout the United States. President Howard urged all exhibitors and exchangemen to assist Mrs. Miller in her work. The matter, he added, was of vital importance to the motion picture business.

Horstman Welcomes Exchangemen.

Ernest H. Horstmann was then introduced as toastmaster. Mr. Horstmann said it was a pleasure to have the exchangemen back in the league. The exchangemen, he said, had been put out of the league at the request of the exhibitors, who has protested that the league was run in the interests of the exchangemen. The folly of this action had been seen, he said. Mr. Horstmann went on to say that it was the duty of exhibitors to patronize so far as possible the exchanges which support the league and that vice versa it was the duty of the exchangemen to work with the league members.

Mr. Hortsmann then went on to tell of the events in Washington during the contest over the theatre tax. Representatives of the exhibitors, among whom were Alfred S. Black, had worked hard, he said, to have the tax repealed. A compromise measure, he continued, was drawn up. This was to be introduced when the national association placed the burden on the exhibitor. Congressman Kitchin, he said, called the attention of President Wilson to the situation. It meant the holding up of the big revenue bill and the President could not see his way clear to do this.

Outlines Mutual Grievances.

Continuing his address, Mr. Horstmann said that the American Exhibitors' Association and the Exhibitors' League were together while the country was at war. This gave the government the united efforts of the screen. This meant that the national association had to pocket its pride and join the American Association. The latter, he said, had withdrawn again. The speaker pointed out the need for a stronger exhibitors' league in the East and urged a 100 per cent. membership. Burial of petty differences between exchangemen and exhibitors was of paramount importance. Mr. Horstmann added that it was unfair for the exchangemen to send an exhibitor a film C. O. D., and that it was also unfair for the exhibitor to return the films to the exchangemen C. O. D. He declared that it was not fair for the exhibitor to book one film and then run it in two theatres. He also declared it was unfair for the exchangeman to book an exhibitor a "Charlie Chaplin" and send him a "Fatty Arbuckle." But, the speaker declared, these were all minor individual differences that easily could be smoothed out if the exchangemen and the exhibitors would get together and talk matters over. This should be done, he said. The place to thrash these matters out was in the league rooms where exhibitors and exchangemen could meet and talk matters over.

The toastmaster then introduced State Senator George W. Curran of Boston as "the man who made the fight in the last Massachusetts Legislature against the five minute law."

Industry Plays Big Role in War.

Senator Curran said that the motion picture industry played a major role in the winning of the war. In the first three Liberty Loan drives, he declared, this industry had collected more than one-third of the loans. "This industry," he said, "has stood 100 per cent in its war record. Now that prosperity has come again we should stand 100 per cent as an organization for the future welfare of the business. The five minute law which I was glad to sponser in the Massachusetts Legislature has saved every exhibitor fully $1,000 a year. In looking around I see the same men here who have come up to Beacon Hill year after year to fight legislation hostile to the motion picture industry. You are going to have a whole lot more hostile legislation to combat. You should be 100 per cent organization. If I can do anything for the industry I stand ready to aid you in every way."

Here's An Echo of That Chicago Trip.

John M. Casey, motion picture censor of Boston, was introduced as the "best pitch player in the U. S. A." This Mr. Horstmann said was proved on the trip of the delegates to the last national convention in Chicago.

Mr. Casey began his address by saying that his first impression was that the charges that there might be a clique in the industry dominated by the exchangemen might be true. Two years' experience, he declared, convinced him that he was entirely mistaken. Opponents of the exchangemen, he added, had failed utterly to make good their charges. He believed that the future benefit of the league was to have the exchangemen in the fold.

Continuing, he said: "You are a bright, clever, capable set of business men. You insure your buildings against fire and take other wise business precautions. Why don't you insure your business by making this league a 100 per cent organization? I see the same few men at all these gatherings. When a law that is an injury to the industry is passed there is a great howl and a plea to the officials of the various cities and towns to go easy on the obnoxious law.

"Why don't you start at the beginning and fight this legislation in the legislature as a 100 per cent organization instead of waiting until the damage is done? The differences among the exhibitors and exchangemen are minor ones, and they can all be overcome with the proper co-operation on all sides. No one has the best interests of the industry more at heart, and I am with you any time you may call on me."

Lydon Also Greets Exchangemen.

The retiring President, Mr. Lydon, was then introduced as "a man who has accomplished a great deal for the industry." He said he believed the past year had been a successful one for the league. He declared that the gates had been opened wide and that the dissenters had come back into the organization. "I am glad we had the good sense to welcome the exchangemen back into the league," he said. "Every exchangeman is human and the exhibitors are also so. The men who come here and foot the bills and work their hardest for the organization would be satisfied if they got only the moral support of the exhibitors. But we have exhibitors who refuse to come to the meetings at all and who only sit back and knock.

"I have received the resignation of some of our 'bolters.' I understand they will start an opposition organization. All glory to them. I don't know whether to class some of our opponents in the class of A. P. A. or the I. W. W. I am safe in saying that they won't work. I thank you for the fine assistance you have given me, and I wish our new president a very successful year."

Wasserman Praises Lydon.

H. I. Wasserman arose and said he felt it his duty to protest against the criticism made of the administration of the league under the retiring president, Mr. Lydon. This criticism, he continued, was never based upon facts. Mr. Lydon has been in ill-health and unable to attend many of the league meetings. When there was a battle on, he added, Mr. Lydon was always on hand. He had been a hard, persistent worker for the organization, the speaker said. The league, he declared, would stand by Mr. Lydon to the last.

Mr. Wasserman then presented Mr. Lydon with a handsome leather traveling bag as a "token of love and esteem in which he is held by his fellow league members."

Mr. Lydon was greatly surprised, but arose to the occasion. He laughingly remarked that it was evident his friends wished to get rid of him quickly. He declared that he was leaving the next day for Hot Springs, Va., and would use the bag on his trip.

As the "dean of exchangemen who had fought in the interests of the exhibitor," Harry F. Campbell, manager of the Fox Exchange, was called on. Mr. Campbell said he had the sensation of a prodigal son back at the home fireside. He had been "fired" out of the league as an exchangeman, he said, but was glad to get back in again. He made a stirring plea for a 100 per cent organization.

Asher Glad To Be Back Again.

Harry Asher, manager of the Paramount Exchange, the next speaker, declared he was glad to hear that some of the exhibitors had bolted the league and were going to start a rival organization. He hoped that the exhibitors had adjusted their differences. He rejoiced in being back in the league and expressed the opinion that the co-operation between the exchangemen and the exhibitors could be maintained. He thought both the exchangemen and the exhibitors meant to be fair to each other in all their dealings.

Mr. Horstmann then called on all exhibitors and exchangemen to give their loyal support to the new president, Mr. Howard.

Some Exhibitors Remind Howard of Children.

Mr. Howard was the next speaker. He said some of the exhibitors reminded him of children. They refused to play because the game was not held in their own yard. He declared the league had done hard fighting and deserved all success. He also declared that the war was won by motion pictures. "This is a very broad statement," he continued, "but a true one. I think I can prove it. A year ago, when the Allies were up against it German propaganda had covered the world.

"In France and England the German propaganda had spread the report that America was in the war, but she was doing nothing. Some man conceived the idea of taking motion pictures of our munition plants, shipyards and cantonments, showing our vast war preparations. These pictures were shown throughout England and France and immediately the spirit of the allies took a new turn. Their morale improved and the war was won by motion pictures." Mr. Howard urged greater and stronger organization work in the league.

Those present at the banquet included Harry Campbell and Frank Bine, Fox Exchange; John M. Casey, Boston censor; Senator George W. Curran, Boston; Thomas Spry, Gordon-Mayer Company; Herman Rifkin, Rifkin Feature Film Company; Harry Segal, Metro Film Company; A. Cebe, Metro; Harry Asher, W. H. TWO SAMUELS VISIT TWO COAST CITIES

Goldfish in Seattle Says Exhibitors Must Pay a Fair Price or They Won't Get Good Pictures, and Rothapfel in San Francisco Says, "Don't Follow an Old Track"

Seattle, Washington.

ON December 11 a luncheon was given at the Washington Hotel by the Seattle office of the Goldwyn Film Corporation in honor of S. L. Rothapfel and Samuel Goldfish. F. M. Brockell, the new manager of the Seattle Goldwyn office, acted as host. Fifty guests were present, representing the exhibition, distribution and production of motion pictures, as well as the press.

J. A. Koerpel, manager of the Seattle World office, was toastmaster. Those at the speakers' table were Samuel Goldfish, S. L. Rothapfel, J. A. Koerpel, Hobart Bosworth, James Q. Clemmer, F. M. Brockell.

Mr. Goldfish was the first speaker. The theme of his speech was an exhortation to the exhibitor to help save the motion picture industry from ruin by not trying to dominate prices, by helping to develop new screen personalities, and by condemning salacious pictures. The whole future of the industry, he said, rests with the exhibitor, and he asserted that it is the fault of exhibitors that no producing organization is paying today.

"Unless exhibitors are willing to pay a fair price for good productions," he declared, "the producers cannot make good pictures. It is just as bad for the exhibitor to organize in order to dominate prices as it is for the producers to try to dominate. When the exhibitor dictates prices to the producers he is making Bolsheviki of them. It cannot be otherwise."

Must Develop New Personalities.

Mr. Goldfish further urged exhibitors to book pictures that do not feature stars, saying that he was not against stars, but that new personalities must be developed, if production is to progress. He ended his address with a plea for the condemnation of the salacious picture by exhibitors.

"If the exhibitors will refuse to book them, then, of course, they won't be made; so it remains with exhibitors to destroy the evil of the salacious picture," he concluded.

Hobart Bosworth, who was the next to speak, declared that in his travels over the country in his present engagement on the Orpheum Circuit he had been able to make first hand investigation of motion picture conditions and had found that everywhere the exhibitors' clientele was slipping from them. He said that the only way for the exhibitor to keep them was through the development of new personalities and by building up the power of his theatre as on institution. He cited Mr. Rothapfel's houses as pre-eminent examples of the institutional power of the theatre.

Theatre, Not Picture, Dominates.

In Mr. Rothapfel's address he blamed the exhibitors for the present condition of the industry, declaring that most exhibitors were doing nothing to maintain their average and that they had no right to expect a profit from pictures of which they had done nothing to enhance the value to the public. This led up to his main point that it is the theatre, not the picture, which makes success for the exhibitor. But the theatre as an institution cannot be sound unless built upon a sound foundation. In the first place exhibitors, like other business men, must be willing to pay a good price for good service.

Mr. Rothapfel declared that he could get pictures for less than any other exhibitor in the country, but that instead he paid more than any other. He added that he paid his orchestra $300,000 a year not because he had to pay that much to get good music, but because he considered good music worth that much to him. He added that every member of his organization was proportionately well paid for his services.

Must Be Your Own Severest Critic.

The exhibitor cannot afford to take as the basic idea of building his institution that old fallacy of the amusement business, "Give the public what it wants."

"That is humanly impossible," said Mr. Rothapfel, "because you don't know and they themselves don't know what they want. You've got to set your own standard, be your own severest critic, and build your performance to your own ideals. When you've got it high enough to satisfy yourself, then see what improvements others may be able to suggest."

Mr. Rothapfel declared a big theatre was not needed to carry out these principles, that if the small exhibitor would watch his show and be constantly on the qui vive for possible improvements and would keep up the morale of his employes with constant inspiration and fair play, he could build an institution as sound and as lasting as the biggest theatres in the country. But probably the most important idea to get over, he added, is for the exhibitor to make each of his patrons feel a personal interest in the theatre.

In conclusion he advised, "Don't kill the goose that laid the golden egg. You can't dominate. If you would make a lasting success in this business be generous—be generous to a fault."

Local Speakers Have Their Say.

At the end of Mr. Rothapfel's address the toastmaster called on several exhibitors and representatives of other branches of the industry. Each promised his co-operation in trying to improve conditions. Those who spoke were Jim Clemmer, manager of the Clemmer Theatre, Seattle; J. A. Gottstein, of the Greater Theatres Company, Seattle; H. T. Moore, Rialto and Colonial, Tacoma; Jack Rantz, manager of the Rialto and Dream, Bremerton; H. G. Rosebaum, manager of the Seattle Paramount-Artcraft office and president of the Northwest Film Board of Trade; George Bellman, who conducts the motion picture section of the Seattle Times; and Lloyd Spencer, who holds a similar position with the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Besides those already named those present were: H. O. Alden, Harry Arthurs, Jr., W. H. Brewster, H. H.

San Francisco Greets Two Eastern Showmen Heartily

UPON the invitation of G. C. Parsons, manager of the San Francisco branch of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, about forty prominent exhibitors of the Bay City and its vicinity gathered on December 14 at a luncheon at Tait's Cafe to meet Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, and S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, New York.

Eugene H. Roth, of the California and Portola theaters, presided as toastmaster, and in a neat speech introduced Mr. Rothapfel as the "premier exhibitor of the world." He declared that many of the ideas introduced at the California came as inspirations from Mr. Rothapfel's work and that invariably they had been successful.

In prefacing his remarks on showmanship Mr. Rothapfel said: "I would rather visit San Francisco than any other city in the country, as it always has something new to offer. Greater progress has been made here in the past three years than in any other city in the United States, and I do not except New York. Some of your moving picture theatres are as fine as can be found anywhere, and are conducted on a very high plane. In many cities I have visited on this trip no improvement has been made in the past three years."

"Get Out of the Rut" Says Roxy.

He repeated the advice given on former visits about making each theatre an individual institution and how it could be accomplished.

"Don't follow in the old beaten track," he said, "blaze a new trail. Don't depend entirely on so-called features, for all pictures cannot be perfect, since moving picture production is an art. Too long a show is a bad policy, since the public does not want it and it is unprofitable. Variety is the spice of the show business, as well as of life. Use your judgment, as the exhibitor is the barometer of his institution and the public depends upon you. Train your help and get them to call your patrons by name. Properly trained help are walking twenty-four-sheets. Make your houses distinctive institutions, use real showmanship plus, and be optimistic."

Mr. Roth then introduced Samuel Goldfish, who said in part: "I can see that conditions in San Francisco differ from those in many other parts of the country and that there is a type of exhibitor here that is badly needed all over the land.

"The moving picture industry today is in a sad condition and worse than many realize. Producers are making no money, nor have they for more than two years. The time has come for the exhibitor to take stock. If he is to perpetuate what he now has he must support the honorable producer. The exhibitor at the present time does not know where he stands. Today he has a star on his program; tomorrow it is withdrawn.

"Producers must get new leading people all the time, for when all is said and done it is the new blood that keeps the business going. The public soon tires of seeing the same faces on the screen week after week. Without the co-operation of exhibitors it will be impossible to present new people and this co-operation is now none too marked.

"No one is going to win out with sensational pictures. You may clean up today, but the next effort along this line may be a failure. Clean pictures are necessary if producers or exhibitors are to remain in business. The idea that a million people are needed to make a picture has also been thrown into the discard. No single star will dominate the Goldwyn organization and it is our desire to sell pictures, not stars.

Would Equalize the Rentals.

"Some exhibitors are paying more than they should, but there are also many who are paying too little. The stars are getting plenty, goodness knows, exhibitors are getting a good share and producers are being forced to revolt. The day of domination either on the part of the manufacturer or exhibitor is past. If the business is to succeed they must help one another.

"It is impossible to produce more than sixty per cent. successful pictures, even with the best of advisory talent. If we get no returns on the forty per cent. that lack pulling power we will go broke. The recent cancellations on war pictures will break some producers."

Mr. Goldfish wound up his talk by stating that the exhibitors of San Francisco, New York and Philadelphia led the country in their co-operation with producers. He also gave his hearers some idea of the work done by producers during the war in assisting the Government. Many pictures were sent to France depicting American war activities during the dark days when that country was bleeding at every pore and all but exhausted and these helped to buoy it up until assistance came.

San Franciscans Make Response.

Morris L. Markowitz, of the Strand Theatre, and manager of the Universal exchange, followed Mr. Goldfish and suggested that some of the troubles between exhibitors and film exchange managers arose through the dictatorial policies laid down from New York. C. W. Midgley, of the American Theatre, Oakland, and the Alameda Theatre, Alameda, declared that in this field exhibitors must choose their stars carefully, and that business fluctuates badly when attempts are made to introduce new ones.

E. Bruce Johnson, of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, took up the suggestion of Mr. Goldfish that some exhibitors were paying too much and others too little for service. He felt that the rental system was wrong and that a percentage basis would be more satisfactory to all concerned, putting every production strictly on its merits. Mr. Kehrlein, of the Kinema Theatre, Oakland, Fresno and Los Angeles, suggested that exhibitors should not stand all the loss of a poor picture, but that it should be graduated, with the star standing the most of it. James Beatty, of San Jose and Fresno, expressed the opinion that too much money was being expended in distribution. Other speakers were Sam Levin, of the new Coliseum Theatre, San Francisco, and A. H. Moore, of Berkeley.

Following this program an open discussion was held and Mr. Goldfish left with the statement that this had been the most successful meeting of any on the trip and that he has received many ideas worthy of deep consideration, which were the objects of his trip.

Mr. Laemmle Explains Brandt's New Duties

DOUBTS having been intimated as to what, exactly, were the new duties of Joe Brandt, the efficient official of the Universal Film Company, Mr. Laemmle, president of that concern, explains the matter in the following statement:

"I have always felt that closer co-operation between the exhibitor and the manufacturer would result in better pictures and less cost in handling.

"A year ago I asked Joe Brandt to take up the task of systematizing the exchanges so as to bring the distribution cost down to the lowest possible figure and to secure information first hand from the exhibitors as to exactly what they wanted us to produce. Brandt has so successfully systematized the exchanges and placed them on a rock bottom business basis that I feel that I need him now in a bigger field—a field that will bring him into immediate personal touch with the exhibitors of the country.

"I don't want to make a single picture during 1919 that will not be acceptable to the public and profitable for the exhibitor. For this reason I have asked Brandt to undertake a most difficult task—that of meeting personally as many of the exhibitors as he possibly can on a trip that will extend from Coast to Coast.

"In addition to this, Brandt will spend considerable time at Universal City cooperating with the producing organization. For the first few months he will particularly assist in the preparation of stories and the production of serials.

"I personally believe that serials in many instances helped exhibitors pack their houses on nights that were not profitable; to make this a certainty I have just signed a contract with James J. Corbett to appear in a serial; and I am now looking for several big stories by prominent authors for serials for Polo and Walcamp as well as Corbett.

"Brandt will continue to act as assistant treasurer of the company, but the major part of his time will be occupied in bringing about a complete understanding between the exhibitor and the Universal as to the wants of the public.

"In addition to this Brandt will supervise a special exploitation campaign in order to popularize everyone of the Universal stars. Contracts have already been entered into with several big metropolitan newspapers for an advertising and publicity campaign in 1919; and special advertising matter is being prepared so that the Service Department in every exchange will be able to give to the exhibitor who wants it the same kind of exploitation that the theatrical companies give to the local legitimate houses.

"I want to get closer to the exhibitors of this country in 1919 than I ever have been, and I am sincere in my desire to secure their advice in assisting me to produce the kind of pictures that will make money for both of us."

SPEAK THE TRUTH TO YOUR PATRONS

Over-Advertising of Picture Quality Destroys the Confidence of Clientele—Moderation in Statement Is Foundation for Occasional Advance in Prices

By E. R. PEARSON,
Manager Minneapolis Exchange of First National Exhibitors' Circuit of the Northwest.

THERE probably is no other retailer who is offered so much free advice as the exhibitor. He has it literally fired at him from all sides. If any one exhibitor kept a record for one month of the advice he receives about every subject relating to his business a symposium of that record would be ridiculous in the extreme.

Gradually, he becomes calloused to the admonitions and statements of many of the people with whom he comes in contact, particularly the exchange managers and their representatives. His confidence in their statements and laudatory comments about pictures will narrow down to one or two individuals who are sufficiently astute to appreciate the value of holding his good-will and trust.

Therein is a lesson for the exhibitor. Residents of his town or neighborhood look to him, exactly as he looks to the exchange managers and salesmen, for authentic, accurate advice about the productions he offers them. If he uses the policy of polite exaggeration which he condemns in the exchangemen, ultimately he will be doubted by his public just as he doubts his immediate sources of information and opinion.

Admits Some Pictures Are Ordinary.

The thinking exhibitor realizes that an exchange manager or salesman comes into contact with hundreds of exhibitors, and that, as a result, he should be a source of extremely profitable information and advice. But how often is he thoroughly confident of the integrity and honesty of the adviser. Here in Minneapolis are several exchange managers who are consulted almost daily by accounts they book on matters of really vital importance to the exhibitors. These theatre owners have grown to believe implicity in what these men tell them. They never doubt their word, because they have never found them guilty of distorting truth for their personal gain.

They are fortunate exchange managers. They never "sell" one of their releases to these accounts. They tell them, truthfully, whether it is a good picture or only an ordinary one. The exhibitors book on good-will and confidence. They know that it is impossible for every production to be a sensational success. And when the exchange manager is game enough to tell them, frankly, that certain releases are not as good as the last big specials they played, they do not consider that in any way derogatory to the value of these productions for certain days of each week.

I am always sincerely flattered when an exhibitor consults me and asks for my advice. I try to avoid hasty conclusions, and to be positive of my ground before I respond. I treasure the confidence of exhibitors as the biggest asset my office has.

Don't Exhaust Patrons' Credulity.

Comparatively, the biggest asset an exhibitor can have is the entire dependability of his local public in the statements he makes in his newspaper copy, on his slides, and in his lobby displays and house organs about the productions he offers them.

Frequently exchange managers are confronted with problems which, when traced down to their source, are found to result from exhibitor violations of public confidence. One exhibitor will spend $50 advertising a really worthy feature attraction, with results that are unmistakably discouraging. Perhaps he loses money on a three days' run. Another exhibitor, possibly in the same town, will book the same production, spend only $25 in advertising it, and do an exceptional business.

A close study of just such a perplexity as this has shown that the first exhibitor had exhausted the credulity of his patrons by the too frequent use of the superlatives and adjectives provided him by the producer's advertising department. It has been found that for only ordinary pictures he has used copy praising them to the skies for their thrills, strong dramatic value, marvelous settings, wonderful cast, sensational story and stupendous cost. Of course, responsibility for this properly should revert to the producer. He is more to blame than the exhibitor. It is not necessary for a producer or an exhibitor to sell a picture to their respective markets by making untrue statements. Every production has advertising angles which can be used to equal advantage, and permit both factions to respect the truth.

Makes No Promises He Can't Fulfill.

The second exhibitor, who spent only $25 in advertising and who did a big business, made no lavish promises to his public. He holds the confidence of his patrons. He never makes promises he cannot fulfill. And if there is any doubt in his mind about the truthfulness of the producer's twelve-cylinder description of a picture he is about to show he wisely refrains from putting his guarantee behind it. Instead, he gives the impression in his advertising that there are certain features of the production that are of interest and which have entertainment value, without misleading the readers into the belief that it is a big special.

Guard Advertising Integrity.

From hundreds of exhibitors come the assertion that their principal source of profit is obtained by the weekly or semi-weekly showing of honestly big special features, for which they can properly and conscientiously charge as increased admission. The remainder of each week, they declare, is given over to the so-called program pictures, solely for the purpose of keeping their theatres open.

Therefore, does it not seem most important for the forward looking exhibitor zealously to guard the integrity of his advertising copy and strictly avoid making any statements of promises which his public can afterward question?

The admission price is an important and essential part of the advertising copy prepared by many exhibitors in this territory, and probably in all other territories. The most successful of the small town exhibitors, particularly, have at least two and sometimes three different admission prices, varying according to the quality and screen value of their attractions. Where the distinction in admissions is honestly and accurately made the advertised box office prices carry a definite meaning to the patrons which speak more earnestly to them, if they have confidence in the judgment of the exhibitor, than could a page of superlatives.

Not infrequently are we told that exhibitors play to the greatest number of people on their highest admission engagements. I direct this statement especially to the attention of producers, distributors and exhibitors who claim that the public will not patronize a big production for which they have to pay an increased price. We have hundreds of examples out of Minneapolis to prove that the public will pay considerably more than an ordinary price if what they see measures up, in their estimation, to the value the exhibitors place upon it at the box office.

Why Big Attractions Can't Be Played.

It would not be any gamble to make a bet to the effect that the reason some exhibitors cannot play a big attraction at increased prices is because they have so often trespassed on the confidence of their patrons to force over a mediocre picture by resorting to higher prices that the local public no longer places any trust either in the implication behind an increased admission or the exhibitor's statements that the attraction is more than ordinary .

The exhibitor who has brought upon himself that condition of public mind has nothing to do, if he wants to remain in business, but to change his policy and tactics and regain local good will by months of patient effort and unceasing censorship of his desires to "put it over big, no matter what it is."

For the exhibitor who has won public confidence, and whose word is accepted with the same unquestioning reliance which he puts in the advice and opinions of the exchange managers in whose judgment and veracity he believes implicitly, there is a big era of prosperity ahead. The future is brimming with optimism and opportunity. He is the field leader who will benefit most from the fast dawning day of independent productions. In the market of confidence which he has built up by common sense work and honesty the worthy efforts of independent stars and producers will be rewarded so fittingly that exhibitor, distributor and producer will be encouraged to greater and greater efforts with each succeeding release.

Honest Advertisers Will Seek the Best.

Any exhibitor who pledges himself to absolute honesty in his advertising will almost unconsciously be on a constant still hunt for the honestly best productions on the market. It will become second nature to him to seek the pictures which he can truthfully advertise as worth higher admissions.

Commercial industries may suffer for a few months during the period of readjustment. The motion picture industry is practically certain to start booming at once, immediately the holiday season is over, and its prosperity will be intensified and it will boom some more when the big commercial development begins.

Therefore it behooves every exhibitor to enlarge and otherwise prepare for the greatest attendance his theatre has ever had. Many new theatres will be built where competition of a serious kind does not now exist. The best way for present day exhibitors to discourage this probable competition of the future is to be certain that they have large, comfortable theatres, and, above all things else, to establish and maintain the integrity of their advertising, win public confidence and hold it despite anything and everything.

CHICAGO COMPANY WILL BOOST SPORTS

To Issue One Reel Each Month and Will Cover Entire Range of Athletics—Selig Man at Helm

ARTICLES of incorporation filed in Springfield, Ill., December 18, for the Athletic Feature Film Corporation revealed the formation of a company in Chicago that will boost sports in every moving picture theatre in the country through the release of an athletic reel every month.

Incidentally all the champions, ex-champions and would-be champions in every branch of sport will be pictured in actual competition for titles, and arrangements made by the new corporation to release through one of the biggest booking concerns in the country will enable millions of sport page readers who have never been able to attend any of the big sporting events, but who have read about them all their lives, to see their favorites in action on the screen.

The men behind the new venture banked upon a great revival in sports at the end of the war, and purchased several hundred thousand feet of film that had already been made of various champions in competition, but which have never been shown in the theatres. One reel is ready for release in January, and another is practically completed for February. The company is at work on others that will follow at intervals of a month.

It is the first time that any moving picture concern has devoted itself exclusively to sport subjects. The pictures include every form of outdoor and indoor athletic activity in which newspaper readers are interested. The champions in baseball, football, golf, tennis, bowling, billiards, pool, swimming, boxing, wrestling, skating, hockey, and every other sport are shown in competition. Boxing, which is of particular interest in Illinois now owing to the agitation in favor of legalizing the sport, comes in for a big boost in these films, which show some spectacular views of boxing bouts in the army and navy, where the sport was encourage as one of the best of all the methods used to harden our boys for their encounter with the Hun.

The first reel released by the new corporation in January will carry a stirring introduction, which will be read by millions in the movie houses all over the country, declaring that athletics was the winning factor in the war. Attention is called to the fact that the defeated Central Empires were nations that had no national sport.

The new corporation intends to keep right up to the minute with its films. A staff of photographers will be at all big sporting events, and the celebrities will be seen not only in America, but all over the world in the company's releases. As a result of the prowess of the American army in the world war the European nations have become interested in American sports, and the company will book all its athletic films abroad as well as in the United States and Canada.

The majority stock in the new corporation will be held by two Chicagoans who have had long experience in the sport game and who will direct the making of all the films. They are John H. Herman, for a number of years connected with the Selig Polyscope Company, and promoter of all the big wrestling matches in Chicago recently, and William Forman, former sporting editor of the Chicago Herald. G. O. Ballin will be treasurer of the new company. The company announces that it has ample studio facilities and financial backing, and will devote all its energies and money to boosting every form of athletics in every moving picture house in the country.

Aronson to be Goldwyn District Head.

Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announces that early in January A. S. Aronson, an able motion picture executive known to many exhibitors in the United States and Canada, resigns as general manager of Regal Films, Ltd., of Canada, and joins the Goldwyn organization.

Mr. Aronson will be the resident executive head of one of Goldwyn's most important divisions, consisting of four offices serving some of the principal exhibitors of the nation. For the last three or four years Mr. Aronson has been associated with N. L. Nathanson in the large distribution and theatre-owning enterprises of the Regal organization, with home offices in Toronto and branches in six cities of the Dominion. Prior to going to Canada Mr. Aronson was associated with the World Film organization in New York.

Establish Interpreters Bureau.

To facilitate the handling of foreign business and especially as a convenience to the foreign buyers who come to New York City, the Robertson-Cole Company has established an interpreters bureau. Henry Arias, who has been acting as interpreter for many years and has been in the motion picture business for some time, is in charge of this department. He is widely traveled, having been in Africa, Greece, Turkey, Italy, Spain and France. He has made a thorough study of all the Latin languages and is master of French, Italian and Spanish. Mr. Arias has six languages at his command.

JERSEY DIVIDES ON SUNDAY OPENING

World Man Comes to That Conclusion After Visiting Several Towns in the Metropolitan District—Large Communities Strongly Favor Running the Usual Show

By Sam Spedon

TO better understand conditions in New Jersey we supplemented our previous visits, as published in the December 21 issue of the World, to a few of the residential sections of a representative city of the first class—Jersey City. Wherever there is manufacturing we will find a general public interest in moving pictures and a natural impulsive desire for entertainment. While on the other hand in rural and residential districts we find there is a systematic allotment of time and money for home amusements. In the smaller centers people are largely creatures of habit and they hold to practice with more or less regularity. In these centers they are discriminating, and the managers of the local theatres have to cater to their patrons' peculiarities and cannot depend upon floating population or thoroughfare trade. One manager told us in changing his winter schedule to one show a day and four on Saturdays, it required a full week to get his people to conform to this change, and yet in six years, in this town, his income had varied but $200, in the year 1916, when it was that much more. This is characteristic of many of the smaller towns in Jersey and quite convincing that business, on the whole, is quite satisfactory.

Sunday Question Up in Jersey.

Knowing that there is more or less discussion among the exhibitors of New Jersey as to legislation for Sunday opening, we studied conditions for and against it. Judging from what we saw, it would be impossible to secure Sunday opening in local and residential districts, because the people do not want it on account of their religious tendencies and their set habits. The managers would not suggest it. In cities of first and second class, where there is more or less manufacturing with foreign population, it is different. They want it and need it. We are heartily in favor of local option because no community would be obliged to have it if they chose not to. In the cities of Hudson County Sunday opening is permissible, in Hoboken and Newark, the only New Jersey municipalities permitting Sunday showing.

A tour to Elizabeth brought us into Broad street, the thoroughfare whereon is located the U. S. Garden Theatre of 800 capacity, under the management of Al Fein, who is also the pianist, playing in conjunction with a violinist, making up a very harmonious duo. The building has a straight runway arrangement with seats on either side. It is well kept and systematically managed. As Mr. Fein was busy at the piano during the afternoon show we did not attempt an interview for fear of interruption.

Madden Makes Good Lobby Display.

On the same street we ventured into the Broad Street Theatre, of 1,200 seats, including orchestra and balcony. William Madden, the manager, was not in at the time, but through the courtesy of his assistant and one of the attendants we were given a comprehensive inspection. We must compliment Mr. Madden on his lobby display, giving the effect of an arbor with suspended lanterns, showing the names of the different pictures on exhibition. The music comprises a three-piece orchestra. The theatre is one of the Proctor circuit, which includes the Proctor vaudeville and picture theatre, on East Jersey street near Broad, of 3,000 capacity.

William Fox's Liberty Theatre, on Elizabeth Avenue, is the largest picture house in the city. It was originally the old Hippodrome remodeled into an elegant and modern playhouse of 1,800 seats. It has an orchestra and balcony with a beautiful Italian garden stage setting, which takes in the orchestra space, accommodating an eight-piece orchestra. John P. Duffy, the manager, is an enterprising and progressive showman, who opened the theatre on Labor Day of this year. He is a member of the local City Council and thoroughly understands the clientele to whom he caters.

Richard Walker has charge of electrical and lighting effects, which he handles with rare judgment and skill. Caesar Haslim is the operator of the two Simplex machines, equipped with every modern device, thereby insuring a precision of projection most pleasing and satisfactory. The Liberty is a picture house that any city could be proud of and certainly deserves the patronage of the citizens of Elizabeth.

Alye Evens Up at End of Week.

At Rutherford, thirteen miles from New York, we visited the Criterion, a house of 600 seats. Garry Alye, the manager, is a busy man who gives this comfortable little playhouse his most careful attention. We witnessed the afternoon performance, which was not very largely attended, but as he said, "Two performances a day and take the good with the bad. What we lose on one we make up on the other." It seemed a problem as to how he does it, with a pianist, cashier, operator, picture rentals, "juice" and heat, not to mention his own services and the landlord.

In the same town there is the Lyric, a 300-seat house which only runs in the evening. Being closed at the time, we were unable to give it the attention we had intended.

Montclair Has a Regular Theatre.

Just to get a wider scope of vision, we went to Montclair to take in the afternoon performance at the Montclair Theatre, with a seating capacity of 1,300. There must have been eight or nine hundred in attendance. H. H. Wellenbrink from Los Angeles, the lessee and manager, who took over this theatre five years ago, has shown great tact and aptitude in its management. He has one of the handsomest houses in the State and a credit to any community.

It is in every respect an up-to-date place of amusement, with a beautiful orchestra and balcony affording an unobstructed view of the screen. Mr. Wellenbrink has recently installed a thirty thousand dollar organ, at one time in the Vitagraph Theatre at Forty-fourth street and Broadway, New York, presided over by Frank R. White, well known in New York, Butte and Los Angeles. With this wonderful adjunct to the pictures and the marvelous playing of Mr. White Montclair has a theatre which is deserving of the liberal patronage accorded it. This is the only theatre in Montclair, and it does seem that it fills the demands of the discriminating citizens of an exclusive suburban town.

The Liberty Theatre in Jersey City, 47 and 49 Newark avenue, a few blocks from the Pennsylvania ferry, attracted our attention and we spent an hour at the afternoon performance. At this particular district there is not very much of a community. It reminded us of the drop-in locations on the rough edges in the old days. It seems that a house of the size and character of the Liberty is deserving a better location. It has a balcony and orchestra containing 800 seats. E. A. Cadugan is the manager.

A little further beyond the Liberty is the Keith's vaudeville and picture house, and right next door is the Bijou Dream picture house, 300 seats, which acts as sort of overflow for Keith's. Both the Bijou and Keith's are under the management of Harry M. Miller. Between the Bijou and the Liberty there is a theatre at 54 Newark avenue, which is now closed.

Located in the residential district of Jersey City at Monticello and Communipaw avenue, in the Hill district, we visited the Monticello, 900 seats, in orchestra and balcony. The manager, Harry De G. Robertson, is a man of considerable personality and runs his theatre in good form and has established a strong patronage. Although we happened in during the afternoon there was a comfortable attendance of fine character. The Monticello is not of the most modern architecture and construction, but it has a good organ, projection and courteous attendants.

Wide Range in Clientele.

Jersey City has a varied population, more particularly noticeable in the Hill section. It is a ramification of fine residences, tenement sections and small store neighborhoods running into each other. To run a theatre like the Monticello, which caters to the old residents as well as attract the better class of the tenement dwellers, requires the best kind of management. Mr. Robertson is evidently the right man in the right place.

At Fairview and Bergen avenues we happened into the Strand, a modern and well equipped fireproof house of 600 seats. It was built by Benjamin Berkowitz in 1915. A year ago Mr. Berkowitz joined the aero-photo division of the army and was located at Mineola, L. I. At that time he leased his place to Anthony Brown, the present manager. This theatre is centrally located and attracts an excellent clientele and steady attendance.

The Orpheum, about 1,800 seats, James Brennan lessee and manager, is situated at Five Corners of the Hill section. It sustains a full orchestra and every modern equipment of an up-to-date theatre. Judging from the large attendance at the afternoon performance we are convinced that it is well patronized and established in a populous center.

Nazimova to Work for Screen Throughout 1919

MME. NAZIMOVA announces that she will devote all of her time during the coming year to screen work. Six productions in all will be made. Arrangements for the series have just been completed. The pictures will be photographed in California.

In variety of theme, wealth of costume, direction, setting and lighting, the new Nazimova productions will excel even her pictures of the last twelve months, according to Richard A. Rowland. Contemporary literature has been finely combined to provide her with new vehicles, which will be widely different in locale, story and treatment.

The first of these, "The Red Lantern," from the novel of Edith Wherry, published by the Bodley Head, affords the volatile Nazimova with a role of great emotional display. The settings are mainly Chinese, colorful and magnificent in the extreme.

Simultaneously with the beginning of Mme. Nazimova's newest picture, the cutting and assembling of her last production, "'Ception Shoals," has just been completed, and at a recent private showing has been pronounced even greater than the stage version of this unusual story, which Mme. Nazimova played on Broadway over a year.

In "Eye for Eye" she wears the colorful garb of the Orient. In "Revelation" she wore the costumes of a Paris grisette and the modern apparel of a fashionable woman, as well as boy's clothes. In "Toys of Fate" she was a gypsy. But in "'Ception Shoals" her dresses are of quaint simplicity—plain little home made frocks with home made cotton lace at neck and sleeves. The scenes were taken in and around the quaint town of Gloucester, Mass., because it is in that community that the most interesting bits of coastline are found, the sea and a lighthouse being features of the picture around which much of the story revolves.

Division of Films Aiding Exhibitors with Publicity

THE unique service of publicity on "America's Answer" rendered exhibitors by the community section of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, has not only resulted in largely attended showings of that picture, but is having a marked effect on the success of the new picture, "Under Four Flags."

The simultaneous showing of the picture by the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, which resulted in a return engagement, is one of the events of motion picture history. So successful was the picture when it opened the new Metropolitan in Washington that it was immediately booked for a second showing. "Under Four Flags" was exhibited by the Plaza Theatre in New York. This is a large house with a clientele of the first order. The management, however, was not content to depend on its usual attendance, but called upon the Division of Films to give the picture intensive publicity in the neighborhood. This was done through personal letters and personal visits to the principals of schools and the clergy of churches in the vicinity. The result was an attendance so large that the picture was booked for a second run in the same week.

Even more is done for exhibitors in small towns, where it is possible to reach organizations and influential individuals. To these, personally addressed letters are sent a week or so in advance of the showing of the picture.

Max Pollak of the Pleasureland and the Van Buren Theatres in Brooklyn accommodated all of the children in a nearby school by running four shows a day in each house. William Brandt, owner of the New Albany and Carlton Theatres in Brooklyn, entertained 2,500 children in two days.

MacIntyre Makes Record of Actors.

Robert B. MacIntyre, casting director for World Pictures, has completed one of the most unique records of the career of motion picture actors. The purpose of this record is to furnish him at a moment's notice the names and capabilities of the actors that he thinks are the proper types for such productions as he is called upon to cast.

This record embraces the names, addresses, telephone numbers and the line of parts they have shown themselves best fitted for; further, what productions and under what management they have made their biggest success; a description of the range of their roles and kind of make-up they know best how to handle; how they photograph on exteriors as compared with their camera receptiveness in the studio; the salaries they demand and such other matters of information as to afford the casting director information that only can be secured by personal interview.

The gathering of this information and photographs has taken many months and will be invaluable to World Pictures.

Samuels to Travel for General.

Frank E. Samuels, a well known motion picture man of New York City, who was formerly General Film Company manager in Philadelphia, has been appointed a traveling auditor for that company. His work for the present will be on the Pacific Coast.

STAR SYSTEM FOLLY, SAYS ROWLAND

Metro President Declares His Company Will Make Fewer but Bigger Subjects and Will Not Bid for Million-Dollar Stars—Game Now Not Worth Candle

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, and president of Screen Classics, Inc., in the first interview from him which has been given out in many months, wades into the present condition of the business and says some striking things.

Mr. Rowland characterizes the present star system as folly, and in announcing the policy of his companies sets forth that fewer productions, but bigger ones, with stress being laid upon the attraction value, will be the policy pursued during the coming season. He says that in almost all instances, with the exception of Nazimova, it has been demonstrated to him that the production has made the star rather than the star the production, and that it is now time for the manufacturers of pictures to run their own business in their own way, so that the business can be conducted at a profit. Mr. Rowland said:

"In our opinion the time has come when motion pictures must cease to be a game and become a business. Regardless of what others may do we have determined, after careful thought and a full analysis of the situation, upon a definite program of activity. This, briefly, embraces a policy of fewer productions, with bigger and better ones based on the play value and an excellence of production, a running of our own business at our own dictation, stepping out of any competitive bidding for billion dollar stars, and devoting ourselves solely to the making of as many great, big pictures as our production units are capable of turning out, and no more.

Productions Make the Star.

"We know what is going on in the field, we know that no money is being made out of the so-called programs, and very little out of the star attractions. We know that usually three or four productions make a star, rather than a star making the productions. One great exception to this is Nazimova, and it would not be fair to make so sweeping a statement without noting this exception.

"We know that the picture is the thing and can be made to continue to be the thing because we have the producing organization to accomplish it. Meritorious productions must be the ultimate basis of competition, and with this as the basis, the question of overproduction will soon settle itself. The theatres are ready for big pictures, and we purpose big changes along these lines for our next season.

"The only chance a film company has for running its own business is to get away from the star millstone around the neck, because under the present conditions the so-called business organization can only be held to be as strong as the stars make it. In order to right this condition it is necessary to turn the method of operation upside down, so that the companies shall be permitted to spend their own money in their own way to provide productions for the public that will not ultimately kill the industry.

Propose to Heed Warning.

"Countless numbers of pictures are being produced today which are driving people away from the theatres, and the entire industry is suffering from it, suffering to so great an extent that these pictures constitute the handwriting on the wall, and whether other producers and distributors in the industry heed this warning or not we purpose to do it.

"Our productions will be made with reference to the play, the cast, the scenarios, the directors, the title men and the studio equipment. It is toward this end that we have been working, and recent events have crystalized our determination into doing what may be regarded as radical steps.

Game Now Not Worth Candle.

"It doesn't take any great foresight to know that there will be a tremendous decrease in the number of productions next year, and we are content to stand on the firm basis of fine productions and without any attempt to grind out footage. We propose making the finest pictures it is possible for us to make, whether in the season we produce twenty or forty productions.

"As conducted today, the game is not worth the candle, and we believe the ultimate reward will be given to those who can produce big, fine pictures, and if on any other basis of operation the industry might as well quit now before the public forces it out of business because of hopeless boredom.

"Our aim is for productions that will draw patrons to the box office and satisfy them, whether these productions contain a big star or not. Our money will be spent for brains and production rather than for the so-called stars, which have placed the industry in its present ridiculous position.

"When the contracting lawyer comes with the star to your office he laughs, and in effect he says, 'You are a lot of fools to pay such prices, but we can get the money.' The author or author's representative laughs and says, 'I know that this picture or this play is not worth the price, but the industry is made up of fools and I can get the price.'

Make Business a Laughing Stock.

"Conditions like these have made the motion picture business a laughing stock, and it was brought very sharply to my attention at a recent meeting of producers, when the consensus of opinion was that competitive bidding for exorbitantly paid stars should be permitted to continue.

"If these men are agreed that they should compete to raise the prices of all that goes to make up their product to such a height that no one can make a profit, they cease to be business men, and whether their companies agree to follow a radically different policy or not we have determined to sail a straight course, giving due attention and attention only to the box office value of the production, with proper thought as to the real value of the star, and the spending of sufficient money to put on the attraction in a big way.

The Production Is the Thing.

"We have seen interviewers lately and have not issued any statements concerning them. In fact, I do not believe that there has been issued from our organization a statement or interview concerning the policy of our business for many months. During this time we have carefully weighed the elements of the situation, seeking a sane solution which would reduce the so-called motion picture game into a motion picture business.

"In saying this we do not exclude art, any more than art is included in the slathers of productions which are sickening the public and driving them against the screen.

"It has been said before, and it is truer now than ever, the play is the thing, and with the screen we can add that the production is the thing. We have proved it, we believe in it, and this in a word is Metro's policy."

Kansas City Exchangemen Seek to Aid Local Press

KANSAS CITY exchangemen and exhibitors are trying to give constructive help to local newspapers in the preparation of their moving picture pages. The present prospects are bright for some real cinema journalism —much to the delight of the industry.

Kansas City has probably been no worse off than many other cities in regard to such pages. One or two of the newspapers have run more or less moving picture material, ever since the advertising by exhibitors and producers has developed as a source of revenue. The Post has run a page with fair consistency. The Star has at various times had a column or so a week, sometimes running a column twice a week. Recently the Kansas City Journal employed Miss Lorena Wade, formerly of Los Angeles, for many years in close touch with the producing end, and a real newspaper woman as well as a real moving picture publicity woman. She has started her page, and is becoming acquainted with the local people in the business. The Star is about to resume its special department.

And the moving picture representatives are paying much more attention to the subject of what they consider the right kind of moving picture material for a newspaper to publish.

Zukor Off on Annual Trip.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, left New York, December 18, for California. This is Mr. Zukor's annual mid-winter business trip to the West Coast. He will spend three or four weeks there. Mr. Zukor will stop over at Chicago for a few days and will spend Christmas there with relatives.

FIGURES SHOW DROP IN FILM EXPORTS

Business for 1918 Considerably Smaller Than for 1916-1917—Australia's Purchases Bigger

EVERY effort is now to be made, following the conclusion of the war abroad and the return of more normal conditions in the United States, to increase our export business in motion picture films. The industry has been handicapped because of the embargoes placed on films and the inability to secure shipping facilities. A liberal export policy is in prospect, backed by the Government. Legislation will be so framed as to protect the trade that we will now seek.

With this big export program looming up in the offing, figures just made public by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, covering the month of October, and the ten months ending October, and showing a comparison for the same month and period of the two preceding years, is of interest to all in the industry. October was the last full month of the war. The armistice was signed on November 11, and from that date on must we figure our peace program.

The comparison of this year's figures with those of 1916 and 1917 cannot mean much. They show, and it was expected that they would, a great drop in our film business. They are of interest, however, and they will urge our manufacturers on to the end that we will within a few months exceed the volume of business of pre-war years and raise the industry to a place among our industries higher even than fifth place which it now holds.

In the following comparison of our exports wherever the term "period" appears it is to be taken to mean the first ten months of the year mentioned.

United Kingdom Importations.

During the 1916 period the United Kingdom imported from the United States positive films totalling 76,968,230 feet of a reported value of $3,406,230. The demand dropped during the 1917 period to less than one-third of this amount, the figures showing the footage to be 23,941,312 feet, and the value $1,883,061. Even these low figures were doomed for a cut and during the first ten months of the present year, the British purchases in the United States amounted to only 13,507,184 feet, valued at $883,699. The October exports to the United Kingdom were, 1917, 481,886 feet, valued at $58,434, and, 1918, 374,156 feet, valued at $29,579.

Our next largest customer is Canada, to whom we sold during the 1916 period 10,435,519 feet, valued at $783,807; during the 1917 period, 12,667,900 feet, estimated to be worth $961,271; and during the first ten months of the present year, 10,786,016 feet, valued at $784,785.

Australia's Purchases Bigger.

Australia's purchases in this country show tremendous increases and apparently that country has been looking to the United States for her films throughout the period of the war. Our exports to Australia jumped from 6,207,156 feet, valued at $467,724, during the 1916 period, to 7,620,224 feet, valued at $522,748, during the 1917 period, and to 9,059,538 feet, valued at $479,699, during the first ten months of the present year.

Despite our good showing in these English possessions, the exports for the month of October this year are greatly behind those for the same month of 1917, as may be seen from the following: In October, 1917, we sent to Australia 717,759 feet, valued at $60,347; this year, in October, we sent but 71,169 feet, valued at $3,562. To Canada the exports were, in October, 1917, 1,597,506 feet, valued at $123,430, and, in October, 1918, 880,462 feet, valued at $65,767.

Exports to Other Countries.

Decrease in Films Purchased Abroad.

Our purchases abroad of motion picture films, according to figures just issued by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, have fallen off in volume in about the same proportion as have Europe's purchases in this country. purchases are outlined in Table No. 2.

Felix Feist.

Felix Feist Is Elected Goldwyn Vice-President

AT a meeting of the directors of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation Felix F. Feist of the World Film Corporation, one of the well known younger executives in the industry, has been elected a vice president of the Goldwyn releasing organization and in a few weeks will join the Goldwyn family. Mr. Feist is the type of successful men that Goldwyn has ta en into its organization since the beginning of the company.

Few men have had a sounder training than Mr. Feist, whose entry into the picture industry was made in 1910 as advertising manager of the Kinemacolor Company. A few months later he was made western manager of Kinemacolor with offices in Chicago. He resigned from that organization to become general manager of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, of Chicago, and in a few months was made president of the company. He remained with this company two and a half years, coming to New York to become secretary and general manager of the Equitable Pictures Corporation. Here he remained until the Equitable was merged with the World.

Greetings from Bill Hart and from the Pinto, Too

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.

May Christmas bring as much happiness to you as I enjoy in our friendship, and may the New Year bring to you golden prosperity in all things. Please accept my sincere wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. This goes for the Pinto pony, too.

WILLIAM S. HART.

McKim a Goldwynite.

Robert McKim, identified with Thomas H. Ince pictures for five years, makes his first appearance outside of them in Rex Beach's new production, "The Brand," now under way at the Goldwyn Studios in Los Angeles.

EXHIBITORS CONTEST CLOSING ORDER

Roanoke Theatremen to Test Validity of Decree Which Again Shuts Their Houses—Majority of Theatres Closed in Northwest—Municipalities Ban Children

THE outstanding features of the week's reports from the correspondents of the Moving Picture World regarding the recurrence of the Spanish influenza are that the exhibitors of Roanoke, Va., are going to test the validity of the order which closed their houses again upon the second visitation of the scourge; that Seattle exchangemen have estimated that over 65 per cent. of the theatres in the Northwest territory have been placed under the ban again; that San Francisco and the East-Bay suburbs again are considering the proposition of re-enacting the gauze mask ordinance owing to the fact that new cases have developed among newcomers from other sections of the state; that in Johnstown, Pa., Louisville, Omaha, and Spokane, the seating capacity of theatres has been regulated by the authorities in their effort to prevent the further spread of the epidemic, and that in Cincinnati, Norwood and Dayton, Ohio, and in Minneapolis and Kansas City a ban has been placed against the attendance of children at theatres.

It is not likely that Michigan, where the influenza has been on the increase for the past two weeks, will see another general closing order issued, for Dr. R. M. Olin of the State Board of Health is strongly opposed to a state-wide closing. That action is left to the judgment of the local authorities.

Iowa, generally, reports conditions are improving, and the same account holds good with the situation in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Alternate Row Capacity for Omaha Theatres

OMAHA, NEB., like other cities, has suffered much from the influenza epidemic. Closed for three weeks prior to November 11, the motion picture theatres since that time have never done a full season business. At present they are handicapped by an order from Health Commissioner Manning of Omaha, permitting them to seat patrons in only every alternate row—or half the capacity of the house.

On a recent Sunday Manager Wilfried Ledou of the Empress Theatre turned away hundreds of patrons, while half of his house remained empty. Exhibitors are hesitating to pay big money for the large, new attractions, because with only half their seating capacity to sell, they face a loss even with "capacity" business. Their advertising has been restricted, too, as it is futile to bring out a big crowd.

In the meanwhile the health commissioner has placed a ban on public dances, has closed the pool halls, has ordered the street car company to fill their cars only to seating capacity, has prohibited all unnecessary gatherings, and these constant occurrences, given big publicity in the newspapers, have made people so fearful they are afraid to attend the theatres.

Aside from the foregoing handicaps, the exhibitors say they are in constant expectation of a closing order. Since the Chicago meeting of health officers, and a similar meeting in Lincoln, Neb., where closing everything in an attempt to stop the pandemic was classed as a joke, their fear in this direction is lessened. The exhibitors have remonstrated with the local health commissioner, and have appealed for aid from all sources, but in vain. No improvement in conditions is in sight for this winter unless the number of cases decreases materially.

Situation in the Southwest Shows Slight Improvement

THE influenza situation through Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas seemed to be improving slightly during the second week in December although many small towns have closed their theatres on account of the prevalence of the disease. Dallas is open and will not be closed according to City Health Officer Dr. A. W. Carnes, who has returned from the influenza conference at Chicago with the opinion that closing theatres and churches in an effort to check the spread of influenza is useless.

Dr. Carnes within the next few days will recommend to the theatre proprietors in Dallas that they close their shows early each night as long as influenza is rife in the city so that people may get home earlier and have their full portion of sleep. He suggests that no tickets to theatres be sold after the hour of 9 o'clock. This suggestion, local theatre managers say, they are perfectly willing to adopt should city authorities require it.

San Antonio Still Closed.

San Antonio still remains the only large city in the Southwest to keep its theatres closed. As long as Dallas keeps open it is not thought that other Texas cities will establish quarantine.

In Oklahoma City the city health authorities have passed an ordinance providing that only half the seating capacity of any theatre can be used. Only sufficient people to take up every other seat in the theatres there are admitted.

For the first time since the outbreak of the influenza epidemic attendance has decidedly fallen off at not only Dallas theatres but also in other large Texas cities. This is unusual, since the downtown shopping crowds at this period of the year usually fill theatres to overflowing.

Michigan Health Authority Opposes State Wide Closing

AS a result of a Chicago conference of health authorities from all over the United States attended by Dr. R. M. Olin, of the Michigan State Board of Health, and Dr. J. W. Inches, of the Detroit Board of Health, it is unlikely that there will be another general closing order in the Wolverine State. The fact remains that for the past two weeks the influenza has been on the increase in every section of the state and in many of the larger places, but closing is still up to local authorities and is likely to continue so.

Dr. Inches at the Chicago conference emphatically opposed any state-wide closing. He argued that first of all, people in the larger cities are accustomed to crowds—more so than in the small towns, as is best proven by the fact that most of the epidemics occur in the smaller communities—seldom in a large metropolitan city. He also had figures to prove positively that in the big cities influenza was on the increase during the closing period.

Michigan exhibitors will not let up one bit in their efforts to wipe out the scourge and to co-operate in every way with the state and local boards of health. The educational campaign they are conducting is getting results and it is putting people on guard. Furthermore, it is keeping away from the theatres people who have colds.

There are still numerous towns in the state that are closed, and some of them will not open before the first of the year.

Kansas City Gets Aid of Federal Health Officer

AN army officer came to Kansas City December 11 to assist in combating the epidemic of influenza. Lieutenant Wilkes, Uncle Sam's representative, has had much experience in Washington, D. C., and St. Louis, Mo., in such epidemics—a fact amply demonstrated in his first talks to Kansas City business men. Dr. Wilkes took the position that the prime necessity was the awakening of the public to the duty of each individual to take the best care of himself, and to avoid giving the influenza to anybody else.

The bans on business operations, he intimated, were a last resort, which would not be necessary if the public observed ordinary and morally obligatory precautions. He did not believe that any ban on stores would be required in Kansas City, but intimated that perhaps a few restrictions should be imposed to guard against the most imminent dangers and to assist in educating the public. The restrictions he recommended, and which were adopted, were the prohibition of attendance at any gatherings of children under 16 years, and avoidance of crowding.

The rule against children automatically cut off a large percentage of patronage; but reduced custom further, by its implication that adults also should stay away.

Provides Means of Co-operation.

The Kansas City Amusement Association was organized just in time to provide the means of co-operation with the federal health officer assigned to Kansas City. Dr. Wilkes sought immediately upon his arrival points of contact with various industries; and found it, for the moving picture and theatrical industry in this association. A conference was held in which Dr. Wilkes made it plain that he appreciated the serious condition caused among employes of amusement enterprises by the long idleness, and he felt that only as a last resort should any drastic action be taken to further curtail their earnings now.

J. E. Storey, president of the association, at the request of Dr. Wilkes, appointed a special committee to co-operate with the doctor and the health board in the study of means for combating the epidemic, and particularly for the solving of any questions of restrictions in which amusement interests might be involved. This committee got on the job immediately, and was the means of developing such co-operation as prevented the imposition of restrictions especially prejudicial to any one branch.

Will Test Validity of Closing Order.

Theatre managers of Roanoke, Va., will test the validity of the order which again closed their houses early in December when a recurrence of the influenza epidemic there assumed alarming proportions. The contention of the managers will be that the order closing theatres, while other places of business in the city where more or less of a crowd is wont to congregate is left open to do business as usual, discriminates unjustly against them. They contend that there is no statute which names the minimum or maximum number of people allowed to congregate and that on frequent occasions there are in any large department store more people than the average audience at the picture theatres.

Hence, when the closing order became effective several of the theatres remained open in defiance of the official edict from the health board, and will probably be brought to court to answer to the charge. The best legal talent in the town has been secured by the allied theatre men to fight their case. The theatre men say they will, if necessary, carry the matter to the highest courts.

Estimate 65% of Theatres are Closed.

It is estimated by Seattle exchanges that 65 per cent. of the theatres in the Northwest territory are again closed on account of the influenza epidemic. The coast cities, Seattle, Portland, and Tacoma, are still open and probably will not be closed. Authorities in Seattle, where the epidemic has reached figures as high both in number of new cases and in the health rate as it reached at the peak of its first visitation, are quarantining cases but are allowing all business to proceed as usual. Spokane exhibitors have been ordered to operate on half capacity, allowing people to sit only in alternate seats.

Many of the smaller towns of Washington are closed; all of southern Oregon is closed, as is also practically all of Montana and most of Idaho, including the largest towns and cities in the two latter states.

Cincinnati Bans Children.

Cincinnati exhibitors have lately been kept in a highly confused state as a result of rapidly changing suggestions and orders regarding their conduct, coming from the Board of Health, the Department of Public Safety, and other authorities. The latest order of a restrictive sort directed them to close their doors to the public each day from 4:30 to 6, and to air their houses thoroughly during that interval. As this cut into the afternoon decidedly, practically ruining business for that profitable part of the day, vigorous protests were registered by the exhibitors; and as retailers were required to close at 4:30 daily, they also registered complaints at the ruling, with the result that a few days later all closing orders were revoked. Improvement in conditions, as far as the influenza is concerned, also had a share in bringing about a change in the orders. The only restriction laid upon the public on account of the epidemic, at this writing, is that which prevents children under 16 from entering theatres, street cars and other places where there are crowds, and it seems that this will prevail until after the holidays.

Norwood Opens with Ban on Children.

In Norwood, O., the city within Cincinnati yet not of it, restrictions were removed from theatres before they were in Cincinnati proper, although while they lasted they were much more severe, as the theatres were forced to close entirely. When they were permitted to reopen it was with the reservation that children under 16 were not to be admitted, and this was strictly adhered to, on account of the prevalence of influenza among children on the second outbreak of the disease.

Authorities Regulate Seating Capacity.

The influenza epidemic has again broken out in Louisville and is causing much trouble and fresh regulations. The second attack is more noticeable with children, and following a recent meeting of the health authorities all schools were closed, and children under fourteen years of age barred from all public places. The theatres were regulated to seat capacity only.

In many sections of the state theatres have been down for two months or more, and can't get a clean bill of health upon which to proceed. At a number of the fairly large towns of the state, epidemics have broken out afresh when the theatres were just about to reopen, and in several instances the houses have been closed again after short runs.

Limits Seating Capacity in Johnstown.

The city and health officials of Johnstown, Pa., have imposed restrictions on the theatres of that town in an attempt to prevent the spread of influenza. They have issued orders that provide for admission of patrons to the extent of 75 per cent. of the seating capacity only, which means that a house with 500 seats is allowed only 375 persons at one time. Children under 14 years of age are also not allowed to attend moving picture shows.

May Restore Gauze Mask Ruling.

The influenza situation in northern and central California, the territory served by San Francisco film exchanges, is not improving as rapidly as was expected and many houses are still closed. A flare-up of the epidemic is being experienced at many places and some theatres that were reopened have been closed again. Many complaints are being registered in regard to the volume of business being done, and this applies to San Francisco, as well as to the smaller communities. The heavy rains and the holiday season are blamed for a part of the poor showing, but most of it is laid at the door of the influenza scare.

San Francisco and the east-bay suburbs had the disease stamped out at the time that theatres were reopened four weeks ago and exhibitors did a fairly good business for a time. New cases have developed of late, however, among newcomers from other parts of the state and the health authorities are considering the proposition of re-enacting the gauze mask ordinance. Some communities have discussed the proposition of placing a quarantine against travelers from Southern California, but this plan has been abandoned. The closing of theatres is not contemplated and business men are opposing the general use of masks, suggesting that new cases of the disease be quarantined as they develop. Mayor Frederick T. Woodman, of Los Angeles, recently sent Dr. H. F. True, health physician in charge of schools there, to San Francisco to make a secret investigation of the method by which the local authorities stamped out the disease.

Children Barred from Theatres.

Because of the flare-up in Minneapolis in the influenza epidemic, which for a time had abated, Dr. H. M. Guilford, city health commissioner, served notice on moving picture theatre managers requesting them to exclude from their audiences all children under 16 years of age as a preventive measure against the further spread of the disease.

Want Alternate Row Order Removed.

Influenza quarantine restrictions providing that only every other row of seats in the theatres and moving picture shows be used by patrons, which rules were laid down by Dr. J. B. Anderson, city health officer, have caused a clamor among the theatre men. They have resulted in petitions being circulated and signed by several thousand persons requesting the city commissioners to remove the ban and quarantine the influenza patients in their homes or in hospitals instead.

Letters were received by Dr. Anderson from C. E. Stilwell, proprietor of four theatres, and from Clemmer & Lembach, proprietors of the Clemmer, telling of the dire distress of the theatrical men and announcing their intention to close unless relief is given. In both cases Dr. Anderson made reply that there will be no modification of the influenza regulations until after the first of the year. Dr. Anderson, in taking this position, insists that he interprets the views of the city commissioners as members of the city board of health.

Conditions Improving in Iowa.

After a strenuous week during which most of the motion picture theatres of Des Moines obeyed the city's ruling that only half capacity should be used, roping off the alternate rows of seats, the influenza has abated and within a few days conditions will be normal again as regards the picture houses. W. O'Hare and E. Metzger, house managers of the Majestic and Rialto, were arrested for crowding their houses in defiance of the health department's request. They pleaded not guilty in municipal court and their cases have been continued to January 6.

Counsel for these managers held that inasmuch as the city had not made the new seating arrangement an ordinance his clients were within their rights in seating as many patrons as they saw fit.

Condtions are improving throughout Iowa. Davenport is the only large city closed and the epidemic is abating there.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Kansas Exhibitors Get Refund on Light Bill

KANSAS CITY, Kan., which owns its light plant, rebated to moving picture exhibitors the minimum light bill for the month of October, during which the theatres were closed.

The action of the light commissioner of Kansas City, Kan., was the result of several conferences between the commissioner and moving picture exhibitors. The exhibitors have an association which transacts such business as this through special committees. A committee of three called on the commissioner, and explained that the theatres had not used any current during October; and their closing was the result of city orders, and their own desire to co-operate as officials thought they ought to co-operate for the protection of the public in the influenza epidemic. It was represented that the city should not be making money out of such a situation, as it would if the managers paid bills for current not supplied, or required.

The managers interviewed the commissioner again on the subject but without direct promise of relief. With the December bills, however, came letters notifying exhibitors that a refund of their minimum bills for October would be paid them on their calling at the city hall. They had paid for October current in the usual procedure, bills being rendered for two months' service.

The minimum charge in Kansas City, Kan., for places like moving picture theatres is $30 for two months or $15 a month. Representative theatres use about $15 a month of current, with abundance of light and power. The refund, therefore, represented an amount equal to what their normal outlay would have been, but which would have been a dead loss, since they had no use for current while closed.

Would Organize Kansas City on Up and Down Town Basis

THE distinct interests of downtown and of suburban houses require separate divisions in any exhibitors' organization, or separate organizations. This is the conclusion of several Kansas City exhibitors; and steps in this direction are being taken.

"The downtown and the suburban houses have frequently got into controversies in Kansas City," said a suburban exhibitor. "During the past year or so the two interests have got into the habit of conferring once in awhile in a friendly way. They have worked together on problems where their interests were mutual; and have taken advantage of these occasions to discuss informally the problem where their interests clashed. The result is that the downtown men have suggested that we get together by ourselves, and decide just what our position should be on any question involving a conflict with the downtown houses; then joint committees can meet to work out a solution.

"The suburban houses in Kansas City have the same concern for the general benefits to the moving picture industry that the downtown houses have; but in nearly every one of the questions that arise there is the opportunity for the stronger downtown houses to take an advantage if they wish to. It's only natural that they should—but it's not to the best good of the industry that the suburban houses should be always expecting the downtown exhibitors to try to 'put one over on them,' and to be figuring some way that the outside exhibitors can get back at their larger brethren. We can work these things out satisfactorily—all anybody wants is a fair deal—and we are going to get at the situation in a co-operative spirit."

Ontario Exhibitors Hope For Relief from Reel Tax

SEVENTY members attended the December general meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, which was held in the association's club quarters at 143 Yonge street. Ten out-of-town members were in attendance, the cities represented being Hamilton, Brampton, Port Hope, Lindsay, Collingwood, Schreiber, Niagara Falls, Peterboro.

A report urging that children be permitted to attend Saturday matinees unattended by adults was presented by a special committee which had been appointed to take up this matter with the provincial authorities. Some progress in the matter was noted.

Letters from Mayor Church and Alderman F. W. Johnson regarding the proposal of the City of Toronto to impose a municipal tax on theatre admission tickets were read. These two members of the City Council do not favor the proposed tax.

Thomas Scott, secretary of the Exhibitors' Association, announced that he had interviewed Federal Government officials at Ottawa with a view to the cancellation of the special tax of fifteen cents a reel a day. Scott declared that there was a strong possibility that the Government would grant some relief, at least.

A copy of the letter which had been sent to the City of Toronto regarding the heavy taxes which local exhibitors must pay was read by President J. C. Brady. This letter had been sent to the city to offset the move to impose the local admission tax.

North Carolinians to Fight Censorship, Says Wells

THE people of North Carolina do not want legalized censorship of motion picture films" declared President Percy W. Wells, of the North Carolina Exhibitors' Association, in an interview with the World Moving Picture correspondent at Wilmington.

"Furthermore," continued Mr. Wells, "I believe they will quickly repudiate any effort on the part of their representatives in the legislature to saddle this obnoxious legislation upon the state without first giving them an opportunity to exercise their right of expressing an opinion through the ballot box. The state which first signed a declaration of independence, and above all the city that staged a tea party before the historically famous Boston affair, will again rise in wrath at any attempt to appoint a half dozen or so men to pass upon and specify just what they shall or shall not see in the motion picture theatres of the state.

"Norh Carolina, the cradle of liberty and independence, will resent to the last man, woman and child the attempts of the self-constituted guardians of their morals to exercise a privilege that is purely personal and guaranteed by the constitution of the United States to every citizen."

Mr. Wells stated that he really felt no fear of the final outcome, but that the state organization was preparing to wage a fight to the finish for the freedom of the screen in North Carolina.

Calls Meeting to Combat Censorship.

Secretary Henry B. Varner, of North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, has called a special meeting of the league to convene at the Selwyn Hotel, Charlotte, on December 26 for the purpose of formulating plans for the campaign to combat efforts of the ministers of the state to have an obnoxious censorship law saddled upon the theatres of the state. Secretary Varner has already prepared a lengthy and able interview on the general subject of censorship, which is being distributed to all newspapers within the state for immediate publication.

Exhibitors Complain of Evils of Issuing Passes

I DON'T mind giving out a few—a hundred—passes; but I hate to have city officials, business men, friends, who should earn my respect, trying to mooch the few cents that the admission costs."

This seems to be the sentiment of most exhibitors, in one large Western city within a day's travel of Kansas City, where the "pass evil" is said to be worse than in any city of its territory.

An old-timer in the city in question recently opened a moving picture show. He knew the town. Consequently, he sent season passes broadcast—and from the hundred or more invitations he sent out, he got back only one declination. One member of a public board sent back the pass, with the indignant comment that he hadn't accepted the public office in order to gain free admission to theatres. But he was a conspicuous exception. The manager answered him from a grateful heart, expressing his delight at encountering one official who did not have his hand out for something.

"Why is it that our friends expect us to let them into the show free?" he asked, during a social visit of film men. "Merchants don't expect us to ask them for free collars and bread."

"You've demoralized the town, and haven't the nerve to break the bonds," said an exhibitor who had successfully conducted a moving picture theatre in another city. "There's no city in the country where passes are scattered as freely as here—and where people are so frank in asking and expecting courtesies. This thing can be stopped if we get together."

And "get together" they will. Not to save the few tickets that they are giving away to officials and to business men. But for this reason, as one exhibitor put it:

"It is essential that the theatrical business—and especially the picture business—be raised to a standard of a real industry. And this cannot be done as long as managers assume, in the giving of free admissions, that they have an outlaw business that must curry favor with officials and influential persons. Let the flood of free admissions be stopped—and we'll get our industry on such a business basis—and we can go to the public if necessary for help in securing our rights."

Evansville Mayor Announces Drum Tight Sunday Closing

BENJAMIN BOSSE, mayor of Evansville, Ind., recently threw a "bomb" among the motion picture interests by announcing that he intends to close all motion picture theatres and other places of amusement, along with barber's shops, drug stores and other places, on Sundays, after January 1, 1919. He declares he will carry out the plan if he finds that public sentiment demands it.

As a result of the mayor's announcement the motion picture exhibitors and theatre owners are circulating petitions in all public places in the city, protesting against the closing of the theatres, in an effort to show him that public sentiment is against such a movement.

The plan of circulating the petition was decided on by the exhibitors and theatre men at a meeting following a conference with Mayor Bosse at which he told them that he was not in favor of closing such places on Sundays, but that he had been criticised so severely by his political opponents for laxity in enforcing the laws that he intends to close the city as "tight as a drum."

Mayor Bosse told the men at the conference that Philip C. Gould, judge of the Vanderburg circuit court; G. C. Foster, formerly county clerk of Vanderburg county, and Fred. W. Ossenberg, a Republican political leader, in a recent conference with Governor James P. Goodrich, informed the chief executive that Evansville was the worst governed city in the state, and that the laws were not enforced.

For Sunday Opening.

The mayor said he was angered at this statement and for that reason had decided to give his criticisers a taste of real enforcement for a while. In parting with the motion picture men he consented not to enforce the plan if he found public sentiment against the plan and it was for that reason that the petitions were soon put in circulation. The mayor also expressed himself in favor of legislation at the coming session of the state legislature, that would repeal the Sunday closing law so that it would be legitimate to attend a Sunday theatre.

The motion picture men appealed to him not to close the shows and explained that if they are forced to keep closed on Sundays they will eventually have to close up during the week. A. J. Merrill, manager of the Princess Theatre, stated that the closing of the theatre on Sunday would destroy all profits derived from the business, as Sunday is practically the only day in the week on which the exhibitors do much business.

Charles Sweeton, manager of the Majestic Theatre, said that in his opinion the theatres in Evansville could not exist without the Sunday shows. He said the closing of the theatres would not only hurt the exhibitors themselves but would be a big injustice to the thousands of theatre-going people, whose only opportunity to seek entertainment is at the Sunday theatres. Other theatre managers somewhat similar views.

J. S. BLACKTON REACHES FILM MAJORITY

Twenty-one Years Ago He Began Producing Motion Pictures—He's Still At It and Going Strong

TWENTY-ONE years ago J. Stuart Blackton began his career as a film producer by making motion pictures on the roof of an office building in New York. His success since those pioneer days when he helped found the Vitagraph Company and did his share to make the moving picture the success it is today, is a part of the history of the industry itself.

It was in 1897 that Commodore Blackton directed his first motion picture, a "production" fifty feet in length, showing a Spanish flag fluttering in the breeze with the hand of Mr. Blackton slowly rising into the picture, tearing down that flag and hauling up in its place the Stars and Stripes. At that time of the Spanish-American disturbance the little film aroused wild enthusiasm wherever shown.

It is a significant fact, in view of this initial achievement, that to Mr. Blackton goes credit for the production of the first preparedness propaganda picture dealing with the more recent conflict. This was "The Battle Cry of Liberty," which was followed by his "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," one of the first military and industrial mobilization pictures made. It was but natural then that the list of his productions should also include a picture which is at once unusual screen entertainment and a pictorial record of incidents in the world war, of the work of every implement used in waging the battles.

This is "The Common Cause," the outstanding Blackton achievement of the year 1918, a year which has been a banner one in his career, having recorded several of his greatest successes and established him as an independent producer, the president and director general of Blackton Productions, Inc., with business offices in New York and studios in Brooklyn.

Early in the year Commodore Blackton, who was then affiliated with the Famous Players-Lasky Company, having several months previously severed his active association as a Vitagraph producer but retaining his financial interest in the company, made his first production trip to California. There he produced "Wild Youth" and "Missing," the last two of his series of Paramount pictures. He then returned to New York to acquire the screen rights of "The Common Cause," the play by J. Hartley Manners and Major Ian Hay Beith, which he was commissioned to film under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission.

The enthusiastic reception accorded "The Common Cause" by the trade press reviewers on its recent private showing at the Rialto Theatre and its success through Vitagraph exchanges which are distributing the picture, are matters of current film history.

Before its release Commodore Blackton presented "Safe for Democracy," which he produced from the labor question story written by Anthony P. Kelly. It was featured at the Rivoli Theatre during the week of November 3. This picture has now been retitled "Life's Greatest Problem," and with "The Littlest Scout," a new Paula Blackton Country Life Story, it is being booked by the Independent Sales Corporation and distributed through the Film Clearing House.

"A House Divided" is the first Blackton production for 1919. It has just been begun and will occupy the producer's time for some days after the New Year. Regarding the distribution destiny of this picture and the productions underlined to follow it, no announcement has been made, but those in the know state that Commodore Blackton is formulating plans for yet another big special timely release to make his 1919 even more prosperous and gratifying than 1918.

Storage Building for War Pictures.

A new storage building for still and motion pictures of the war is soon to be erected on the grounds occupied by the Army War College in Washington, D. C. This building, plans for which have just been completed, is to be the permanent repository of the pictorial history of the war. It is to be the "last word" in film vaults.

There are thousands of reels of films and enormous quantities of photographs made in the United States and in France and the building of this structure is to prevent all of these meeting the fate that befell the famous Brady pictures of the Civil War now scattered all over the land.

SAMUEL GOLDWYN NOW HEADS GOLDWYN

Chief of Producing and Distributing Companies Changes His Name to Avoid Further Confusion

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, a name world known throughout the length and breadth of the motion picture industry, is no longer Samuel Goldfish. Under an order of Supreme Court Justice Thomas F. Donnelly he has been authorized to adopt as his legal name for the future Samuel Goldwyn, which is the name he coined two years ago when he organized the now successful Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Behind this change of a name lies a business story without a parallel; the creation of an industrial child that outgrew and absorbed its father. When in 1916 Mr. Goldfish and Edgar and Archibald Selwyn organized a new motion picture producing organization they cast about for a name that would blend their identities and wound up by contributing one syllable of each of their names to the world "Gold-wyn." It was a fortunate selection. It became known quickly. Through the medium of the screen their company's output soon reached out to the ends of the earth.

Within a few weeks after the formation of the company inquiries addressed to the president and chief executive officer of the company began to arrive from foreign lands and invariably they were addressed to "Samuel Goldwyn." This error also found its parallel in the United States and for the two years of the company's existence fully half of the mail intended for Samuel Goldfish has been marked or typed "Samuel Goldwyn." The recurrence of this confusion of identities soon convinced Samuel Goldfish that in building Goldwyn Pictures Corporation he had created a friendly Frankenstein that was destined to swallow up the man who had conceived it.

Under ordinary circumstances the changing of his name by a man in his thirties who has made his name count in an important industry is a matter not to be acted on hastily, so for the past twelve months Mr. Goldfish has watched his new identity make inroads upon his old identity. Not until a day or two before he departed for his mid-winter trip to the company's California studios did he make the decision, and news of Justice Donnelly's approval of the change was conveyed to him by telegraph from Gabriel L. Hess, general counsel for Goldwyn, in the following message:

"Samuel Goldfish is dead. Long live Samuel Goldwyn!"

This is a step that is rarely taken by a man who has reached the elevation of business success such as Mr. Goldfish has attained, but here again the screen itself will be called upon to perform a news function and engulf in oblivion one of the best known personalities ever identified with the industry. Beginning with the Goldwyn Pictures releases for the New Year and thereafter screen patrons will see the words "Samuel Goldwyn presents" whatever Goldwyn picture is being shown, and the billboards of the country on which pictures are widely exploited will carry the new name, as well as any and all advertising of the Goldwyn Pictures and Goldwyn Distributing corporations.

The fact that this can be done and blot out a name that for ten years has figured on a large scale in two industries and simultaneously substitute therefor a mythical name that became a fact is but another example of the potency of the motion picture and the screens on which they are shown.

On other pages of this issue will be found references to Samuel Goldfish. Subscribers are safe in reading Samuel Goldwyn, as the name will be printed in succeeding numbers.

Alma Rubens at Head of Her Own Company

ALMA RUBENS will head her own company, which was recently formed by Charles Greenberg and Franklin Hutton, controllers of the Brunton Studios in Los Angeles. The Alma Rubens.

Robertson Cole Company, which will control the world's rights of all Alma Rubens' pictures, will distribute these subjects in the United States and Canada through Exhibitors' Mutual.

Miss Rubens will be remembered for the splendid work she did in support of William S. Hart, as well as in "Reggie Mixes In," "Master of His Home" and "Gown of Destiny" in which she was featured.

Miss Rubens will be employed in stories which fit her type. Her first picture has already been chosen. It is "Diana of the Green Van," by Leona Dalyrimple. While Miss Rubens is already at work on this production, the release date has not been set, but it is believed that it will be ready shortly after the first of the year.

Hal Reid Joins Universal.

To add to the efficiency of its scenario and producing organization Universal has engaged Hal Reid, father of Wallace Reid, and one of the best known characters in the film field, as a special "idea man." Mr. Reid is one of the truly veteran film men, having been active in the writing and producing end of the business for a score of years. He has at various times been scenario editor for Vitagraph, Paramount-Artcraft and Universal, and is also the author of over a hundred stage plays.

Winnipeg Theatre Employes Ask Pay for Flu Shutdown

T. J. MURRAY, solicitor, and F. Robinson, secretary of the Winnipeg Trades and Labor Council, headed a deputation of the Winnipeg Theatrical Trades Federation which waited upon the Winnipeg Board of Control on December 12 for the purpose of demanding compensation for loss of wages sustained through the closing of the local theatres for a period of seven weeks because of the recent epidemic.

The interests represented included the projection machine operators, musicians and stage hands and the net loss to these employes was listed as follows: Twenty-four machine operators lost $4,139.75; twenty-eight stage employes lost $4,257.70; eighty-six musicians lost $15,253.85. The total loss was $23,651.10, according to these statistics.

Instances of personal hardship were cited, but the deputation pointed out that the men were not asking for charity. They wanted reimbursement for a loss sustained through an act of the city. Announcement was made that the unions would place a similar plea before the Manitoba Provincial Government on a subsequent date.

Mayor-elect Gray, who was present at the meeting, scored the special civic committee which had been organized to deal with the question of relief for the theatre employes because of lack of action.

City Solicitor Hunt pointed out that if the city were called upon to reimburse every citizen for losses sustained through the embargo on public gatherings the damage claims would reach the million dollar mark. Every corporation in the city would have some kind of claim, he declared.

The relief question was again left to the special committee and the city solicitor and the deputation withdrew to wait for final decision.

Samuelson Saved from Dumaru.

Louis Samuelson, at one time a booker in the Seattle Branch of Pathe Exchange, Inc., thought to have been lost in the burning of the steamship Dumaru in mid-Pacific, after a lapse of several days, has been reported among the survivors. He was in a third boatload, containing fourteen men, which landed near Manila.

Mr. Samuelson shipped on the steamer Dumaru, which left San Francisco with a load of dynamite and gasoline. Somewhere in mid-ocean between the Island of Guam and the Philippine Islands the ship was hit by a typhoon and struck by lightning, which ignited the deck load and completely destroyed the vessel.

Vitagraph Convention January 2.

A meeting of all Vitagraph branch exchange and studio managers is scheduled to take place at the McAlpin Hotel, New York City, on Thursday, January 2. Following the business session there will be a banquet and a general good time.

ROOSEVELT SCREEN BIOGRAPHY READY

Frederick L. Collins Announces Completion of Work of Producer Nigh—Covers Long Career

THE first official announcement in regard to the expected Roosevelt picture came last week from the office of Frederick L. Collins, head of the McClure motion picture and publishing interests and personal representative of Colonel Roosevelt in motion picture matters. Mr. Collins' statement contains the news that the picture is finished and about to be released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. William Nigh, who made "My Four Years in Germany," with Ambassador Gerard, one of the most successful pictures of the year, was in personal charge of the large directing and producing staff that completed the Roosevelt picture.

"It was not an easy thing," states Mr. Collins, "to select just the right director for the Roosevelt picture, for the story of the production contains almost every element to tax the skill of a producer, including 'kid-stuff,' Western scenes, fist fights, cowboy stunts, behind the scenes, Washington effects, the atmosphere of the White House and Sagamore Hill, and right-down-to-the-minute war pictures embodying the experiences of Colonel Roosevelt's sons.

"The man who could successfully visualize a scene in which T. R. knocks out a bad man in a wild west saloon might not be able to do justice to the German Ambassador's story interview with President Roosevelt in the White House, or the intimate scenes of extreme delicacy surrounding the work of the Roosevelt boys at the front. And I had to have a man who was acceptable to the Colonel and who could work with him.

"William Nigh appealed to me most strongly, not alone because of his varied experiences and his success with Ambassador Gerard, but because he seems to be the only man who has discovered the secret of making distinguished men and important public characters seem real on the screen, as witnessed by his extraordinary success in visualizing the difficult characterization in the Gerard picture and as shown in his work on the Roosevelt picture."

Colonel Roosevelt has given Mr. Nigh unusual opportunities to study the family life of the Roosevelts at Oyster Bay. It will be recalled that Colonel Roosevelt is not making this picture for personal profit, but has stated that all the royalties received by him are to be devoted to the Red Cross and other war charities, and it is for this purpose that he commissioned Mr. Collins to present a picture version of his life and works.

The picture portrays the experiences of Colonel Roosevelt at various stages of his adventurous career, but it is in no sense a dry autobiographical or historic picture. It is said the authors have steered clear of controversial or political subject.

Announcement of the striking title of the picture will be made next week.

Gentleman Jim Corbett to Become Universal Star

JAMES J. CORBETT, one of the best known men in the sporting world, has been signed by the Universal to appear in future Universal pictures.

It has been known that Universal was casting about for a male star for several weeks and the signing of Mr. Corbett brings to the screen a man who has played numerous stage parts and whose fistic fame has spread to the four corners of the globe.

Over a score of years ago Mr. Corbett became a stage star, being featured by William A. Brady in "Gentleman Jack," "The Naval Cadet" and "The Adventurer." Later H. B. Harris took Mr. Corbett in hand and featured him in a George Bernard Shaw play, "Cashiel Byron's Profession," and following the close of this successful play Henry Frazee starred Corbett in "Facing the Music," an English farce, "Pals," and "The Burglar and the Lady."

In addition to playing in dramas and light comedy productions, Mr. Corbett has toured the country several times in vaudeville sketches and played the male lead in a New York musical comedy entitled "Around New York in Eighty Minutes." His last big New York success was at the Winter Garden several seasons ago, where he played a prominent part in the production that remained at the theatre a year.

Mr. Corbett has at different times appeared before the public in Australia, China, Japan, the Philippines, Hawaii, Cuba, England, Ireland, France, Germany, Italy and Northern Africa.

After closing up his New York business affairs Mr. Corbett will leave for Universal City December 30 and begin work. His director and leading woman have not been selected.

"The Heart of Humanity" Opens Big At the Broadway

THE Heart of Humanity," Allen Holubar's master picture, to be released by Jewel Productions, Inc., was given its premier showing at the Broadway Theatre, New York, Sunday, December 22, and despite a heavy rain which did not let up during the day or evening the theatre was crowded at each showing.

The film was shown twice in the afternoon and once in the evening, when Miss Dorothy Phillips, star of the production, and Director Allen Holubar and Carl Laemmle were present. Following the showing of the "Broadway Topical Digest" and "Topics of the Day" the stage was illuminated and Hal Reid introduced Miss Phillips. The star, unable to speak loudly because of a severe cold, made a short speech in which she wished the audience a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Following Miss Phillips' exit the stage curtains parted and the feature flashed on the screen.

The overture for the occasion was "The Light Cavalry," by Francis Suppe, and the Broadway orchestra, under the direction of James C. Bradford, gave a musical accompaniment to the big film.

A review of this fine production will be found on another page. The picture will be shown for an indefinite period.

Oklahoma Exhibitors to Meet.

L. W. Brophy, secretary of the Oklahoma Exhibitors' Association, announces that a special meeting of the state organization will be held at the Lee Huckins hotel, Oklahoma City, on January 6 and 7. The Oklahoma State Legislature meets early in January, which necessitates this meeting. The January special meeting will take the place of the regular meeting in February. All members are urged to be present and exhibitors generally are invited.

Scenes from the Roosevelt Picture to Be Distributed Through First National

ROAST DOG AND ALLIGATOR STEAK

Those Subjects Crop Up in an Interesting Interview with Norma Talmadge About Her Experiences in the Making of Her Indian Picture, "The Heart of Wetona"

By Edward Weitzel

DRESSED in a yellow kimono-like garment, Norma Talmadge was engaged in sorting out the contents of a red cedar chest when disturbed by a knock at the open door of her dressing-room. She looked up and smiled a welcome as she tossed a purse made from an alligator's foot into a waste-paper basket and then dropped some torn up letters in after it.

"I'm cleaning house," she explained. "This is the first day I've used this room since we returned from California, and I'm getting rid of a lot of papers and things I don't want."

"How did you enjoy your trip to the coast?"

"It was mostly hard work. But we never could have made the Indian scenes for 'The Heart of Wetona' one quarter as well in the East; so I'm glad we went."

"Is Wetona the first Indian girl you ever played?"

"Yes—and I love the part!"

"Better than the little Chinese Maiden in 'The Forbidden City?'"

Norma Talmadge had been chatting in an easy off-hand fashion as she continued to glance at the stack of papers in her hand. At the last question she paused in her work and gave an unconscious revelation of the source of her power as one of the finest emotional actresses of the silent drama. Before she spoke her eyes and face foretold her answer and showed her deep sympathy with the daughter of Quannah, in whose veins runs the blood of a white mother and whose veneer of civilization adds to her personal charm but does not change the unreasoning strength of her affection and loyalty.

Enthusiasm Over Wetona.

Standing in the center of her dressing-room and without a second's hesitation or the aid of any sort of illusion, Norma Talmadge seemed to become another person—the Indian girl of whom she spoke:

"I adore Wetona because she is so open and frank and so true to the man she loves. She trusts him wholly and never suspects he is not loyal to her until after Hardin has married her to save her from her father's anger. She will not lie when chosen as the vestal virgin of her tribe, neither will she betray the man who has won her heart. Her awakening is terrible, when she realizes that Anthony Wells is not worthy of her sacrifice. I am so glad she learns how truly Hardin loves her. Wetona is very real to me and her feelings reveal a fine nature that will repay all of Hardin's love and devotion."

Nature has done much for Norma Talmadge in a physical way, and her instinct and training have all been in the right direction for the delineation of a round of characters—women aglow with life and keen susceptibility—that have a firm hold on public interest. But it is her ability to get inside of the part she is playing, to know and feel every emotion of the woman she assumes to be, that gives this rather retiring and youthful appearing little actress so large and enthusiastic a following. A noticeable trait is the brilliancy of her countenance when the right chord is struck to awaken her interest—a gift of the gods that is beyond price to a dramatic artist.

How the Alligator Made His Exit.

The cedar chest having been put in order, Norma Talmadge produced a thermos bottle of hot malted milk and a box of home-made sandwiches and offered to share her lunch. Sitting Turk fashion on a leather covered couch she nibbled at her modest repast and tried to accede to a request for an odd or amusing incident in connection with her work. After turning the matter over in her mind for a moment she came to the conclusion that nothing of that nature ever had happened. The waste paper basket still stood in the center of the dressing room and the discarded purse caught the eye of the interviewer.

"Isn't there a story connected with this alligator's foot, Miss Talmadge?"

"No—except that whenever I look at it I am reminded of how I lost one of my pets."

"Tell me about it?"

"It happened when we were in Florida last winter. I had a pet alligator and I grew very fond of him and so did my dog. The two would play together. That is, the poodle would do the playing, and Peter—that was the alligator—would open one eye and then go to sleep when the poodle stood and barked at him and jumped as near to Peter as he dared. They had great fun together. But one night it turned quite cold, and when I came down stairs for breakfast Peter was huddled up in the corner of his box and wouldn't move. He felt so cold and stiff that I thought he must be freezing to death. I picked him up and ran out into the kitchen. The cook was broiling a steak, so I put Peter into the lower part of the oven. I intended to leave him there only a few moments while I looked over my mail. There were a number of letters that morning and when I went back into the kitchen and opened the oven door something told me I had left Peter in there too long. He was a nice, quiet, well-behaved alligator, and his chum, the poodle, missed him terribly."

"Is baked alligator a regular item on a Florida menu?"

Peter's mistress shook her head, doubtfully. "I have heard of alligator steaks," she replied, "but I guess I'm the first to bake an alligator whole."

An Indian Feast.

"Speaking of strange dishes, Miss Talmadge, I heard that the Indians on the reservation gave you a feast and made you a princess of the tribe when you went West to complete "The Heart of Wetona.' Was there any roast dog on the bill of fare?"

Once more the owner of the late, lamented Peter shook her head:

"No; but I was horribly afraid there would be! And before the feast was finished I was positive of it. You see, I took Fluff, that's the poodle, with me and the day before the feast he disappeared. We searched everywhere for him, but he couldn't be found. I offered a reward and everything, but it did no good; so I was feeling very unhappy when we went over to the chief's house for the feast. The ceremony of taking me into the tribe and making me a princess was novel and interesting, and I had quite forgotten the lost poodle when we sat down to the feast. It would have passed off splendidly if I hadn't overheard a bit of conversation between Sydney Franklin and Thomas Meighan. We were being served with a meat course when my director leaned over and whispered to my leading man:

"'Say, Tom, I wonder if they are going to give us any roast dog?'

"'Of course!' replied Mr. Meighan. 'That's why Miss Talmadge can't find her poodle.'"

"They hadn't really——"

"No. Fluff was found in the woods next morning almost starved. But I only pretended to eat during the rest of the meal. My appetite went on a vacation and refused to come back."

HARRY GARSON GETS READY TO EXPAND

Film Magnate Building Studio to Meet Requirements of Largely Increased Producing Forces

HARRY I. GARSON arrived in New York from Los Angeles Tuesday, December 23, and before Christmas week was ended had again turned his face toward the coast and was away on his long journey. Mr. Garson came to New York for the purpose of closing some business deals that will have much to do with his future arrangements. He brought with him the first print of "Cheating Cheaters," the latest Select picture produced by Clara Kimball Young; and he opened negotiations for a New York theatre in which he will show early in February the new Blanche Sweet offering, "The Unpardonable Sin."

"During the four months I have been away from New York," said Mr. Garson to a representative of The World, "I have accomplished a great deal in furtherance of my plans for producing pictures. Under direction of Marshal Neilan the first Blanche Sweet production has been completed and will be first shown to the public at Clune's, in Los Angeles, January 6, when it begins an extended run. As soon as Miss Sweet's picture is established there, we will bring it to New York for an Eastern showing at a theatre I am now negotiating for.

"Within another three months we will have our own studio, work on which is now going forward with all speed. We have been using, and are still using, half of the Griffith studio in Los Angeles to produce pictures for Miss Young and Miss Sweet, and by the time our own studio is ready I will have two more stars under contract for a series of productions. In the new studio I expect to produce twenty pictures during the first year, all developed with a view to making money after they are sold and not framed to make all the profit we can just because they are contracted for at a given price as soon as they are delivered for distribution.

Garson Believes the Fixed Price Wrong.

"In my opinion human nature will impel any man to make as much money as he can, by saving all the money possible on a product that he has already sold. The system that gives a star or producer a fixed price for a picture when it is delivered for distribution is, in my opinion, all wrong. It is impossible to resist opportunity to save money and skimp on production wherever it is possible to do so. My pictures are built first and sold afterward, and that is the way I shall continue to produce.

"There is an incentive—a necessity—for putting the best possible effort into a production that must sell on its merits after it is finished. In 'Cheating Cheaters' I have tried to demonstrate my idea—although Miss Young's pictures are all sold to Select; contracted for a price fixed before they are completed. In 'Cheating Cheaters' Miss Young has the best supporting company we could possibly obtain—actors of reputation who can really act. In every way we have given a production as complete and ample as money could provide. 'Cheating Cheaters' will be a 'program picture' decidedly away from the ordinary.

"Blanche Sweet's 'Unpardonable Sin' has been made on my own theory of producing first and selling afterward. We have turned out a ten-reel subject that will prove whether my theories are right or wrong. Under my plans it will not take long to prove whether I am right or wrong—the pictures will do the proving, and I am satisfied to abide by the result. If I am right I'll make a lot of money, and will establish my product on a market that is eager and waiting for really big pictures done in a really big way. There never was a time that a man could not sell good goods, at a good price, if he really had the product that would stand the test. Selling merchandise and selling pictures is not so very different, as a business proposition, after all.

Refuses Big Offer for Sweet Picture.

"Incidentally I refused an offer for 'The Unpardonable Sin' just before I left Los Angeles—an amount involved that would have turned me a mighty neat profit. This was before the picture was completely titled and edited: it was made after a private screening that showed the picture only 'in the rough.' But I determined to keep the picture in my own control, to market it myself and prove my own theories to be right or wrong.

"Marshal Neilan is now busy producing in our half of the Griffith studio Mary Pickford's first independent picture, 'Daddy Long Legs.' Our studio staff, cameramen and mechanical forces are doing this work for Miss Pickford as what is likely to be Mr. Neilan's last Pickford picture. When he is done with his present task he will begin another Blanche Sweet production and will thereafter devote his abilities exclusively to Miss Sweet's productions.

"Early in the New Year I will have some interesting announcements to make, along the lines I have indicated. I am here to close contracts with directors and stars in anticipation of our move to our own studio. With twenty pictures to be made there is the prospect of a busy year for myself and assistants. Sometime in February my plans will be outlined in a publicity and advertising campaign that is sure to be of interest to every exhibitor who knows what really good pictures are and what their exploitation means not alone to the individual showman but to the business as a whole." HILL.

Action Drama Succeeding Artificial, Says Sennett

AT his offices in the California studios, Mack Sennett, producer of Paramount Comedies in viewing the outlook for the coming year stated that the artificial drama was rapidly dying out and that the motion pictures to come will have a lot of action.

"It is inevitable that the war will be followed by a great change in thought, and this in turn will involve differences in popular taste," said Mr. Sennett. "There was a period not long before the great conflict when everyone seemed to be going in for a sort of super-heated imitation introspection. One spent most of one's time searching one's soul for 'symbols' and 'reactions.'

"All of this rubbish will be swept out by the good healty exuberance of the war. We are coming to the springtime of the world again when youth will rule.

"In my opinion motion pictures will have a lot of action; they must be simple and genuine in theme, direct and exuberant. I should not be surprised if there were a great increase in the popularity of outdoor pictures.

"Comedies will doubtless be in great demand, but I do not go to the lengths of those who seem to think that the world intends to spend its remaining years in a state of chronic giggles. In fact the serious dramas will be more serious in the sense that they will be more genuine and more sincere. The phases of life to be depicted must ring true. The artificial drama is rapidly dying out.

"During the past year there have been a number of changes in the field of film comedy, and the methods of six months ago are forgotten. It has been my effort to outguess the public, because as soon as an audience sees a certain situation develop, it immediately grasps how it will end; consequently in order to get laughs, we have been forced to switch from the expected ending to the unexpected."

OUTSTANDING EVENTS OF PAST YEAR

NINETEEN-EIGHTEEN has been an eventful year for the motion picture industry. Working under the handicap of war restrictions many projects were postponed awaiting the coming of more propitious times, while other activities were necessarily curtailed. Yet a great deal was accomplished and the industry has grown in strength and broadened in knowledge. As a record of the principal events the compilation which follows is fairly inclusive, and will serve as a ready reference. It is arranged in chronological order, separated by volumes, and the page upon which the story of each event may be found is given.

DETROIT FILM MEN DISCUSS RULES

At First Annual Trade Dinner of Salesmen, Exchange Managers Outline Their Policy Toward Exhibitors—Keynote, "Co-operation and Progress"—Many Speeches

By Jacob Smith

THE first annual film salesmen's dinner under the auspices of the Detroit Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers' Association, held at the Board of Commerce Friday evening, December 20, will go down in local film history as not only the greatest gathering of managers and salesmen, but the most enthusiastic, the most important and the most successful. The attendance was practically 100 per cent.

The keynote of the meeting was "co-operation and progress," the main object being to discuss the five-trades rule recently adopted by the exchangemen and which become effective on January 1. The purpose in having the salesmen attend as guests was to impress upon them that the success of the five trade rules depends greatly on the propaganda which they spread and the impression which they make upon the exhibitor.

Let it be said right here that the trade rules are just as much for the protection of the exhibitor as for the exchange. Most of the rules are already embodied in every contract signed between exhibitors and exchangemen for service—it is merely a case where the contracts will be enforced to the letter. Exchange managers realize that co-operation between themselves and the exhibitors is certain to bring about improved trade conditions, and that furthermore, under the five new trade rules, film salesmen cannot misrepresent the policies of the exchange.

To Spread Gospel of Co-Operation.

At 7 o'clock a splendid dinner was served, and during that time Harry Abbott, Educational Exchange, chairman of the entertainment committee, introduced a number of well known singers, among them Miss Holden, who was there through the courtesy of John H. Kunsky; Eddie McGrath and Billy Priest, through the courtesy of Phil Gleichman, Broadway-Strand Theatre, and Joseph Ferte and Hilda Barr, through the courtesy of M. W. McGee, Majestic Theatre.

At 8:30 President J. E. Flynn tapped the gavel and called the business meeting to order. He spoke of the importance of the meeting, its object, its purposes and aims. "When you film salesmen leave here tonight I trust everyone of you will spread the gospel of co-operation with the exhibitors," he said. "We want the exhibitors to know that our association is as much for their benefit as our own. If they will co-operate with us in living up to the five trade rules, it will enable us to give better service, it will elevate this industry and put it on a higher plane.

"We are asking nothing that is not already covered by the very contracts they sign. It is the only way we can stop the abuses, the evils and the losses, and I am sure when the film salesmen make these points clear to the exhibitors they meet there will be no objection to them. Exchange managers are organizing in every part of the country for the purpose of combating trade evils, and they are getting good results. I might also say that we will welcome a strong organization by exhibitors so that their organization can co-operate with ours."

Mr. Flynn then introduced H. K. Moss, Triangle manager, who spoke on Trade Rule No. 1, "All transportation charges to and from the exchanges must invariably be paid by the exhibitor."

Moss Talks on First Trade Rule.

"There is little to be said on this rule because it is already being done and is covered by all contracts," said Mr. Moss. "It is simply a case of insisting that the rule be lived up to and enforced. Exhibitors should live up to contracts they sign as other people do in other lines of business. To properly enforce this trade rule is a matter of education, and the film salesmen can educate the exhibitors better than anyone because they are so closely in touch with them."

J. M. Duncan, Vitagraph manager, was the next speaker. He touched upon Rule No. 2, "Remittances covering films and advertising charges must positively be in the office of the exchange prior to the time the film is to be shipped, otherwise film will not be shipped."

M. S. Bailey, Fox manager, spoke on Rule No. 3, "Exhibitors must carry out all terms as specified in contracts made with exchanges. No verbal agreements will be recognized. Exhibitors are cautioned to read carefully all terms of all contracts signed as they will be expected to live up to the letter of their contract."

Evils of Switching Dates.

James Friedman, office manager Universal Exchange, spoke on "Changes in Bookings," which is Rule No. 4—"No changes in booking of any service will be granted unless the request is made fourteen days prior to original play dates." Mr. Friedman said that change in bookings was the bugbear of the motion picture exchange business. "Service is the thing that makes the exhibitor's theatre—the theatre, yet how can an exchange give service when exhibitors are switching dates the last minute, upsetting plans, causing chaotic conditions, which, in turn, reflect on them. The single reel is just as important as the feature, yet so many exhibitors seem to think they can cancel a single-reel subject the very last minute—in fact, whenever he feels like it. There is just as much work to book, inspect and handle a single reel as there is a five-reel feature. We must ask exhibitors to observe Rule No. 4 in order that we may give them the proper service."

"An Industry or a Game" was the subject of an able address delivered by Robert Cotton, World Manager.

"Ten Minutes in St. Louis" was the title of the talk rendered by Paul Bush, manager of the Universal. Mr. Bush told of the bad conditions in the Missouri city when he first went there—how there was no co-operation, no harmony, nothing but ill-feeling and antagonism; how later the film men gradually organized and how today conditions have improved 300 per cent., and how exhibitors themselves are better satisfied. Mr. Bush made a strong impression with his earnestness in appealing to film salesmen to go forth and sell their merchandise on legitimate grounds, without misrepresentation, without promises and exactly as the company wishes it.

Cleveland Congratulates Detroit.

"Cleveland's Organization" was discussed by J. R. Johnson, Vitagraph manager in Cleveland and treasurer of the Cleveland Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers. He told of the strong organization existing in Cleveland and what splendid results they had accomplished by co-operation among themselves and with the exhibitor. In referring to the meeting that evening he said it was the best he had ever attended and congratulated the association.

F. W. Gebhardt, manager Pathe Exchange, spoke on Rule No. 5, "Holding Film—No film shall be held by the exhibitor beyond playing date as per contract. Any and all damages accruing to an exchange or brother exhibitor through disregard of this rule shall be borne by the exhibitor responsible."

Mr. Gebhardt said he did not think much was necessary to be said on this. "Everyone knows that it is a palpable crime for any exhibitor to hold a film beyond the time he contracts for it and pays for it," he said.

Haddow Discusses Booking Problems.

"The Problems of Booking" was thoroughly gone into by G. Knox Haddow, assistant manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Exchange. Mr. Haddow was booker for several years, so that he spoke from actual experience. He said the booker's work was the hardest, the most difficult, and yet the most important in any exchange, for the reason that every picture that goes out must first go through the booker's hands for authorization, and that upon the accuracy of the booker depends the success of giving service at any exchange.

"Film salesmen make the work of the booker extremely hard by promising exhibitors dates on pictures that are not available," he said. "Before you promise an exhibitor that you can give him certain dates, it is your duty to find out what the booker has to say—furthermore, it is much better for you film salesmen to ask for a number of dates that the exhibitors have open so that the booker has something to work by. The minute the dates are properly set, the exhibitor is notified. But please don't promise the exhibitor dates—your business is to sell, and it's the booker's business to give him dates that are available. The problems of the booker are countless, and what you film salesmen should do is to co-operate with that department and to make it just as easy as you can for the booker."

L. C. McConnell, special representative for the World Film Exchange, spoke on "The Salesman's Perspective." He said a film salesman should know his product, know his companys' policies thoroughly, and should sell his pictures on merit. "He should study the problems of the exhibitor and assist him in every way he can," said Mac. "Upon the success of the exhibitor depends the success of the whole industry. I believe if film salesmen were in closer touch with the problems of the exhibitor they would be able to render greater service, and would be more valuable to the industry."

Meeting Open for Questions.

For the next 20 minutes, President Flynn permitted open discussion on any of the five trade rules. Quite a number of managers and salesmen asked questions, and many good points were brought out. Larry Hayes, with the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, touched upon the importance of helping the exhibitor with advance press copy, publicity, etc.

W. F. Barrett, vice president of the Film Exchange Managers' Board of Trade, Toronto, Canada, spoke on "The Industry in Canada." He said that the exchange managers had been together in Toronto for some time and that while at first the trade rules they adopted seemed harsh upon the exhibitor, in time they proved to be based on good, common sense and that at present every exhibitor was abiding by the rules and that as a result conditions were greatly improved, service had improved, and exhibitors themselves were better pleased with trade conditions. "Co-operation has done it," said Mr. Barrett. "We have a grievance committee, as you have in Detroit, and when controversies come up, if the exchange manager is wrong, he must make the adjustment. On the other hand, if the exhibitor is wrong, we expect that he make the adjustment.

Will Put Nobody Out of Business.

President Flynn was the last on the program, and he gave a resume of what had taken place at the meeting and what was expected as a result. "Now, please, film salesmen, don't misinform the exhibitors as to our aims and objects," he said. "We are not organized to fight or antagonize them—we are not trying to put anybody out of business—we are fighting for the whole industry, for upon the success of any one branch depends the prosperity of everybody in the business. We want the exhibitor thoroughly to understand that we have a grievance committee and that if at any time any exchange manager mistreats him he is at liberty to file his complaint, and the matter will be given a thorough investigation and the exchange manager will have to make amends. We are just as anxious to have the exhibitors treated right as we are anxious to be treated right. So when you leave here tonight let everyone of you spread the gospel of truth, honesty, sincerity of purpose—and do nothing that is going to reflect either upon yourself, the exchange you represent or the company that pays your salary."

Before adjournment, President Flynn presented a box of cigars to W. F. Wilkinson, secretary of the organization, in appreciation of his splendid work, while Harry Abbott presented Mr. Flynn with a handsome package of cigarettes as a slight token of appreciation for his efforts.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

FILMLAND is full of celebrities. Almost every studio in the colony is pointing with pride to "our Mister Whoozis," or "Whoozat," who has just come out to the Coast. The revolving doors of the big hotels are choked with film magnates of high degree, and the lobbies and corridors resound with bellhoppish voices paging "Misseraw-sapple," "Misser Gofeesh," "Misserkarger," and other names of import in the blue book of the movies.

These movie moguls are holding conferences, making speeches, optimistic, pessimistic, and otherwise, and attending luncheons given in their honor. As a consequence hat-check girls are happy, banqueteers are declaring dividends, and trade-paper representatives are getting fat and are learning to avoid crab cocktails and not to put sugar and cream in consomme or other kinds of soup even if it does have a startling resemblance to java and is served in coffee cups.

Colonel W. N. Selig came to town two weeks ago, and after indulging in a light breakfast and a taxi ride to the Selig studios out on Mission Road, took off his hat and coat, put on his overalls, rolled up his sleeves and said: "Come on, boys, let's go!" and a good old-fashioned Selig film was on the fire before you could say Spike Robinson.

Just Why Roxy Went West.

Samuel Goldfish and S. L. Rothapfel came to town together. There has been considerable conjecture about the simultaneous arrival of these two film figures, but the explanation is not difficult when you stop to consider that Mr. Rothapfel is one of Mr. Goldfish's best little customers, and it was nothing less than good business to bundle him up and bring him along rather than leave him to the tender mercies of his competitors in New York.

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Corporation, is here. He came to look over the Fox plant out on Western avenue, and he says things never looked better either here, in Seattle, Portland, or in the other cities he visited.

And Why Beach Wears Dark Lamps.

Rex Beach is here to overlook his pictures being made at the Goldwyn plant. Rex is wearing dark glasses because of a "recrudescence of snow-blindness," so he says, but he can't fool us with big words like that. He is afraid to trust his eyesight to the allurements of our unexampled scenery.

He does not want his eyes to be dazzled by the sight of our "Old Baldy" that looks just like a picture on a postcard, now that its top is covered with nice white snow; he wants to blind himself to the verdant beauty of the mountain laurel on our foothills; he does not want to note the grace of our willowy eucalyptus trees, or see the beautiful colors of our geraniums, roses and poinsettas.

Being a person of discernment and a lover of nature in her various moods—and I'll leave it to anybody if she isn't more various here than anywhere else—Mr. Beach knows that if he were to gaze on our beautiful bailiwick with unhampered vision he would forsake the bleak and wintry East and come out here to live in a bungalow and eat summer squash like the rest of us.

No Chance for San Francisco.

There has been considerable excitement in Filmland, occasioned by the attempts of the people of a small town in the northern part of the state to lure some of our stars and studios to their bleak and fog-ridden district by the offer of sites, subsidies and suchlike.

But there is little danger that we shall lose our Clara Kimball Young, or our Blanche Sweet, or our Harry Garson, and if this presumptuous village does not stop trying to pull stuff of that kind we will stop referring to the earthquake they had up there a few years ago as "the fire," and tell tourists the truth about it.

In between luncheons, I went over to the Sunset studios to see Mary Pickford turning Jean Webster's story of "Daddy Longlegs" into a film for the First National Exhibitors. They were making scenes of the orphanage where Judy, the heroine of the story, lives before she is taken out and placed in a school by Daddy Longlegs, one of the trustees of the institution.

Little Mary Plays with Big Orphans.

The place was literally running over with orphans, real ones ,at that. Two Sisters of Mercy from the Los Angeles Orphan Asylum in Boyle Heights were there in charge of them—that is, they were supposed to be in charge of them—in reality the orphans were in charge.

They were everywhere, big orphans, little orphans, middle-sized ones, fat ones and thin ones—you couldn't turn around without almost stepping on an assortment of orphans—and the little tykes were having the time of their life, every one of them, acting in the movies, filling themselves up with apples, oranges, cake, being called "dear" and "honey" by one of the greatest film stars, accumulating things to brag about, and being pampered with all-day suckers.

Pickfords Mother the Little Ones.

Marshall Neilan, who was directing the film, treated those kids as if each and every one of them was getting as much salary as Little Mary herself, and Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, who is always pretty much on the job around the studio, was mothering and honeying them around until the Sisters began to fear that they would have a collection of spoiled orphans on their hands.

There was one kid in the lot—Mousie, they called her—that is a natural-born comedienne, and I'll bet a button that some day a press agent—maybe Mark Larkin's grandson—will be writing pieces about her and telling how Miss Katy Kelly, the well known and justly celebrated film star, made her first appearance in the pictures when a child of three, in the cast with Mary Pickford, the premiere picture actress of a generation ago.

An Assortment of Orphans.

Giebler, Too, Gets on Pickford Band Wagon.

It is a delight to watch Mary Pickford before the camera, and it is a double delight to observe her manner in and around the studio.

I think I discovered the secret of this girl's charm, if there was ever any secret about it. I know the high-priced star who thinks she must act up to her salary; I know the star whose salary has grown and who has not grown along with it herself, and knows it, and makes pitiful attempts to hide the fact by acting "different"; I know the star who has to have music, flowers and what not to get into the spirit of the part; I know the star whose temperament climbs like the temperature of a flu patient the moment she thinks she is being watched; I know the star who is too exclusive to associate with the extra people, but sits while the scene is being rehearsed in solemn grandeur in her dressing-room until her director comes with a bow and a humble manner and says, "All ready for you now, Miss Thingummy."

Mary Giving a Prune the Third Degree.

Mary Pickford is none of these. She is natural and unaffected, and her salary has not gone to her head.

Mary was right there in the midst of the orphans all the time, so much in the midst of them, in fact, that I couldn't pick her out. When they got ready for the first rehearsal and had the whole lot of kids seated at the tables of a scene that represented the dining room of an orphan asylum, a young man from Baltimore who was visiting the studio leaned over to me and in a stage whisper asked, "Where is Miss Pickford?"

I gave a hasty look and took a chance.

"Right over there," I said, "second bench, third orphan from the left, the one with the curls."

"Daddy Longlegs" Will Be Good Play.

And a minute later, when Mickey Neilan said "Camera!" and Charles Rosher began grinding away, one of the orphans rose, plunged her fork in a prune, stood up on the bench and made a passionate appeal for freedom from prunes. It was Mary, but it was not the orphan with the curls, it was one with straight pigtails, and I made it my business to keep out of the way of the person from Baltimore after that.

"Daddy Longlegs" is going to be a good play. It is full of comedy, pathos, gentle humor and humanity.

Hamilton Is Cast for Daddy.

Mahlon Hamilton is Daddy Longlegs, Elinor Fair is Julia, Audrey Chapman is her friend, Mrs. Harry Davenport is the stern-faced matron of the orphanage, Clara Ward is Mrs. Semple, James Bradbury is a trustee, and there is no villain.

Wesley Berry is a clever kid who helps Judy instigate the great prune strike in the orphanage, which will be a high spot in the early action of the film. Little Frankie Lee has a good part where he has to pin a cartoon on the back of one of the trustees of the asylum, and I had to step around lively all the time I was on the set to keep Frankie from adorning my coat tails with a piece of paper by way of rehearsal.

ZUKOR EXAMINES CHICAGO CONDITIONS

On Annual Tour of Country New York Producer Stops Over in Illinois—Meeting Many Exhibitors

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, arrived in the city Thursday, December 19, accompanied by Mrs. Zukor, his son Eugene, and other members of the family. The party was quartered at the Blackstone Hotel, which became the temporary home for a week.

This is the customary annual tour of the country made by Mr. Zukor for the purpose of getting into closer touch with exhibitors and of learning their views of the business as seen from their angle. Business in Chicago and towns in the vicinity was closely scrutinized by Mr. Zukor during his week's stay and exhibitors were seen constantly and their opinions invited.

On the way from Chicago to the Los Angeles studios the Zukor party will stop over, in order, at St. Louis, Kansas City (Mo.), Denver and Salt Lake City. On the homeward trip—which will be made after a sojourn in Los Angeles of two or three weeks—San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Spokane, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Milwaukee will be visited, and Mr. Zukor will meet as many exhibitors as possible in each city. He will address exhibitors at each of these stopping places and will learn conditions exactly as they are. Milwaukee will be reached about January 31.

The purpose of this annual trip is to meet exhibitors and to give them the business conditions as viewed from his angle and to ascertain the conditions as viewed from their angle. Then by comparing notes he will be better able to govern his product so as to better meet the demands of the moving picture theatre going public, to the mutual benefit of Famous Players-Lasky and their customers.

At a meeting of the members of the Allied Amusement Association in Fraternity Hall, Friday afternoon, December 20, Mr. Zukor was invited to attend and deliver an address before the regular business of the meeting was entered upon. During his remarks—which were received with deep attention—Mr. Zukor assured his hearers that his company is ever mindful of the necessities of the trade as a whole and that an improved product should be forthcoming to meet the demands of a public which is growing more and more critical as the years pass. He assured them that he is constantly striving to perfect his organization so as to meet this growing, critical demand.

He believed that by keeping in close touch with exhibitors his company will be able to avoid the making of productions which are not wanted either by the public or exhibitors.

He asserted that during the war it was palpably brought home to every producer and exhibitor that the public—not only as a class, but generally—had learned to appreciate that moving pictures are not only worth while, but positively indispensable. Under the circumstances he advised that all exhibitors and producers get closer to one another and have a thorough, mutual understanding, in order to preserve and advance the industry which they have built for the future.

"I am glad to say that a new era has been entered upon and that we are more inclined today than ever before to treat each other more considerately," said Mr. Zukor, and he expressed the hope that this will continue for the mutual benefit of all.

During a brief interview with Mr. Zukor he said that his present view of the business as a whole is very encouraging. He believes, the war being over, that renewed activity in the building of new and larger theatres will be resumed shortly. This will serve as a strong incentive for producers to spend more and more money to make better and still better negatives.

Operators' Wage Scale to be Announced After Christmas

A MEETING of the Allied Amusement Association was held in Fraternity Hall, 19 West Adams street, Friday afternoon, December 20, with Peter J. Schaefer, president of the organization, in the chair.

Before proceeding with the business for which the call was made, Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was invited to address the exhibitors present. Mr. Zukor's remarks appear in the opening article of this letter.

The meeting then took up the demands of the members of Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., for a revision of their wage scale. After considerable discussion the opinion prevailed that the agreement made last year by the Allied Amusement Association and the moving picture operators had been made in good faith for a period of five years. Further discussion, however, was given the matter and it was finally resolved to refer the solution to a special committee of the association named for that purpose and a like committee of the operators, the outcome of the conference to be reported later.

On the committee appointed by the Association are Nathan Ascher, Joseph Hopp, M. A. Choynski, George Hopkinson, August Zilligen, Jr., August Krug and Peter J. Schaefer, ex-officio member.

On the operators' committee are Messrs. Maloy, Reynolds, Murphy, Possner, Berg and Schultz.

"The Finger of Justice" Plays at Orchestra Hall

THE Finger of Justice," which had been given a "pink" permit by Second Deputy Frazier some time ago and which was afterward revoked by Acting Chief of Police Alcock, was finally given a "pink" permit by Chief of Police Garrity and the picture was shown Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, December 16, 17 and 18, at Orchestra Hall. These presentations were given in aid of the Christmas benefit for the Frances Juveniłe Home, which cares for children suffering from sex diseases and the only institution of its kind in existence.

Owing to the adverse criticism of the Censorship Commission, which was given wide publicity in the daily papers, the attendance was not what it should have been. The critics of the daily press spoke favorably of the picture and advised all interested to go and see it, while those who did attend spoke favorably of the picture and its message.

Doctor Paul Smith, who is also a clergyman, the producer of the picture, delivered lectures at each of the presentations in Orchestra Hall, and created great interest in the good work he has accomplished out in the Barbary Coast district, in San Francisco.

Al Rosenthal, of the Greenwich Litho Company, New York, has the rights to "The Finger of Justice" for this territory. After the Chicago engagement he proceeded to Indianapolis, where the next showing will be given.

Freedman Makes Screen Debut.

J. L. Freedman, president of the Celebrated Players, made his debut in pictures last week and is rather proud of it, too. In the Gaumont News No. 38, released Monday, December 16, he is shown feeding several hundred pigeons from his office window, in the Business College building. The big flight comes every morning at 9 o'clock regularly, and if by any chance their benefactor does not appear promptly on the scene they show their impatience by flying around excitedly, while some of the more venturesome tap the window panes viciously with their bills.

Big New Picture Theatre for Loop.

The largest moving picture theatre in the "Loop" district will be built in the near future, on the ground site now occupied in part by the Rose and the Alcazar theatres, both owned by Harry C. Moir, president of the Morrison Hotel Company. An addition to the Hotel Morrison will be built just as soon as the cost of material becomes normal and the addition will increase the hotel capacity from 1,000 rooms to 1,700. The new theatre, facing on West Madison street, with a frontage of 85 feet, will have a seating capacity of 2,600 and will be included in the hotel building. This location is about the best in the city for transients, and is crowded at all times except during the small hours in the morning.

Ruby De Remer.

National "Safety First" Campaign.

Blake and Kleber, connected with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's New York office, came into Chicago last week and are at work in the interests of the national "Safety First" movement. They have outlined an extensive campaign by which they will reach every one in Chicago through "Careless America," a special film which is given to every exhibitor free. They will be here until about the first of the year, when they will continue their tour of every large city in the United States, on the same mission.

December 22 Attractions at New York Theatres

RIVOLI.—Nazimova in the Metro production, "Eye for Eye;" directed by Albert Capellani, was the screen star at the Rivoli for the week of December 22. As Hassouna, an Arab girl, Nazimova has a colorful role which she plays with her usual skill. "A Lot of Bull" as Mutt and Jeff offer it, and the Rivoli Animated Pictorial were also on the program. A pantomime, written and arranged by Hugo Riesenfeld, was the special Christmas week feature. The Rialto Male Quartette contributed the vocal numbers.

RIALTO.—"Little Miss Hoover," with Marguerite Clark at the head of the cast, was the feature picture at the Rialto. The story is from a novel by Maria Thompson Daviess, "The Golden Bird." Eugene O'Brien is a member of the cast. The Rialto Animated Magazine, "Vacation Land," and a new Sunshine comedy completed the list of screen attractions. The Rialto Male Quartette furnishes the vocal contributions.

STRAND.—D. W. Griffith's "The "Greatest Thing in Life," with Lillian Gish and Robert Harron in the leading roles, was the featured screen production at the Strand. Other numbers were the Topical Review and the Allied War Review. A special Christmas feature was "The Revolt of the Toy Makers," in which twenty-seven children appeared.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET.—First half, "Little Orphant Annie." Latter half, Enid Bennett in "Fuss and Feathers."

BROADWAY.—"The Heart of Humanity."

Walter W. Irwin To Be a Famous Players Official

WALTER W. IRWIN will be elected a vice-president, director and a member of the executive committee of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, according to announcement from the company this week. Mr. Irwin's future plans as an important figure in the motion picture industry were in doubt following the severing of his connection with Vitagraph, with which he had so long been associated.

Formal action completing the arrangements for Mr. Irwin's association with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will take place at the annual meeting of the stockholders of the company early in January. Mr. Irwin will displace none of the executives in charge of the producing and distribution of Paramount and Artcraft pictures. The office of first vice-president is held by Jesse L. Lasky, while Walter E. Greene, managing director of distribution, was elected to a vice-presidency some months ago.

The personnel of the executive committee of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with the addition of the new member, includes Messrs. Adolph Zukor, president; Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president; Arthur S. Friend, treasurer; Emil E. Shauer, assistant treasurer; Elek J. Ludvigh, secretary; Ralph Kohn, assistant secretary; Walter E. Greene and Walter W. Irwin, vice-presidents.

New Year's Day at Pershing Club.

New Year's Day at the Pershing Club for United States and Allied Officers corner of Madison avenue and Forty-fourth street, New York City, will be "Motion Picture Day." The entertainment for returned and wounded officers is provided by the artists of filmdom.

The Pershing Club, for which St. Bartholomew's Church and Chapel was altered into a modern club, is an organization unique in this country. Its aim is to provide home atmosphere and entertainment to the thousands of officers who pass through New York on their way home. An orchestra is provided for dancing every afternoon and even-

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By A. H. GIEBLER

LOS ANGELENOS HONOR NOTABLE TRIO

Theatre Owners Entertain Beach, Goldfish and Rothapfel and in Turn Are Entertained

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, president of the Goldwyn Corporation; S. L. Rothapfel, director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres in New York, and Rex Beach were entertained at a special luncheon given by the Theatre Owners' of Los Angeles at Hamburger's banquet rooms on December 18.

Frank McDonald, president of the Association, acted as toastmaster and introduced the guests, each of whom made an address to the large audience of exhibitors, exchangemen and others who attended the luncheon.

Mr. Rothapfel spoke on the subject of successful exhibition and exploitation of pictures. His remarks were witty, clever and carried much that was of value to his listeners.

He said among other things that the theatre must be the biggest thing about any amusement enterprise; that an atmosphere should be created that will make the theatre stand out as an attraction in itself, and that this atmosphere could be created around any theatre, great or small; that even a barn could be given an atmosphere that would set it aside from other barns.

The co-operation between owner and employes, he said, helps more than all else to complete the harmony of management that is necessary for the success of any show.

Samuel Goldfish's remarks shed considerable light on the producer's problems. He claims that most of the producers have not paid dividends to their stockholders for two years, and that many producers have been feeding themselves on vanity and the nice things said about them in the papers for some time.

Mr. Goldfish concluded his address with an appeal for better co-operation and a greater spirit of tolerance between producer, distributer and exhibitor—conditions which must come, he declared, if the business of making and exhibiting pictures is to escape stagnation and continue in an upward tendency.

The same brand of keen wit and humor that marks his books characterized the talk made by Rex Beach. He told in feeling tones of his first great ambition to own two pairs of suspenders, and having achieved that vaulting ambition, to own a home, and of now being compelled to leave his home to come to California to supervise his pictures.

All of Mr. Beach's remarks were not on the order of airy persiflage, however. He said much that was illuminating about stories, and threw more light on the mooted question of the war film than has been done heretofore. We will have war stories for many years to come, he said, because the war was one of the biggest and the most tragic things that ever happened, and it is so indelibly imprinted on the hearts and minds of the people that its tragedy, its drama and its comedy will linger indefinitely.

FOX GENERAL MANAGER HERE.

WINFIELD R. SHEEHAN, General Manager of the Fox Film Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles last week after a trip through all of the northern states, with stops at Chicago, Portland, Seattle, San Francisco and many smaller towns and cities along the route.

Mr. Sheehan says that he found evidences of coming prosperity for the films everywhere, and that all evidences promise that 1919 will be a big year.

General Manager Sheehan will remain in Los Angeles for a few weeks and return to New York and sail for England to look over the field there and gather intimate details of the demand for pictures on the continent of Europe.

Jennings Outlaw Film Winning Praise.

"The Lady of the Dugout," the film made by Al and Frank Jennings, and based on true incidents of their outlaw days, which has been running at the Mason Opera House, is winning much praise from all who see it.

The feature is refreshing in its naturalness and freedom of the false and melodramatic atmosphere that mar many films that pretend to depict frontier life. Al Jennings appears in person at the evening performance and delivers an address that is as much of an attraction as the picture. Mr. Jennings talks pithily and to the point; there is wit, humor and pathos to his remarks and much of historical value.

Dinner to Messrs. Beach, Goldfish and Rothapfel by the Theatre Owners' Association of Los Angeles.

It is a pity that Al Jennings can not accompany his film and deliver his lecture wherever it is shown.

Mae Marsh Married.

When Mae Marsh left New York a few weeks ago, no one in that burg knew that she was married, but a secret like that doesn't remain one long out here in the free and boundless West. On September 2, right there in New York City, Mae was married to Louis Lee Armes, formerly well known in newspaper circles in St. Louis, New York and other cities, and at the time of the wedding a student in the Boston naval flying school. The couple decided to keep their marriage a secret, because in the first place it was no one's business but their own, and they just wanted to see how long they could keep it strictly to themselves.

Mr. Armes, who is on leave of absence for the holidays, is visiting his bride in Los Angeles, but as he has not been discharged from service, he will return to Boston early in January.

Miss Marsh has suffered a relapse of a spell of flu that she contracted in New York, and that she thought she had fully recovered from before coming to Los Angeles, which has kept her from beginning a new production at the Goldwyn studios.

Kerrigans All Had Flu.

J. Warren Kerrigan, his sister Kathleen, who has been visiting him from the East; Mrs. Walter Kerrigan, a sister-in-law of Jack, and her two kiddies, Virginia and Wallace, Jr., have all had a rather serious siege of influenza. Kathleen's illness developed into pneumonia. All the Kerrigans are now on the road to recovery, however.

Burning Candle at Both Ends.

Fred Niblo, director at the Ince studio, is holding down two jobs these days. He directs the Enid Bennett company in pictures during the day, then motors out to the Julian Eltinge residence in the evening and puts the Eltinge company through rehearsals for a new musical play.

Demurrer Sustained.

Earle Williams won the first point in the suit for breach of promise brought against him by Roma Raymond, of New York. The judge held that the complaint was faulty. Permission was given Miss Raymond's attorneys to file a new complaint.

Film Censor Dies.

Edward J. Purcell, for two years film censor in Los Angeles, died at the Sisters Hospital on December 17, of influenza.

Griffith Premiere a Social Event.

The first night of the run of D. W. Griffith's new picture, "The Greatest Thing in Life," at Clune's Auditorium brought out all the celebrities of the social as well as the film world. Leaders of Los Angeles' high society gave box and theatre parties, and the large auditorium presented a spectacle of handsome gowns and evening dress that suggested a first night at the opera. D. W. Griffith made a talk to the audience that was greeted with great enthusiasm.

B. C. Steele, manager of the Symphony Theatre, is spending the holidays in Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Steele will visit Buffalo, Chicago, Washington, D. C., and St. Louis before he returns to California.

The Kinema Theatre is running "The Queen of the Sea," with Annette Kellerman during holiday week. This is the first time the picture has been shown in Los Angeles.

Baker Boosts Health Game.

Thomas G. Baker, formerly in the press department of the Universal Film Company, has been appointed publicity director for the medical advisory committee, and will direct the four-minute men who speak in theatres and other places of amusement, in connection with the campaign to eliminate influenza from the city.

Studio Shots.

KATHLEEN KIRKHAM, who was called to Chicago recently on account of the illness of her sister, has returned to Los Angeles. Kathleen is one of Doug. Fairbank's supporters in "Arizona."

Harry W. Walthall was all ready to begin work on his new National production, "The Long Lane's Turning," when he had to go and take the flu.

Five of the Rolin-Pathe studio forces, including Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels, have been sufferers of flu.

Edward Sloman is leaving the American Film Company, after a long and successful career as director of that organization.

Bessie Love, who went to Mt. Lowe to recuperate from a recent illness, has returned to the Vitagraph studio and has begun work on a new feature under the direction of David Smith.

Louise Glaum has been working only three weeks on her new picture for Ince-Paramount, and already three studios have been used: the Ince, formerly the Biograph, at Georgia and Girard streets; the Selig plant at Edendale, and the new Ince studio at Culver City.

Robert McKim, chief villain at the Ince plant for several years, is working in the new Rex Beach production at the Goldwyn studios.

Al Jennings and Peggy Hyland are two movie stars who made public appearances at Red Cross shops last week.

Nell Shipman has received word that her brother, Maurice Barham, in the Allied service, was wounded in action in France just before the signing of the armistice.

Charlotte Burton, wife of William Russell, is seriously ill of pneumonia at the home of her mother in Santa Barbara.

Dorothy Gish and her director, Elmer Clifton, have both recovered from flu and are back on the job at the Sunset studio, in a picture entitled "Boots."

Al Ray, just to be different, spent the last two weeks battling with a case of ptomaine poisoning.

Clarke Thomas, representative of B. A. Rolfe, is in town, and states that Mr. Rolfe will begin making pictures in Los Angeles shortly after January 1st.

Allan Dwan and Jimmy Hogan have gone to New York to spend Christmas. Both promised to be back in California immediately after the holidays.

Viola Dana has begun work under the direction of Herbert Blache at Metro, on a play written for her by her late husband and director, John Collins. Milton Sills has the leading supporting role.

Dustin Farnum has been away on a hunting trip in Mexico, and reports that duck and quail are specially plentiful this year.

Winifred Westover plays the part of Fatty Arbuckle's sweetheart in a new comedy just being started by Roscoe.

Mary Thurman, one of the Mack Sennett beauties, will play an important role in support of Bryant Washburn in a coming Lasky feature.

Madge Kennedy arrived quietly on Dec. 13, without so much as a single newspaper reporter discovering that she was in town until several days had passed. Miss Kennedy is hunting a bungalow, or a place to live, near the Goldwyn studios at Culver City.

Nina Byron is playing opposite Wallace Reid in a new picture.

Jay Morley is one of the fortunate screen players who worked steadily all through the flu epidemic.

Cecil B. De Mille, his brother, William De Mille, and Edgar Selwyn, all arrived from New York last week.

Ruth Clifford in "The Game's Up" (Universal).

Charles E. Whittaker, who has written a number of the Maurice Tourneur successes, has come to Los Angeles to continue his work with M. Tourneur.

Monte M. Katterjohn's first production by his own company will be called "Hearts of the Stampede."

Henry Otto will direct May Allison in her next Metro feature.

Alfred Whitman is Bessie Barriscale's leading man in "The Dancer," Miss Barriscale's newest picture under the B. B. brand.

Francois Du Barry, formerly of the Mutual in New York, and lately with the Y. M. C. A. in France, has come to Los Angeles to re-enter the film industry as an actor.

Seena Owen is leading lady for Tom Moore in his new Goldwyn produciton.

When Mary Miles Minter was arrested for speeding one day last week, she explained to the judge that she was on her way to an important Red Cross meeting in connection with the Christmas roll call. It was the judge's opinion that the Red Cross ought to be above the speed laws—so Mary didn't pay any fine.

Jack Oberle is alive. His mother, Florence Oberle, has just received a letter dated November 19, eight days after the date of his supposed death. Jack had been very ill and away from his regiment for several weeks.

Ora Carew, who has just branched out for herself in the film producing line, is preparing to begin work on her first production within a few days under the direction of Walter Wright.

Nazimova Leases Los Angeles Home.

Nazimova is now a full-fledged resident of California. The star has leased and is now installed as mistress of the beautiful Hays estate in Laurel Canyon, about two miles from the Nazimova studios in Hollywood.

The new Nazimova residence is situated on a tract of several acres of cultivated ground, and is surrounded by orange and lemon trees, banana plants and many-hued flowers.

HOW THE LENS WAR SITUATION WAS MET

The Precision Machine Company Takes the Bull by the Horns and Then Converts It Into Beef

PRIOR to the entry of our country into the war the majority of the supply of lenses used in motion picture projectors was distributed between three of the leading optical concerns in the country. With the declaration of war, there began an immediate checking up by the Government of all manufacturers who were engaged in the producing of things essential to the Government.

One of the industries that received particular attention was the optical business. The sudden Government demand for high grade binoculars for army, navy and aeroplane use proved an overwhelming load on the manufacturers.

One of the first steps taken by the Government was to assure itself priority rights to the major portion of the output of these plants—leaving very little to be distributed through the commercial trade of which the projection lens was only a small part. So great was the Government demand for optical glasses that "four minute speakers" all over the country urged their theatre audiences to loan whatever glasses they might have to Uncle Sam. Newspapers and posters were also used as mediums for the same purpose.

This sudden and wholly unlooked for demand had a telling effect upon the motion picture industry. The manufacturer of projectors was specially hard hit—to send out new equipments without lenses would be impractical, causing untold inconvenience and in many cases would require the exhibitor opening a new house to use a different size picture from that which his screen and stage had been designed for.

This shortage also forced many exhibitors to change their screen sizes at once, thus adding another weight to the overburdened lens business.

Machine manufacturers scoured the country through their various distributors for all available lenses. Notices were issued to conserve the dealers' supply of projection lenses by only selling in cases of utmost necessity. At the Government's request, the manufacturers of projectors agreed to restrict the purchasing of lenses with equipment to three sizes—four, five and six inches on projector and sixteen, twenty and twenty-four inches on stereopticon lenses.

One of the optical concerns who were under contract to supply the Precision Machine Company with lenses had a good portion of their output taken over by the Government, leaving them free, however, to supply the projection lenses according to their contract, but with little thought of the machine man and the exhibitor, they suddenly stopped making projection lenses entirely and left the Simplex high and dry—and here is where the proverbial farsightedness and characteristic ability to handle big situations stood Edwin S. Porter, vice-president of the Precision Machine Company, in good stead.

He decided to manufacture his own lenses.

The manufacture of lenses is a business entirely apart from that of machine manufacture. Many to whom Mr. Porter confided his plans tried to dissuade him from taking this step. They pointed out the unfamiliar channels, the intricacies to be encountered and numerous other things, all of which would have discouraged a less determined man.

Equips $25,000 Plant

His first step was to secure the services of the best optical expert available. A $25,000 plant was equipped at Morris Park, L. I. The very latest machines used in lens making were installed. Several special machines containing exclusive features were specially built by the Precision Machine Company and the finest brains of the lens industry were engaged, with instructions to turn out lenses which carried with them the same high quality that has brought the Simplex machine to the front.

It had been customary, in receiving the regular supply of commercial lenses at the Simplex factory, to subject them to certain tests in order to maintain the Simplex standard before including them in the equipment. This testing process resulted in a remarkable number of rejections. With this in mind the Simplex lens factory turned over for examination the first dozen lenses some weeks ago and upon being tested out and examined by optical experts were declared to be superior to the commercial lenses now in use, each of them measuring up to the standard.

There was apparent greater focal depth, brighter illumination, and a universal definition distributed evenly over the field, proving that by combining skill with utmost care, regular uniformity of perfection can be carried out in the making of projection lenses.

The Precision Machine Company announces that it will, as soon as the production warrants, offer the new lens to the trade, including its competitors in the machine building line.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

NOTHING more strongly points out the necessity of exhibitor organization and close co-operation than some of the experiences that exhibitors are having with boards of health, ministerial associations and newspapers in various localities. Because of habit local newspapers quite generally propose the closing of theatres as a means of preventing the spread of influenza. Responding to this newspaper clamor local boards of health have quite generally adopted that idea as the best expedient, and now, as has been mentioned in these columns, only theatre crowds are dangerous. Common sense leads us to believe that there is no more danger of infection in a well ventilated theatre than in one's private home. There are so many other kinds of crowds, as our Los Angeles correspondent points out, that are more dangerous, such as the department store jams and the street car jams, with attendant dangers none of which health boards take notice of or warn against.

Now, why are these dangers not mentioned and why is so much emphasis placed upon the dangers of crowded theatres?

"Liaison" is a word that has come into prominence during the recent world war. It designates the methods of keeping one unit of a battle line in touch with the other units of the same line so that dangerous gaps in the line may not occur through which the enemy might sneak. It would be a good word for motion picture exhibitors to add to their vocabulary. As the situation stands there are too many gaps in the line. There should be a closer "liaison" or understanding between the exhibitor and the newspaper and between the exhibitor and the health board. If there was things that are happening to destroy our business would not occur so often. The enemy would not slip through the line so often.

You will remember that newspapers had a habit, once upon a time, of making every youthful delinquent say that he "got the idea from the movies." It sounded smart to the writer and the newspaper owner didn't care, but when the newspaper owner began to get some business from the "movies" and the slander was called to his attention he had it stopped. At least, you never see that little knock any more. The newspaper is still getting business from the "movies," many exhibitors are paying big money for advertising and, while we do not mean to infer that patronage should be used or could be used to suppress truth, but the newspaper man has a deeper interest in his patrons than in those who are not and he will not unnecessarily offend them or damage their businesses.

The point is that if such matters as the influenza scare and its effect on the theatre were brought to the attention of the newspaper owner or manager much of this hysterical propaganda now being printed would be stopped. All that is required is a proper presentation of the subject to the newspaper man, and intelligent newspaper men are not given to sensationalism if it is to the deteriment of the community in which they live. To secure such presentation exhibitors should be so united that their story will have weight when it is presented.

The exhibitors' proposition is a business proposition and should be presented in a businesslike way. We have heard of delegations of motion picture men descending in force upon boards of health and demanding that certain acts of that board be rescinded or that certain action be taken. At once a conflict of opinion is created and a feeling of antagonism is engendered. The result is nil—they get nowhere. A "liaison" should be established between the exhibitors and the board of health or the newspaper and the public interests should be conserved by all.

This brings to a helpful bit of information secured by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry bearing upon the influenza situation. It is the purpose of the N. A. M. P. I. to place in the hands of all exhibitors means of fighting the prevailing hysteria which has been engendered by too much newspaper talk of the wrong sort. The influenza was as bad in New York as it has been in any large city, but theatres and churches were not closed. This letter from Dr. Royal S. Copeland, New York's health officer, tells why.

Department of Health.
December 17, 1918.

National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Times Building, City.

I am pleased to comply with your request to furnish you with my observations regarding the relation of the theatre, and the motion picture theatre in particular, to the recent epidemic of influenza in New York City. As you know I was steadfastly of the opinion that in a city like New York it would be folly to expect to obtain relief through the closing of the moving picture theatres, when the crowded transportation lines and other densely packed places of assembly were permitted to operate. There never was any doubt in my mind regarding the status of the well ventilated, sanitary theatre, but I did have serious objection to allowing the unsanitary hole in-the-wall theatre to continue. Every place of the latter sort which our inspectors found was closed immediately and was not allowed to reopen until the necessary alterations and improvements in operation were made.

In view of our experience in New York City, where the death rate was the lowest of any large city on the coast, we are convinced that our decision to keep the theatres open was wisely made.

The moving picture theatre was of great assistance to the Department of Health in furthering the work of public health education during the epidemic. Managers of the various theatres gave relief talks before the opening of each performance, advising their patrons of the requirements of the Board of Health regarding sneezing, coughing and expectorating. In every motion picture theatre in the city messages were flashed on the screen with appeals from the Board of Health for the cooperation of the public in stamping out the epidemic. Managers limited their audiences to the number of persons that could be seated and prohibited smoking for the period of the epidemic.

My principal purpose in keeping open the theatres in New York City was to prevent the spread of panic and hysteria, and thus to protect the public from a condition of mind which would predispose it to physical ills.

Properly operated theatres were valuable factors in maintaining the morale of the city, and New York City was notably free from a hysterical sense of calamity during our epidemic, and I am firmly convinced that it would have been unwise to have closed them.

Conditions are no different in any other city. Isn't it reasonable to suppose that if Dr. Copeland's letter were placed in the hands of any intelligent health officer he would understand its logic and be influenced thereby? But to make such a campaign effective exhibitors must unite; they must get together and present their claims in a businesslike manner.

1919 AWAITS NEW LEADERS

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

OUR best business men are chiefly concerned in getting things done, rather than fussing about the manner of doing them, and it is obviously silly to underestimate the importance of those vigorous and well-trained minds now engaged in trying to bring moving pictures up to a standard of production equal to the quality of demand. If it was purely a question of horse-power plus horse-sense, no fifteen thousand theatres could accommodate the millions of people who would flock to the picture shows, and reissues would not be necessary. There is something else needed.

The business world is one of financial sensibilities.

It is supported by energy on one side.

On the other should be clear-sightedness.

Neither the halt nor the blind can succeed where leadership means organization, system, elimination of wasteful expenditure and sound judgment on an infinity of detail in publicity and distribution, so those who are hobbled by tradition, or who have gone lame with constant stumbling, or who are lop-sided with predudice against new methods, may be counted out of the race at the start, but there are many who have the speed and may get lost on the way from sheer inability to see straight, even when the right course is pointed out to them over and over again. Such men fail from lack of ability to adapt themselves to changing conditions.

All business conditions are now greatly changed.

What was good last year may utterly fail this one.

Men who have survived disasters of production and distribution, who have pulled through with a profit, who have had some narrow escapes just the same, are not going to weather the season of 1919 by repeating the same old errors of judgment and policy. They will simply add their concerns to the long list of down-and-outs, some of them enormously capitalized, who could not grasp the ideas that our world is progressive, and that progress means change.

Moving pictures have one great, big significance.

They can graphically portray the life in us and around us.

That life is simply character in action.

Why talk about plays of "action," as you did last year, unless you can be made to understand that there is nothing dramatic about any kind of action unless some clash of character, or powerful manifestation of character, brings that action to an interesting and decisive crisis. You may be an optimist on the moving picture busines, but you will land up in the Vale of Tears unless you grasp the meaning of character in drama, the fact that even our national character is subject to change under new and powerful influences, that old subjects are not vital, and that we must keep pace with the times.

Perhaps you are going to hitch your wagon to a star?

Keep the wheels on earth this year if you do.

The whole world was changed by our boys in France.

Millions of those boys are coming back with bigger and broader ideas than they ever had before, fresh from earth's greatest tragedy, yet sweetened by our heartfelt showing of sympathy, more capable of according justice to their fellow men, more tenderly considerate of women and children, manlier men than any of us have ever been, and ready to diffuse their feelings and thoughts among loved ones waiting for them at home.

This whole nation may be changed by the boys from France.

It has been changed socially during their absence.

Two powerful influences point the way for 1919 drama.

To reach the full-blossomed enthusiasm of our men, to be in accord with the new spirit of our women, we must renounce our allegiance to the frazzled autocracy of convention, encourage imagination, vision and faith in our future. You thought last year you could hire dramatists by the week. What you got from most of them were vehicles of no particular purpose and weak conception. Real stars are as heaven-born as the poets, but you had an idea last year that you could manufacture them, though you left out the potency and "color" of drama, the fine fragrance and sacred beauty of its characterization and atmosphere. Don't try to put over that stuff on the New American of 1919 unless you wish to be classed as a movie Bolsheviki!

WISDOM IN SOLID CHUNKS

By Edward Weitzel.

IT is the part of justice and modesty to explain at once that the chunks of solid wisdom referred to in the heading of this article are the work of Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, and were culled from a contribution of his to the holiday number of Exhibitors' Herald and Motography. "The Producer and the Exhibitor—Speaking for Both" is the caption of the article, and its author doesn't waste any time in handing out bouquets to himself, his company, the moving picture industry in general and the worth of the reviewer in particular. But he speaks his mind with a freedom and conciseness that leave no doubt as to his familiarity with all sides of his subject, and the sum of his chunks of wisdom prove quite easily that the school of experience is many long laps ahead of every other method of finding out things.

The opening paragraph foregoes all preliminaries: "The motion picture business is like a bucking broncho—you ride along nicely when all of a sudden you're thrown. That has been true of the motion picture business since it began, but never until this year has everybody been bucked off at the same time."

Here is experience without limit. And the man that has been thrown off a bucking broncho or dropped out of a balloon knows just how it feels.

The first chunk of wisdom on which the writer feels competent to express a conviction is contained in this statement: "This matter of picture selection is a matter of opinion, and the exhibitors in many cases know less about it than the critics of the trade press."

This is a most difficult chunk of wisdom to assimilate.

There are several practical problems of production and distribution touched upon in the Rowland article that lie outside of the experience of the present writer. The following statement, however, is not of this class. It is, perhaps, the most important of them all:

"Exhibitors all seem to want to be producers, but I tell you frankly the exhibitor has no idea of all the obstacles and difficulties in the way of the production of good motion pictures."

Long and careful consideration of this bit of practical knowledge is advised for the exhibitors that are members of the movement for better pictures. The sincerity of their intention cannot be questioned, but a full understanding of the limitations of the producer, no matter how earnest his desire and how thorough his efforts to turn out pictures of the highest artistic and commercial grade, is necessary if any attempted adjustment is to have equitable results.

Every producer gets the best results of which he is capable according to his system of production, and all systems are susceptible, more or less, to improvement as time and experience bring additional knowledge. The elements in the business that are beyond his control are the chief stumbling blocks in his path. No producer of either screen or stage fiction turns out plays of uniform merit, especially when considered from the commercial side. And no producer ever will. Factors that refuse absolutely to be bound down by any fixed rule which skill and long study may devise can always defeat him.

The Rowland article mentions one of them: "There always is going to be a dearth of really original material. This is one of the producer's problems, which is not appreciated or understood."

The nearest approach to a remedy for this condition is improved technic in working over the old material. But "a picture studio is not a shoe factory," and the "care and time in production" that "are the things that make great pictures possible" do not always achieve this end. The scenario that promises the most satisfactory results may, in spite of the best efforts of everyone connected with its production, develop qualities that are fatal to its hoped for success. Only actual experience teaches how much labor and expense are required to patch up the defects and give the picture sufficient merit to get back the mere cost of production.

Richard A. Rowland stated a fact that the exhibitors will do well to keep in mind when he wrote: "The creative side of the business is the hardest game in the world."

RELIGION AND THE FILM

By Robert C. McElravy

ONE of the chief claims of the film upon public interest in the past is the fact that it has never hesitated to explore the spiritual depths of man's nature. It had become the fashion of other arts, very largely, up to the time of the world war, to play upon the surface of life, as though their very existence depended upon their ability to avoid ethical problems of any kind. There have been some notable exceptions, but the trend of the times was such that the established arts were unable as a whole to resist being engulfed in the commercial whirlpool. Only the film managed in some measure to escape, and this was in a sense due to the fact that it was a new, untried experiment and not regarded seriously.

The film has been child of the people—a foundling left upon the doorstep of art, reared by an industrial midwife and housed promiscuously at first in the Penny Arcade, the Nickelodeon and the corner grocery. It has known suffering and neglect, but it knows its own people and how best to amuse them. It knows that the deepest thing in human nature is kindliness, because it has been so long obscured by vice and pleasure and contempt. It does not hesitate to dig deep for its stories, for it understands that it is under the hard surface that real values are found.

The screen has given us a crude but penetrating and deserving art. It has been, in its more serious moments, concerned with political and social reform, civic righteousness, the obligations of big business, and man's general responsibility to his fellows. In this manner it has proved its ultimate worth, for not to be concerned with these things is to miss the supreme function of any art.

Not infrequently we have seen religion itself cropping out in film stories, the screen thus visualizing the highest aspirations of man's soul. We have had repeated allegories of a religious nature, stories of the life of Christ, some striking interpretations of the Book of Genesis, and biblical tales of many descriptions. Even in the ordinary film story it has been no exceptional thing to find religious observances pictured in various forms.

This has not always been accomplished with artistic results, for while the upward impulse is always a desirable thing in stories, it is a difficult thing to transmit religion in concrete form to the screen. The best effects have undoubtedly been attained in a broad, general sense rather than in special forms.

In entering the field of religion the producer is treading upon sacred ground, almost every inch of which has been the subject of dispute among opposing creeds. There are a few common symbols that are generally acceptable to all devout persons—the cross and the bible itself being perhaps most frequently used. But care should always be observed, in making pictures for general distribution, about adopting too conspicuously the religious rituals of any one creed. We have seen some very fine examples of films, in which religion appears, that were marred for many observers by too close an adherence to special forms. There are of course certain stories that demand this, where the characters are manifestly united to a particular faith, and this is always excusable. But to give a story particular religious rites where such rites are not demanded by the nature of the narrative, is to raise at once the thought of special propaganda. We have seen this cry raised with reference to film stories where it did not seem at all justified, where perhaps the director used a certain religious ritual because he happened to be familiar with it, but this only proves the necessity for caution in this matter.

There can of course not be the slightest objection to the production of films for purposes of religious propaganda for private distribution; we should think churches of various denominations might find the practice a valuable one. But for productions to be placed in general circulation, it is always better to keep within generally recognized forms that will be acceptable to all observers. And perhaps the best way of expressing the high aspirations of a particular character, from an artistic sense, is to avoid the actual employment of any religious form whatever. After all the device is usually one of convenience and hence lacks dramatic effect; it is better as a whole to let the good works of a character shine through the general outlines of the part played in the story itself. In a way, perhaps the most successful religious stories on the screen have been those devoted strictly to biblical history, or in occasional touches employed to show the soul struggles of certain characters in a story.

When religion is introduced into a story for the purpose of moralizing, it is usually ineffective. It is almost as great a sin, from the artistic standpoint, to intrude morals upon an audience as it is to exploit vice. The mission of art is to entertain, to "hold a mirror up to nature," to strike a balance between the conflicting forces of life and interpret the world to itself. When it does this successfully, it clears the eyes of the people and promotes straight thinking. Its accomplishment, by indirection, is sometimes greater than that of much preaching and exhortation.

URGES OBJECTION TO OUR WAR FILMS

Canadian Daily Wants Agitation Begun by Ontario Taken Up by All Other Provinces in the Dominion

THAT all Canadian Provinces should follow up the action of T. W. McGarry, provincial treasurer for Ontario, in raising official objection to the presentation of American war dramas and topical pictures on the screens of Ontario, was urged in an editorial appearing in the Calgary Albertan. This step, according to the writer of the editorial, would form one way to influence the producers of films to a consideration of the desires of the Canadian public. It was urged that Canadians seemed to be helpless in the matter up to the present.

The Albertan declared that the action taken by the Ontario official was not an indication of small country peevishness or international sentiment. It was considered more or less a matter of commercial readjustment and a desired change between producer and consumer. The paper argued that American producers had "dumped" anything and everything upon the Canadians just as it suited their convenience. There is no lack of sympathy with Americanism, it was pointed out, but "scream eagle" productions made Canadians squirm in their seats. It was urged that the Government, as a whole, should take action, so that theatre patrons throughout the country would "get a square deal."

Agitation Localized in Toronto.

The agitation against American war pictures to date, however, has been more or less localized in Toronto, where T. W. McGarry holds forth in his official capacity. Mr. McGarry followed up his first "proclamation" against the American soldier films by announcing that he was attending various theatres to see if the exchange managers and exhibitors were taking steps to adjust the situation.

Two of the prominent Toronto theatres presented features and other pictures during the week of December 16 which were Canadian or English in character. Manager W. M. Elliott of the Regent Theatre reproduced, in fac simile form, the official letter of T. W. McGarry, which had been sent to local exchanges, and he announced that "to comply with T. W. McGarry's request" the Regent was offering an English film success, "Inside the Lines."

Manager Bernstein, of Loew's Theatre, Toronto, selected "Canadian" pictures for his program of December 16 also, the feature attraction being "The Law of the North," a Canadian story in which Charles Ray is starred. Another picture was the first of a series of Canadian official views showing Canadian troops in France. The first reel was made up of pictures of the Third (Toronto) Battalion. Bernstein announced that he would follow the policy of giving preference to Canadian stories or Canadian topical views in future.

Washington's Prosperity To Continue Indefinitely

During a visit of the last few days to Select Pictures' home office, V. P. Whitaker, manager of Select's Washington branch, spoke encouragingly of the outlook for business in the future at the nation's capital and denied some of the rumors of backsliding conditions which recently have become current.

"Despite the fact that thousands of war workers have left Washington during the past month, and are leaving every few days, the city is still above its normal population," he said. "This will remain true for so long a time to come that it seems foolish for anyone to state that conditions in Washington will recede to a pre-war basis.

"Washington has been badly overcrowded—so badly overcrowded that life in the city was distinctly an uncomfortable existence. The cutting down of some of the larger emergency departments has only slightly relieved this congestion. Washington, a small sized city, which has often been spoken of as an overgrown town, finds its population covering thousands of citizens more than its physical accommodations were designed for. For years the city must grow and extend in order to try to overcome these conditions. And whoever heard of a growing city that was not prosperous?"

May Restore Lightless Nights.

Because of the serious fuel conditions which still exist in the northeastern states, where, until a short time ago, "lightless night" regulations prevailed, the Fuel Administration has announced that there will be no slowing up of the campaign for fuel economy, and the motion picture houses in the affected section will be utilized to the fullest possible extent to drive home the lesson of economy.

A series of new coal saving slogans has been distributed throughout this section for use in the theatres in conjunction with other advertising which will be done. This action was decided upon, it was announced at the Fuel Administration, because there is still need for economy in the use of coal, resulting from curtailment of production caused by the influenza epidemic and the letting up of the high tension of effort in the producing fields since the signing of the armistice.

It is possible that, unless the weather remains such as to permit the free movement of coal, it may be necessary in some localities to restore the lightless night regulations. The section affected includes New England, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and part of Pennsylvania.

How to Avoid Accidents Taught by Pictograph

ONE of the subjects in the 148th issue of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph entitled "Taking Chances" should be of particular interest to the public at large, especially if it cares to have a few of its faults pointed out.

"Taking Chances" is one of the best, and we are not sure that it does not lay just claim to being the best of those films dealing with the carelessness of both pedestrians and automobilists in the city streets. The picture covers considerable footage, and at the same time teaches its lesson of how to avoid accidents briefly and forcefully.

We are taught, for instance, that it is best to be careful in crossing a street where a street car turns the corner—"a side swipe may injure you for life." Then there are the dangers of crossing the street in the middle of the block, or of darting in front of a slow moving vehicle only to be struck down by a swiftly moving motor car. Getting off a street car while it is moving and trying to board a train in motion are careless habits, the possible consequences of which are graphically described in the picture.

The dangers of driving an automobile on a wet pavement without taking the precaution to put on chains are clearly illustrated. And in fact there are few phases of the dangers of street traffic that have not been covered.

"Wanderer and Whozitt" Semi-Educational Gem

THE fifth of the new Robert Bruce scenics is quite out of the ordinary for the reason that it features not one dog as did that delightful film of a year ago "Me and My Dog," but two. Nor is there a single human being visible in the entire picture.

The dogs numering two, as aforesaid, consist of one Great Dane and one small white terrier. The Dane wandering alone in the hills suddenly becomes conscious of the presence of some one besides himself and is not surprised when there appears on the horizon the woolly head of the Whozitt. The Wanderer and the Whozitt become fast friends, seeing that they have only each other to chum with, and they clamber over the rocks, sleep side by side at the edge of some mirrored lake, or now and again indulge in a canine boxing match.

Just how these dogs were induced to pose so beautifully for the camera is a puzzle. We would judge, however, from the perfectly unconscious manner in which they both amble through the picture, that they were just snapped as they played about at their usual pranks, or happened to have dropped into postures of repose. The result is a semi-educational, semi-comic scenic picture of the most delightful kind.

The picture was photographed in the vicinity of Jackson's Hole, Wyoming. The dogs rode from their kennel at Portland, Ore., 1,500 miles to appear in the picture, which formed a portion of the program at the Rivoli Theatre, New York City, the week of Dec. 15.

"The Island of Borneo."

Borneo, the third largest island in the world, and home of some 2,000,000 Dyaks and other peoples, both savage and civilized, yields up some interesting pictorial views according to a Post made Pathe film. The scenes show many of the natives, including one "wild man" who does not appear in the least camera shy. The boys climb cocoanut trees, train young wild animals for pets, and the men of the Dutch police force use long poles in breaking up native street brawls.

Official War Review No. 23."

The leading feature of this instalment is a picture of flame throwers in action on the Italian front, with the famous Arditi division in massed infantry attack. This gives a vivid idea of what this sort of warfare meant during the great conflict. Scenes from Cambrai and St. Quentin are included, showing observation balloons, tanks, ruined buildings, dead men and horses and other sights growing out of the great battles there. Some scenes from the German fleet surrender close the number.

Screen Magazine's Subjects.

The 98th issue of the Screen Magazine which was released Dec. 23 contained several subjects of informational interest. Among these is "Reshoeing the Army," in which the old worn-out shoes of the soldiers are seen being transformed by efficient modern methods of repairing. This is shown by courtesy of the Committee on Public Information. Other interesting subjects are "The Evolution of a Gun" and "Self-Defence for the Ladies." There is also a brief bit on fashions and the relation which the ribbon will bear to the attire of the next season.

Short Items of Interest.

Carl H. Carson, school department manager of the Educational Films Corporation, predicts that instruction by motion pictures will largely replace textbook teaching in the new era following the declaration of peace. The first subject to be picturized for the schools is geography, in which fascinating motion picture travels will replace the old stereotyped forms of instruction.

"The Finger of Justice," Rev. Paul Smith's morality picture of which the New Jersey State rights are controlled by Thomas Toby Mangan, is being booked on a percentage basis throughout that state and is enjoying success.

One of the most impressive and most appropriate Christmas offerings for the eventful season of 1918 is the Red Cross propaganda picture, "The Greatest Gift." This picture, which was reviewed in our issue of Dec. 14, is not alone an artistic success, but carries with it that wonderful lesson contained in the scriptural quotation, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." The picture is not more than one reel in length.

Minneapolis Exchangemen Form New Organization

THE organization fever, an offshoot of the influenza epidemic, is now rampant in Northwest film circles. This fact was emphasized recently when the exchangemen of Minneapolis formed a new association following closely upon the action of exhibitors in organizing a second league in Minneapolis, to work in the interests of the industry.

The new exchangemen's organization is known as the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade, Inc. It is incorporated under the laws of Minnesota and it will become affiliated with the Board of Trade of Minneapolis. The following officers have been elected: President, E. A. Eschman, manager World Film Corporation Exchange; vice-president, E. R. Pearson, First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Northwest; secretary, W. C. Lestico, Triangle Film Corporation; treasurer, Benjamin Friedman, Friedman Film Corporation; counsel, Benjamin Goldman.

Baby Marie Goes on Tour.

Baby Marie Osborne, the diminutive Pathe star, upon the expiration of her holiday visit to New York started on a journey which will include twenty-four cities between the Atlantic and the Pacific. At the end of the journey Leon T. Osborne will begin independent production of these juvenile pictures, which, within a short time, have firmly established Baby Marie as a star both at home and in foreign lands. The volume of letters sent to her by both children and grownups keeps a private secretary busy answering them and mailing photographs.

Fisher Completes First Vitagraph Play.

Captain Bud Fisher has turned his fertile imagination to the screen. The cartoonist has just completed his first photoplay, a comedy of errors, entitled "The Adventure Shop," for Vitagraph. The comedy is issued as a Star Series release, with Corinne Griffith in the stellar role. Kenneth Webb directed the production.

"The Adventure Shop" is a delightfully conceived and cleverly constructed story of an ennuied society girl's effort to derive a new thrill from life.

In support of Miss Griffith is Walter McGrail, Robert Gaillard, Warren Chandler, Priestly Morrison, Freeman Wood and Fred Smith.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Programming.

PROBABLY no better example of short-sightedness has ever been given in the history of the motion picture than the handling of Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms." It would seem that practically every exhibitor used the picture, yet few used it to the best advantage. "Shoulder Arms" is beyond question one of the best comedies ever shown. It was clean, clever and fairly jammed with comedy bits. It made money everywhere, but it did not make all the money it could because of its poor handling. We saw it lately at a neighborhood house. We had seen it on the initial showing, but when it came into the suburbs we took our small son to see it. The house was crowded, two-thirds of the attendance being composed of children under twelve. When we went in we were shown the sad story of a young girl who had married an old man for his money. When she slipped her nightie off her shoulder and went downstairs to vamp him, he merely tells her she will catch cold if she is not careful; so she goes upstairs, and later falls in love with a younger man. It was lovely stuff to spread before a couple of hundred kiddies, and their parents had an enjoyable time trying to take the filth out of the plot in response to the demand of "What does it mean, Mamma?" "What's the girl doing, Mamma?" Any person with sense enough to get off the car tracks when a train is coming should know better than to couple such a product of the sewers with a comedy that would appeal strongly to children, not because of the children, but because its presence on such a bill would emphasize to the elders the uncertainty of picture production. It was an error that cost that particular house a lot of money in return visits, and it was such a stupid and inexcusable blunder; yet this house is by no means alone in such criminal carelessness. Half of the houses simply put the comedy on the bill with whatever five-reel feature they happened to have booked. It never occurred to them to match the comedy with material that would second the effect of the comedy; that would send from the theatre the parents of its juvenile patrons filled with the belief that the pictures had indeed made progress. Not all houses had such unspeakable filth as this story of the lady whose amorous desires went unfilled until the close of the last scene, but many offered plays wholly unsuited to the program. In time to come it probably will be possible to book shows. It may be that we shall even come to a return of the old General Film idea of "locked reels," in which the rigid program could not be broken; but if we do, the program building must be done by experts. Until then managers can at least make certain that when they pay an extra price for a trade-builder, future trade will be built and not destroyed by the companion pictures on the program. The Chaplin film made a lot of money for exhibitors; more, perhaps, than any film of equal length has ever made before. It could have done even better in future business had an effort been made to give a program good throughout.

Use Care.

Look out for the man who wants to give you something for nothing. We recently printed a warning against a man who was ostensibly selling programs, but who really was swindling merchants under the guarantee of the house manager. The manager gets blamed, and he is to blame for giving a total stranger credentials to the local men.

Here is a recent lobby display used by Harry Pomeroy, of the Holman, Montreal. Note the layout of frames and the manner in which the stills are placed. Also note on the right how the one-sheet is hit up to make a larger display through the use of a painted frame within the display frame. If you cannot do brush work, get odd ends from the paperhanger, particularly paper with large designs, and see what you can do cutting and pasting. You can get a rough air-brush effect with an old tooth brush and some dye, put on before the design is laid down, but it will pay you to try and connect with some local artist. Mr. Pomeroy not only has an artist, but he knows how to show the artist what to do. If you cannot do as well, you can at least aim at the same general idea.

Watch for the Soldiers.

Watch for the returning soldiers. Make your house the place where they receive their official welcome. Don't try to make money out of it at the moment. Let it simply work for you for future business.

Get Ready Now.

Get ready now for the Liberty Loan that is coming. Read back for the other fellow's schemes and use them in your own house next time. Working in advance you can save time and money.

Doubling Up.

The Empress, Kansas City, uses double advertising in some of the papers. These sheets offer both a photoplay and an amusement section, and the Empress goes into both, using the amusement display to refer to the photoplay section. Two recent displays are each two fives. One space advertises "Wolves of Kultur," and the use of a lot of display type is avoided by making the top line sufficiently sensational to ensure that the entire space

BOLSHEVISM IN KANSAS CITY?

Do you believe that the Hun spies who have recently burned our Stock Yards, fired our wholesale buildings and done all other possible damage, have declared an armistice?

If you do, read the article entitled Bolshevism in Chicago on the second page of Monday's Times. Read where ten thousand men and women gathered in Chicago and in the German language criticized our Government, our soldiers and sailors, and spoke in praise of the blood stained Bolsheviki of Russia.

The hearts of the Hun spies have not changed, and they will now attempt by propaganda to do to our beloved Nation the harm they could not accomplish by the sword.

DO YOU KNOW THEIR METHODS?

If you do, you are an exception; if you do not, you should. You may learn them in a few brief minutes at the Empress Theater, where the wonderful Pathe serial, "WOLVES of KULTUR," is now being shown.

Yesterday almost ten thousand of our citizens saw the thrilling first episode of this wonderful film and the seven splendid acts of Pantages Vaudeville. The first episode will be shown every afternoon before and after the vaudeville, and every evening for the balance of the week. By all means send the children, that they, too, may learn the methods of these criminal and insidious propagandists.

will be read. Not all pictures will lend themselves so well to a startling statement, but where this can be done, a lot of space will be saved. The second display is devoted to the vaudeville, and is partly house talk. The latter takes up a full half of the space and is good enough to be reproduced in full. It runs:

H-A-R-M-O-N-Y. This is a mighty big word when you come to analyze it. Think a minute and see if you realize what an important part harmony plays in the operation of a theatre. One of the necessary elements of properly presenting a pleasing vaudeville show depends on the harmony that prevails between yourself, the performers, stage hands, orchestra and the management. Just go a little further with us along this line of thought and we will endeavor to show how and why you are so well pleased with our shows.

Imagine yourself being met at our Box-Office by a ticket seller who had a "grouch," your ticket taken by a door-tender who "hated himself," an usher who made you feel under obligations to her for assisting you in finding your particular seat, and then witness a performance by artists who presented their respective acts in an indifferent manner. Under such circumstances your visit would be most unpleasant.

The policy of the Empress is exactly the reverse. We not only present to you the best possible vaudeville that can be furnished, but you will find that the Empress management adds to this kindness and consideration for its patrons and employees and at all times demands that all attaches accord you, and every patron, the utmost consideration in every way that would tend to promote an atmosphere of harmony, plaeing you in your seat prepared to get all the good out of our show that is in it.

This sort of talk is convincing and, if backed up by conditions, will do a house more good than a more florid announcement of the individual attractions. The vaudeville is not slighted, but it is being sold as a show rather than as a series of individual attraetions, and this is the right idea.

Perforated Programs.

The Elmwood, Buffalo, has stuek to the same form of program for several years now, and it appears to work well. The program has often been reproduced in these pages, and no doubt is familiar to most readers. It is an eight-page railroad-style folder on heavy paper, each page about 3 by 5 inches, but a recent improvement is the use of perforating rule that the pages may be torn apart and used as individual programs as desired by the recipient. If you see something you like, you tear off that program and carry it with you.

Here's the Old-Timer.

It's been a long time since we heard from Jimquinn, but he bobs up a moment to send in from Sonora, Mexico, the eard of the "Gran" Hotel there, and he used the letter head of another and better house to show where he was located. The "Gran" sells its rooms for $1.50 per, which is 75 eents in real money, and the English half of the eard announees that it is "most eentrical loeated," and that there is the "best attention given to passengers." It adds that it has "best service in the restaurant downstairs," but this does not appear to be a warning against the upstairs restaurant. There is only one. Jim has been down there three months, which should be enough to last him for some time. The Mex English is almost as funny as the Babu brand.

Cannibal Headliners.

Here are two of the advertisements used for launching the Toronto campaign for Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas." One is two fours and the other a single five. Both use the picture already famlliar to trade paper readers.

Two Advertisements for the "Cannibal" Pictures.

The face makes a good trade-mark and attraetor, and the advertising is very simple and effeetive. There is no extravagant announeement, but merely reader paragraphs that tell very simply of the adventuros. This is far more convineing than adjeetives would be, and someone must have had unusually good taste to have hit upon this scheme when the adjeetives seem to be called for. The paragraphs are curlosity rousing rather than explanatory, and eould not be bettered. It is a fine example of real advertising skill.

A Combination.

Allan Rock sends in an eight-page sheet for "Lafayette, We Come!" and explains that this is something new, adding:

> It primarily serves as an exhibitors' press sheet, still its functlons are many. You will note that the outside seetion is made up of news or fan stuff, and that the inside section is exelusively exhibitors' dope. The outside seetion furnishes the exhibitor with stories for programs and newspapers, containing also reproduetions of ads, to say nothing of an editorial and magazine page. Nearly half a page has been left blank for the imprint of exhibitors' own advertisements. On the whole, the Eagle replaees the herald, press sheet and so-called house organ. It gives the exhibitor an opportunity to put over some advanee exploitation that is eonsiderably out of the ordinary. The inside baek page makes a fairly good lobby sheet, and last but not least gets over the Affiliated and Exhibitors' Mutual dope to the puhlic via the exhlbitors.

We take it that the outside section can be supplied the exhibitors in bulk. If this is true, then the eombination is merely a herald and a press sheet folded together, but it is a good herald and a good press sheet. If the outside seetion is not to be had in qualities, but is merely for the use of the house manager, we think it would have been better make-up to have backed the press stories on pages giving the details of cuts, etc., to save copying one side. As a herald one of the four-page sections would work very nicely, but as press stuff the stories back on eaeh other, making it difficult to use all.

Kellermann in India.

Here is the way K. D. & Brothers, of Bombay, India, advertise "A Daughter of the Gods." The page is taken from the Times, of India, which seems to be more of a national than a local weekly, and to be used in default of regular trade papers. The "of Pre-Islamic Era" helow the title seems to be a sidestep on the general tone of the picture, which might give some offense to the Mohamadan population. K. D. & Brothers could get to much of their trade through the Moving Picture World, but this doubtless reaches about all the people they will do business with. It is rather full of eight point, but will probably be read earefully, and will do the work. It points to the enterprise of these film handlors, for spaee apparently costs money over there.

Addendn.

The Colonial, Orange, N. J., and the Lyeeum, East Orange, a sister house, added "Shoulder Arms" to the program for two days, after the programs had been printed. To get around that, they sent out the next programs slightly in advanee with a special eard announeing the addition of the eomedy. And they cleaned up.

Tying Up with "Hearts."

Harold D. Franklin, of the Hippodrome, Buffalo, did some elever work for Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life." "Hearts of the World" was due in town at another house a week later. It was pre-advertised in the previous Sunday paper, and the Hippodrome display was thrown alongside. The underline is two 6½, with the Hippodrome taking three 3½ inches. There is no referenee to "Hearts," but the connection is obvious. This was followed on Monday with five sev- teens, an unusual display for the Hippodrome. It is a nice study in display values. There is nothing flamboyant, and yet you get the initial impression that something out of the ordinary is being offered, and the reading of the text confirms that opinion. It is one of the prettiest advertisements Mr. Franklin has sent us, and it goes to show that even large spaces can be handled with dignity and yet effeetively.

Price and Quality.

Johnny Maek, of the Hill, Newark, has opposition, and so he has started in to train his patrons to an appreciation of the differenee. His editor in a recent program may help others. It runs:

LET'S GO TO A PICTURE SHOW.

But do you stop to eonsider what kind of pictures are the best? Or the value you reeeive for your money? I heard a youngster remark the other day, "Let's go to the.....

Theatre, Mamma, it only costs a nickel." But Mamma happened to be intelligent, and she went where she received greater value for a little more money. Pictures are like anything else we use every day. Quality counts with our great American family. While our prices are the lowest in the city, we have the best pictures. New pictures. Lovely pictures before the rest. Just look at our program.

Whether you have opposition or not, that is the big idea. Make your patrons realize that it is not merely a case of showing pictures, but of showing them properly. You can take the best picture ever made and give it such a showing that people will think it the worst, and you can take a poor picture, and with good surrounding, proper projection and good music, make it seem acceptable. That's the difference between being a picture house and a place of entertainment. Steve Farrar went a bit further than this, it will be remembered. When people pointed out that the other man sold the same number of reels for five cents less, he urged his patrons to go and see the ten-cent show, just so that they might learn to appreciate the difference. They did, and he got his own and some of the other man's.

Missionary Work.

A. C. Raleigh, of the American, Butte, Montana, writes that he proposed a joint campaign against the "flu" scare, but he got little encouragement, and went ahead "on his own." His recent advertising carries a tag similar to those shown here preaching against the scare, and he writes that it is working. We think, however, that it would have been better to fight the "flu" without questioning the wisdom of the closing order so strenuously. The Board of Health is apt to get sore and look for a comeback. At the same time there is sound sense in this argument:

Two Displays from the American, Butte, in Which a Part of the Space Is Used in an Effort to Combat the Influenza Scare.

> "Selling" an epidemic is just like selling soup or soap. Just advertise it, and you will get a flock of "customers." Where three really have it, seven are scared into it. We object to again being closed unless every place in Butte where people congregate is likewise closed, in other words, we refuse to be the "goat" as the theatres were during the last 30-day closing period, which entailed tremendous financial loss on theatre men.
> The American theatre is well ventilated, has been repainted and decorated, and we consider it absolutely safe from a sanitary viewpoint. Everything that human ingenuity can devise has been done to protect our patrons.
> The air in the American is better than that on the street. Rough figures show that as a result of the peace celebration one person in each thousand caught the "flu," which does not seem to us an epidemic percentage.

A less truculent phrasing would have helped, but it is a trespass upon the individual rights to close theatres and churches and not stores. Part of another paragraph is better taken. It reads:

> When a burglar is caught, the authorities do not lock up the public to make them safe from the burglar—they lock up the burglar. In the present scare, why quarantine the public and let the "flu" cases run at will? Why not quarantine the "flu" and let the well folks go about their business? ? ? ?

But the big point to realize in this Raleigh advertising is the fact that you can mould public opinion in your advertising if you go about it right. You can make your advertising space do more for you than merely tell the film you offer. You can write your own editorials and get them printed if you will pay the space rate, and often it is better worth while to advertise to the public than to advertise film offerings.

Philadelphia Programs.

It has been a long time since we ran that heading, for our regular Philadelphia correspondent has been gone for some time, but Louis Goldstein, who prints a majority of the local programs, sends in a few samples. We knew the Goldstein shop when he had a little place in Eighth street. Now he has grown with his business, and specializes in theatrical work. But Mr. Goldstein says that he cannot do his best work because the managers still regard the program and other printing as the first point at which to practise economy. It is the same in many towns besides Philadelphia. A man will pay two or three prices for a special subject, but he won't pay two or three times his usual printing bill advertising it, and so he does not get what he pays for. It is not just the big subject that sells. It is the advertising for the big feature that really does the work. Picture managers have to figure closely, but they should figure special advertising as part of the essential expense. The Bright Spot, of Haddonfield, N. J., a suburban house, prints a map on the front page, with the house title, rule and house location in red and the type in blue. It uses a sun with an oblong of rays similar to that shown on the back page for its trade mark, and one of these is used to locate the house on the map. The town is not so large that a map is really essential, yet for that very reason a map is a novelty, and will be welcomed and preserved. The scheme is even better for a neighborhood house. People will preserve the sectional map, and each time they consult it, it will remind of the house.

Most of the programs are along the lines already familiar to our readers, but a novelty is a song book for a local sing. It is a four-page folder of cheap news stock about 5 by 8, but it contains the choruses of twenty old-time and popular songs, and they are given out each Thursday night at the Jumbo Theatre. It is a good plan to use the chorus slides for the actual sing, but such a song book will be preserved and taken home, so that it is an advertisement both before and after the evening. It is an idea worth copying. That sing idea is going to be stronger than ever now that the boys are coming home. Don't get the impression that it is all over because the war is done. Now is the time to make it a permanent feature. You can, if you work it right, make it just as big a feature as a good five-reel picture, and it will advertise for permanent good.

Telling It.

There is one bank in this advertisement from a Southern theatre that can sell any war time play or War Weekly. It is the second of the panels to the left, and it reads: "See more than any soldier or soldiers could see—the whole colossal drama of the four years of war passes before your eyes." You can scarcely beat that for a pulling line. First the truth of the statement gets hold of you, and then you realize your advantage. The Dixie is in a small town, but it certainly has a big town advertising man. The layout is not artistic, but it is effective, and it is excellently written. L. F. Whiteside, of Universal publicity, sends it in because it hit him in the same light. It's pretty work. It is not the size of the town, but the size of the man that governs publicity work. Another ad uses, "Not a love story, but pictures made by a thousand cameras during the war." That's good, too.

Coming Events.

Lincoln's and Washington's birthdays are going to mean more than usual this year. Arrange to celebrate them with special exercises, and be particularly careful to get the right sort of film to go with the literary program.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

OWING to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Lets Hear from You on This.

John H. Auerbach, who is a member of the N. Y. Stock Exchange, a seat in which is worth, if I am correctly informed, just a trifle less than 80,000 dollars, hands in the following:

"Am a amateur projectionist (you will notice the high-class men make no bones of adopting the name projectionist.—Ed.) and holder of an N. Y. City M. P. M. O. license. Have written you once or twice in the past, and trust you are not bored by amateurs who make a hobby of the fascinating study of motion picture projection. (Mr. Auerbach is a member of the firm of Auerbach & Rogers, investment securities, Broadway, N. Y. City.—Ed.) I have a Simplex, equipped with type S lamphouse, special fast intermittent movement and 2-wing shutter, geared 1½ to 1. Have the machine in my city home in winter, where we have D. C., and in the garage of my Long Island home in summer, where current is 220 A. C. While there I use a transverter delivering 50 amperes to a 50-volt arc. (Um, some of you theatre managers once-over this private residence installation, will you!—Ed.) But enough of this. Let us get down to the point I shall try to make.

"Of course we all agree that a projection machine should be grounded. Projection machine manufacturers provide a connection on the machine for special ground wire, and attach same to some permanent ground, often at considerable distance from the machine. This intails expense for wire; also unnecessary trouble. Why not eliminate both by merely grounding the carbon arm attached to the neutral wire? This would require merely a few inches of copper wire (or removal of insulation from lower carbon arm), and, in my opinion, will establish as perfect a ground as it is possible to get. Of course the rheostat should be placed in wire leading to opposite carbon arm. And we now come to another point, viz: Most projectionists, I believe, ground their machines with a ground wire and then stick the rheostat in the wire leading to the POSITIVE carbon regardless of whether it is the positive or negative side of the system which is grounded (whether neutral is positive or negative to side they are using.—Ed.). This is absolutely wrong. The rheostat should always be placed in the particular wire of a system which is NOT grounded. If this is done a complete short circuit can never occur because of a ground in the lamphouse. The most which could occur would be that the resistance of the arc would be eliminated. If, however, the resistance be placed in the neutral or grounded wire, and the machine itself be grounded, then if either of the carbon arms become accidentally grounded a complete short circuit results when the arc is struck."

I had my own answer to this proposition ready as soon as I read the letter, but I'm not going to tell you what it is. Instead I'm going to ask you projectionists to discuss this matter in all its points, confining your argument to as few words as possible. Mr. Auerbach merely studies projection for his own amusement. He is a wealthy (and a busy) man. It is interesting to know that projection presents problems which can hold the interest of such a one from year to year—for Mr. Auerbach first wrote me about three years ago, if I rightly remember. Instead of being "bored" I am very much interested.

Province of Alberta Waking Up.

A letter just received from Howard Douglas, chief censor, Province of Alberta, Edmonton, Alberta, sets forth the fact that the province officials are interesting themselves in the matter of improved knowledge of their profession by projectionists. A circular letter being sent out to projectionists is attached, in which certain books are recommended for study; also that the projection department of the Moving Picture World be given careful attention. In fact the chief censor advises that the projectionist subscribe to the above named paper. The books recommended by the chief censor are good ones, but there are those I think would serve the purpose better. For myself I would recommend to the projectionists of Alberta (or elsewhere) the Handbook as being first, supplimented by the Hawkins Electrical Guides. When those books have been assimilated there will be others, among them Optic Projection.

In course of his letter Mr. Douglas remarks:

"We wish to enlist your co-operation in this matter, and to that end ask that you notify us when there is any new publication or any new appliance connected with the industry, so that we may aid the operators of this province in obtaining better understanding of real projection. It is understood that good projection is necessary in order to hold the public interest in pictures, and that anything tending toward betterment in that line helps the whole industry."

Yes, Friend Douglas, not only because it "helps hold the interest of the public," but because it makes for decrease in the terrific waste in projection machinery, films and light. The waste due to unintelligent lubrication alone is something awful, not only in machinery wastage, but in damage to films which become smeared or even soaked with oil. Unintelligent tension adjustment works havoc with sprocket holes and takes a fearful toll in wastage. Unintelligent adjustment of the projector optical system often wastes close to fifty per cent. of the total input wattage. Verily I do agree heartily with the Edmonton officials that it is high time for an awakening. In this connection I would respectfully suggest to Mr. Douglas that, inasmuch as the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has, by unanamous vote, adopted the word "projectionist" as the correct title for the man who projects motion pictures, his department use it in correspondence and official papers forthwith.

Publicity Man.

Recently the editor, by invitation of that body, addressed the American Projection Society (of which he is a member) on the subject of projection. Samuel Rothapfel, managing director Rivoli and Rialto theatres, did the society the honor of being present. Afterward refreshments were served, and it was while seated at table that Joe Basson made a remark which set us thinking. What he said was, "What our unions need more than a business agent is a publicity man."

The more I think of this the more reasonable it seems. Why is it we are so very slow in securing recognition for the projectionist? Is it not simply because when the finished result is good the manager and the musician, who are directly in evidence with the public through the daily and weekly papers, get full credit and applause. The public in a vague sort of way knows the projectionist exists somewhere in regions dim. It also knows, in a vague sort of way, that he has had something to do with the beautiful screen result. The orchestra "renders" a composition. It is well done, and the leader bows to applause, even the most 'umble (Relative term only. Never personally knew a musician who was humble) member of the organization coming in for his share. The film production is also rendered by the projectionist, helped possibly (and maybe not) by intelligent work on the part of the manager in house lighting, comfortable seats, nice decorations, etc., and the presentation is good. The audience applauds, and friend manager gets all the credit. The projectionist, who labored hard for perfection in rendition, is scarcely even thought of. Now a publicity man could change all that and bring the work of the projectionist before the public in the daily and weekly papers, so that the projectionist would get credit for his hard work. This would work well in many ways. Another practical thing to do would be for either the local union or the individual projectionist to provide a film leader, in really neat form, reading: "This production rendered on the screen by John Doe, projectionist." Many managers would readily consent to its use, I am sure. Its first cost would be an investment, and in the end, if persisted in, it would pay and pay well. "It pays to advertise" is as true an axom as was ever uttered.

Term Projectionist Officially Adopted.

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers, in convention assembled, in Cleveland, Ohio, has, by unanimous vote, adopted the word "projectionist" in lieu of "operator," as the correct designation to be applied to the man who projects motion pictures.

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers is the governing body in matters of this sort. What it says "goes," though it is to be expected that considerable time will be required to eliminate a word which, however inappropriate, has become so thoroughly established by usage.

And now, gentlemen, it is up to you to "live up to the word." A high-class man in Cleveland remarked, when he heard of the action: "Gee, Richardson, its a crime to apply the term projectionists to some men now in the game." True, it is, but that is just the point, or one of them. If you mentally admit you are not deserving of the name, it is up to you to make yourself worthy of it. Projectionist means something. The title is now officially yours; are you worthy of it?

Size of Screen and Drop Screen.

From a Western town comes the following:

"Attached find drawing of elevation of interior of my new moving picture theatre. Will you advise as to what size screen I should use? Want one screen on back wall, which will give an 89 foot throw, with front row of seats 28 feet 6 inches from screen. What size screen can I use? Want a second drop screen at front, as indicated in drawing. This screen will be for use when we have traveling shows or vaudeville. Throw to front screen would be 70 feet and front row of seats would be 10 feet from it. What size screen should I use for the front?"

You will observe I have drawn in the light ray, the tilt of back screen and have extended the level of stage floor out over the auditorium floor in a broken dotted line; also have indicated location of front row of seats. The scale of your drawing seems to be ¼ inch to the foot. You will run into some difficulty regarding your front rows of seats. For that length of house you really should have a 12-foot picture, but that would be ten feet high, and, as you may readily ascertain, the eyes of a small adult will be not more than 3 feet 6 inches from the floor when seated in an ordinary theatre chair, while those of a child will be considerable below that level. Now, as shown by my lines, with a 10-foot high picture it will be just about 3 feet 6 inches from floor line to line drawn from bottom of picture to point directly over front row of seats, hence the child patron cannot see bottom of picture from front row of seats; also probably a small woman would not have quite full view. If you cut down to an 8x10-foot picture, raising it as far as possible, you will "get by" on the foregoing, but will have too small a picture on your front screen, the size of which is automatically fixed by the size of the picture on the back screen, unless you want to have two projection lenses and change them every time you change screens. On the whole, I would suggest a 10x12 picture at rear, which will give you almost exactly an 8x10 in front. The question is, however, whether you can focus on both screens with one lens. I doubt it, unless you have a special arrangment in the form of a telescopic lens holder made. You see the lens will have to be considerably further away from the film to focus at 70 feet than at 89 feet. Your lens diameter might not be right for both propositions, but that will not be bad, because the front screen most likely will not be used much anyhow. On the whole my advice is a 10x12 picture on rear screen, using 40 amperes D. C. or 60 A. C., and following lens combination, etc.: 40 D. C., use two 6½ condenser lenses so set that their curved surface apexes are not to exceed 1/16 inch apart, with 18½ inches from centre of condenser combination to film; projection lens diameter, 2 inches—its opening, I mean, of course. Revolving shutter must be placed according to back focus of lens, and wont be right for both screens. See table published in December 28 issue for correct shutter position, setting it for back focus of lens when rear screen is in use. Having lined up for back screen, drop front one, focus on it and black its edges up to picture, making border of black two feet wide. Outside this have front screen decorated in dark colors. Note, if you find you cannot focus on both screens have your local machine shop make a telescopic lens holder allowing you to move the lens further ahead for front screen. Under present conditions all advice is qualified by the fact that you may not be able to secure projection lens of focal length to give exact size picture advised. But in this case don't exceed 10x12 for rear screen unless you want trouble from occupants of front seats. Front picture should in no event exceed 10 feet in width. The lens combination for 60 amperes A. C. and 40 amperes D. C. is the same.

Baird Company Purchases Edison Machines and Parts.

An inquiry directed to the Edison Company by this department, asking what, if any arrangements had been made for users of Edison projectors to get repair parts, brought the following:

"Replying to your inquiry will say that we have disposed of the stock of projectors and parts for old models of Edison projectors, as well as for the Super Kinetoscopes, to the C. R. Baird Company, 24 East 23d street, New York City. It is the intention of the purchaser to supply repair parts for Edison projectors now in use. I shall be glad to supply any further information you may require; also to answer any inquiries you may receive regarding Edison projectors. Signed, Thomas A. Edison, Incorporated, Per J. W. Farrell, Motion Picture Division."

And thus, presumably, endeth the tale of the Edison projection machine. First on the market, it could have succeeded largely, had the company kept abreast with progress in the matter of improvement as the years rolled past. But the policy of the Edison company, as applied to its projector, was to put out a model and make no change therein until it was hopelessly out of date. With the enormous prestige of Mr. Edison's name, had the company put the same energy into improvement and keeping its projecter right up to date that its competitors did, I venture the assertion it would today have not only been by long odds the leading projector in the American market, but would have made successful competition a very difficult matter indeed. But instead of so doing, in all the years that passed, until finally the Super was placed on the market, the general form of the mechanism was altered but comparatively little, and the improvements therein were, by comparison, absurdly few. From one to 2-pin, from wooden to metal frame and from inside to outside shutter pretty well tells the tale. Personally we are sorry the Edison Super was not pushed to success, for we firmly believe it was, barring some faults which could have been overcome, a most excellent machine. We are of the opinion it would have been made a big winner. But as we understand the matter, it is a dead issue, and the Edison company has passed definitely out of the projection machine manufacturing field.

I Just Simply Can't See It.

Doctor Kellner, Bosch & Lomb Company, for whose scientific knowledge of lenses and light I have very high regard, makes one statement which I am unable to make line up with what little I know of the optics of the projector. He says the spread of the light ray back of the aperture is due entirely to spherical aberration in the condenser. Maybe I'll simply make a monkey of myself, but all the same I'm going to say I cannot, and do not, believe that statement. Having thus committed myself and laid myself wide open to attack by the good doctor, I'm going to set forth my reasons for daring to dispute so really eminent an authority.

First, let us assume a perfectly corrected condenser and the crater in exact focus at the film, a glance at figure I will, it seems to me, prove, absolutely, that the ray beyond aperature C will and must diverge; also that divergence will and must be in proportion to the distance of the condenser from the aperture. It is true, however, that under this condition the divergence would not be a very serious matter, insofar as light loss be concerned. But with a corrected condenser having the crater in focus at the film would be even less possible than now and it is entirely impractical now. Under actual operation it is claimed by practical men, who had made exhaustive study of the projector optical system, and who have accomplished much in the way of real, tangible benefit to the projectionist in the way of assisting him to work improvement in his projector optical system, that it would be imposible to get satisfactory results with a corected condenser, and that spherical aberration in the condenser serves a useful and a very necessary purpose in producing evenness of illumination on the screen. With this latter argument I am unable to either agree or disagree, never having had the opportunity to try it out in practice; also to date a corrected condenser is an impractical proposition, because of its cost and the lack of any feasible method of preventing at least occasional breakage. But it sounds reasonable to me. The screen illumination chart, prepared by the Nela Park folks and published in this department a year or more ago, make it appear that the crater of a carbon decidedly is not of even brilliancy. If this is true, then how would you get evenness of illumination on the screen with a corrected condenser? Spherical aberration serves to break up the crater image in a way which, it seems to me, tends to provide a maximum of evenness of light flux at the film plane, hence at the screen. Mind you, I do not make this as an assertion. Griffith does that, and I, personally, believe Griffith is right. Looks reasonable to me. The element of doubt enters only when I consider that in practical projection the crater is not and cannot be focused at the screen. It may be that the action as observed in Fig. 2 may serve the same purpose as Griffith's claims for spherical aberration, but if so then it seems to me the crater image would have to be focused further back than at present, and this might set up serious difficulties.

But to the main theme of my argument: Will Doctor Kellner, or any one else, be kind enough to explain to me how, in view of the action shown in Fig. 1, where a single point of the crater is dealt with only, and focused at the film plane (an impossible condition in practical projection), or of the action shown in Fig. 2, where a single point of the crater is focused as it actually is in practice (except that the same point will, due to spherical aberration, be focused at several different planes which does NOT affect the point under consideration), is it possible that either a corrected or uncorrected condenser can give anything else than a diverging light ray beyond the aperture?

My contention is that the reduction of the projection lens diameter to the point at which it will not accommodate the entire light ray has the effect of reducing the diameter of the condenser. I am, however, not altogether certain that I am correct in this. But I have a plan for settling that point. It will require a little time, but the findings will be indisputable. Meanwhile let us hear, as briefly as may be, the views of our readers; also if Dr. Kellner will favor us with the base upon which his argument rests we will be more than glad to have it. Probably he will rip us up the back, but we should worry if we thereby advance in knowledge. However, it will require some considerable argument, even from the worthy doctor, to convince Yours Truly that when the rays from a point in the object focus, as they do at the image, they do not leave that plane divergent.

Aluminum Screen.

Wallace Topping, a Brooklyn projectionist, submits the following:

"By following directions herewith presented I am sure brother projectionists contemplating making an aluminum screen will get as good results as it is possible to get with aluminum. There is somewhat of a glare, but if some brother will get busy decreasing glare without reducing results we may be able to get perfection.

"First, procure heavy canvas—sail-cloth preferred, making sure it is large enough to allow of black border of suitable width when screen is finished. Make a permanent frame and stretch canvas thereon as tightly as possible. From any paint store procure sufficient glue, in powdered form, to make a thin glue size. Dealer will tell you how much you need to gallon of water. Dissolve glue in hot water and paint the canvas with this size. After it has dried very thoroughly, varnish the entire surface with a fair grade of varnish. While varnish is still wet, shake powdered aluminum over the entire surface, being very sure to leave no spots uncovered because you cannot add either varnish or aluminum afterward. When varnish is thoroughly dry, say after 24 hours, brush off surplus aluminum and set screen up.

"Now that is off my mind, I'll spring another. It may be a dead issue, I don't know. Anyhow, here it is: The idea is not mine, hence I deserve no credit. While machine is running, just hold stero lens in light ray between condenser and cooling plate, say about 2.5 inches from plate. Am quite sure he who does this will quickly rig up a holder and make it a permanent thing. Tried to get party to manufacture holder, but for some reason met with no success."

I will have to guess at it until some of the fans report results. What I imagine you have done is to apply that which Martin, Los Angeles, proposed long ago, viz.: your stero happened to be just right for your local condition as relates to condenser beam to form an aperture lens of proper action to parallel the beam beyond the aperture without setting up other troubles. I shall do myself the honor of calling to examine the proposition very soon. As to the screen matter, I have published your directions as of possible value to those who wish to make a small screen for home or other work where brilliant light is not used. Your admission that there is "glare" kills it, to my mind, for theatre work.

What Constitutes Unjustifiable Interference?

Today I had brought to mind an incident now far enough past to be written of without bias or anger. And it should be written of as pointing a moral. The facts were just this: A party sent in a circumstantial account of having been refused membership in a certain projectionists' local, under circumstances which were, according to his statement, unjust. Now this department has long prided itself that any organization of exhibitors or projectionists or any individual could, through it, appeal to the industry against unjust treatment. This is particularly necessary with the individual, since he all too often has no practical method of obtaining justice as against arbitrary, unjust action. In this case the man looked to projection as his means of livelihood. Refusal of the union to admit him had the effect of debarring him from earning his living at his profession in that particular city. Now, if the debarment from membership was based on just grounds, well and good. But if the grounds were not just, that was something else again. The editor wrote the local, and in reply received a letter from its president in which the statement was made that, insofar as any action of the local be concerned, it owed no explanation to any one except the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. In this letter the president of the local threatened to "let the entire membership (of the I. A.) know of its new, self-appointed dictator" (meaning us). So much for the main facts.

The thing I wish to comment on now is the statement that a local owes no explanation of its acts to any one but its parent organization. This is false reasoning. Any organization connected with the motion picture industry owes an explanation of its acts to the industry itself, and the industry has a perfect right to demand an explanation. This is particularly true when those acts make for injustice, even though the injustice be to an individual only. The I. A. may, and does represent its own membership, but who represents that large body of men outside its ranks, some of them excellent men, too, and men who are not outside its ranks from choice? Does any projectionist local imagine it can, with impunity, and without criticism or demand for explanaton, do exactly as it pleases, particularly in view of the fact that the individual outside the organization cannot demand explanation through the I. A.? As to letting the entire membership know, etc., why it has for years well known the attitude of this department in matters of this sort. We have insisted on justice for the projectionist, but that does not assume that the justice must be one-sided and come entirely from the exhibitor. Locals themselves are presumed to be founded on justice, and certainly they must deal in that commodity. Just what the "other side" of the matter was I never knew, simply because I did not think the matter worth while going into a fight over. The individual involved secured a position in another town and the whole thing was dropped. But let no organization, exhibitors' league or projectionists' union, accumulate unto itself the idea that it is immune from criticism, or that it can perpetrate injustice without giving to the industry itself, on demand, competent explanation of any act affecting the industry or any individual thereof. The "entire membership" has a "dictator," and that dictator is the motion picture industry, one humble representative of which is this department.

Book of Standards.

Paul Baron, Coleman, Alberta, asks information as to the "new book of Findings and Standards of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers." Evidently the good brother has things a bit twisted as to tities. The Society of Motion Picture Engineers puts out two books, viz.: Its Proceedings, which contain the papers read and discussed at its meetings, and a small Book of Standards, containing the standards, nomenclature adopted, etc. Price of Proceedings, 25 cents; Book of Standards, 10 cents. Send your coin to President H. A. Campe, industrial department Westinghouse Co., East Pittsburgh, Pa.

Lead, South Dakota, Take Notice.

W. E. Williams, Lead, S. D., asked for address of manufacturer of Ingento Dissolving Slide Carrier some while ago. I was unable to supply it, but discovered same by accident while in Cleveland recently. Saw one in use in a theatre. It is made by Burke & James, Chicago, Ill.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

The Fotoplayer Specially Constructed to Withstand the Wear of Continuous Use

THE question has been asked. "What is the difference between organs of various names?" This question is not only natural but pertinent. Every exhibitor sometime expects to obtain an organ, and hates to buy a "pig in a poke." Without holding a brief for any particular organ manufacturer, we feel it incumbent upon our position as musical expert to hold up the lighted torch that the exhibitor may profit thereby. With the data furnished by these manufacturers, we shall endeavor to place before the exhibitor the facts relating to organ construction.

The Fotoplayer is built and installed by the American Photoplayer Company of New York, Chicago and San Francisco. It is an instrument specially designed for the needs of the photoplay, from which it derives its name. It combines in one case the quality of the piano, the reed organ and pipe organ for orchestral effects. It cannot be said that it is "churchy" and this may be a good fault.

The keyboard looks much like a piano at first glance, but as you look more closely, one may see a double tracker device over which music rolls are run. The Fotoplayer may be played as a regular piano or run as a player piano. Again, by the use of the proper stops placed conspicuously and in readiness, above the keys, organ or orchestra effects may be obtained. This double tracker enables the entire instrument to be controlled by one operator, for while one roll is being played another may easily be inserted. There never need be silence, and this continuity permits an accurate musical interpretation of screen action.

Any brand of music roll may be used for the Fotoplayer and, as the supply is large, there should be no dearth of music. Nevertheless, there must be just as great care used in music selection in the way of rolls as that given to orchestral fitting. The same principles hold at all times and the Fotoplayer of itself cannot interpret a picture.

The Fotoplayer is constructed of the finest hard woods and looks well in a theatre. It occupies little space, for the pipes and mechanical traps have been closely assembled in two small cabinets, one on either side of the Fotoplayer proper.

Along the front of the Fotoplayer are six or eight cords that are operated by hand to get the trap and sound effects. They are so arranged that two or more may be worked at the same time with little difficulty. The list of the traps and effects reads as follows Pistol shots, bass drum, zylophone, crackling flames, cymbal, tom tom, small drum, door bell, fire gong, chimes, waves, wind, cow bells, auto horn, sleigh bells, and many others, including a gatling gun. No comedy should be without them.

Turning to the more serious side of this instrument, we find that it is provided with swell shutters for both treble and bass. The specifications of Style Forty-five call for length, 17 ft. 4 in.; width, 3 ft. 9 in.; height, 5 feet. The piano extends eight inches.

The pipes for orchestral effects consist of Violin, Cornet, Flute, Flute d'Amour, Viol d'Orchestra in the treble, and Viol d'Orchestra, Cello, Flute d'Amour, Reed Organ and Pipes, in the bass. The blower plant is equipped with a motor of sufficient capacity and there is an electric light over the double tracker. The case is a beautiful quarter-sawed oak and splendidly finished.

For the exhibitor who feels that this form of picture playing will please his audience, the Fotoplayer should serve his purpose. This organ has a large capacity for good work and does not necessarily need a practical musician of wide experience who demands a high salary. It is simple to operate and thus provides a way for economy.

Harry Rapf Enthuses Over Music Scores

"Does the exhibitor realize the importance of the musical score to a picture? The comparisons are just the same in reference to a libretto of a play. If the libretto was presented without the musical score, the charm and the swing and the pep would not be there.

"The same holds good with a picture. How often do we go into a theatre and hear the musical accompaniment which is not in keeping with the picture and makes it seem draggy?

"Unfortunately, it is only in the big houses that a picture is really presented with the proper accompaniment. Otherwise, the pictures are presented any old way. I have gone to a great deal of pains and trouble to have a musical score arranged for the production of 'Wanted for Murder.' This is one of the best scores that I have had the privilege of hearing. It is light, melodious and in itself an entertainment for the public.

"Music is as important to a picture as the right projection. It is up to the exhibitor to encourage the producer to give much time to a correct musical score as he does to the production of the picture, but producers feel that the exhibitors do not as a rule give the musical accompaniment to a picture any attention whatever.

"I hope that exhibitors throughout the country who book this production will take advantage of the score. In my opinion, the entertainment is such a treat that the public will appreciate it in the same manner as I do."

This expression of opinion is thoroughly up to date and in line with the thoughts of the best producers and exhibitors.

There is no question so continuously before the film world as that of musical accompaniment, and even exchange men see the practical value of musical scores.

We are flooded with letters from the three branches of the film industry asking about scores for the various releases. Where there has been none provided, it becomes our duty and pleasure to supply the exhibitor with a musical setting. Settings are better than cue sheets, but the problem of picture presentation is only solved by special scores.

Largest Organ Being Built for Capitol Theatre, N. Y.

An organ of unusual interest, from a theatrical standpoint, is now being built for the Capitol Theatre, New York, by the Estey Organ Company. Those who are familiar with the specifications predict that a new standard for theatre organs is about to be established.

The theatre is now being erected on Broadway, at Fifty-first street, and will occupy the entire block from Fiftieth to Fifty-first street. It will be the largest theatre in the world, seating about sixty-five hundred people. It is highly appropriate, therefore, that this magnificent building should house the largest theatre organ ever built.

The modern tendency to borrow pipes from one stop to make another stop has been resorted to as little as possible in the scheme of this organ. So, while in number of stops this instrument will not compare with some other organs, yet in actual number of pipes, tonal variety and power, it will far exceed anything yet built for theatrical use.

There are to be sixty complete registers, and it will be primarily an organ having no less than seven diapasons of various scales. A generous fundamental tone was considered a paramount necessity, both from the musical viewpoint and the enormous tonal requirements of the building. The orchestral phase of the instrument has been well considered and an abundance of strings (including an entirely new stop called First Violins), Oboe, Flutes, Clarinets, etc., together with numerous high-pressure reeds, will produce an ensemble which for tonal capacity and variety will excel any instrument of the kind yet attempted.

The four-manual console will be specially designed for ease and facility in registration, and will embody many new features, planned solely for use in theatre organs.

"Listen to Mocking Bird," by Winner.

The popular songs of today are so ephemeral that few survive a season, and many of them are with us too long even at that. When Septimus Winner wrote the "Mocking Bird," it was popular at once, and has never been wholly snuffed out.

He was born in Philadelphia in 1827, and his boyhood was spent practically in the same manner as that of other boys of his acquaintance. But, unlike them, he very early manifested an unusual degree of musical talent, and preferred his art to play always.

Coming into possession of a violin when but a youth, he managed by diligent and intelligent practice to become a good player within a year. He never lost his first love, and the violin ever remained a favorite with him, although he also became proficient on the organ, piano and various string instruments. At twenty years of age he was a successful music teacher, and for five years acted as the leader of the Philadelphia band. In 1853, he opened a music store in his native city and made a success of the business.

Mr. Winner's songs number several hundred; all the words to his compositions being his own. The first to gain prominence was "How Sweet Are the Roses." It appeared in 1850, and was put out under the nom de plume of "Alice Hawthorne," a modified form of his mother's maiden name. It was followed by "What Is Home Without a Mother." These two songs constituted the celebrated "Hawthorne Ballads."

"Listen to the Mocking Bird" was written in 1852. It has been subjected to almost countless variations, and achieved phenominal success. The idea was suggested by a local character called "Whistling Dick." This colored man used to plod through the streets of Philadelphia strumming a guitar to his whistling imitations of a mocking bird. One day Mr. Winner asked him how he would like a song for his mocking bird to sing. The "Mocking Bird" was the result. Dick's vocal powers only embraced one octave, so the tune had to be simple and short of range. Also, the mental capabilities of the singer were not much above the range of his voice, thus it was impossible for him to ever learn more than one verse of the song, regardless of the fact that he practiced diligently every night in Winner's music store. The song, however, soon became a popular favorite, and people in general considered it Mr. Winner's best composition, although he was personally much more pleased with many of his other musical selections.

He sold the copyright of the song, afterward so famous, for five dollars—seemingly a popular sum to be payed for original American literary and musical efforts at that period of our artistic development. But when everybody was buying and singing the song, and the copyright netted the publishers over one hundred thousand dollars, Mr. Winner never bemoaned his fate nor expressed one regret. He felt amply repaid by the joy he had been able to bring into other lives with his charming little ballad.

Aside from "Alice Hawthorne," Mr. Winner wrote under the names of "Percy Guyer," "Mark Mason" and "Paul Stenton." He was an indefatigible worker, and wrote prolifically. On several occasions, he wrote the words and music for a song, sat up late at night to make the plates and do the printing, and had the song for sale in his music store on the following day.

If appreciation means anything to a man, Mr. Winner should have been supremely happy. He had the distinction in his day of being considered one of the foremost American song writers.

Mr. Winner's son likewise acquired considerable reputation as a song writer. His "Little Brown Jug" was very popular years ago, but lost its appeal when the farmers no longer took the "Brown Jug" to the field where they worked. This gentleman wrote under the name of "Joseph Eastburn."

Plaza Theatre Delights Patrons with "Cannibals of the South Seas"

HIDDEN away, far from the beaten track of Broadway, there nestles a splendid neighborhood theatre called the Plaza, owned and operated by Milton Gosdorfer. For twelve years this house was the hoodoo theatre of New York, but, through the careful management and energetic initiative of Mr. Gosdorfer, it has become the "Who's Who" theatre. Nowhere in the world is there a motion picture temple that draws a finer clientelle than the Plaza. Situated at Fifty-eighth street and Madison avenue, in the heart of the brown-stone section of Manhattan, it draws not only wealthy but cultured, prominent and refined people. Its mailing list reads like the social register, and contains names with which to conjure.

"Every theatre should have the best music it can afford," said Mr. Gosdorfer, "and soon it will be able to afford more for this purpose. Even if only one piece is used, let the instrument and its player be the best that money can procure. Music is the one thing that differentiates the good theatre from the poor one, and every intelligent exhibitor knows the box office value of good music. Music is the biggest thing in the picture presentation today, and producers who realize this factor and supply proper musical service endear themselves to the exhibitor."

"Do you believe in the efficacy of music scores, Mr. Gosdorfer?" asked the writer.

"Unquestionably special musical scores solve the music problems better than any other form of service, and a case in point is the wonderful music we are now playing for Martin Johnson's 'Cannibals of the South Seas'."

The Plaza is fortunate in having one of the best twelve-piece orchestras in the country. Mr. Eugene Conte, well known in the higher musical circles as an artist of fine calibre, has charge of the music. His many years of experience has proved a good schooling for picture playing. He believes in only one class of music—good music. He retains the entire string section, and gets the "salon" effect that is so pleasing to lovers of music. Besides the orchestra a large Beethoven Organ, manufactured by the American Photoplayer Company, has been installed.

Mr. Gosdorfer is to be congratulated on his good taste and sound business sense.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. CAN you tell me the composer of "Contemplation," a soprano solo.

A. The song you mention is by Widor, the French composer.

Q. I am an owner and trying to become a manager of a moving picture house, and have the task of breaking in a new pianist who has no music for pictures. Will it be necessary for me to get all the music for the different cue sheets on all the pictures I run? If possible, I want suitable music, but we possess no library.

A. There are a number of suggestions we can offer regarding the building up of your library for the future. By ordering new numbers as they appear on cue sheets sent you, a nucleus of a fine library will soon be yours. It is not necessary to order all the numbers on the cue sheets, for in a few weeks you will possess enough to substitute. For example, if No. 10 on the cue sheet calls for a pathetic selection and you have one in your library which has not been used frequently, you can substitute that. If you hope to build up the right kind of a library, we would suggest that you get small orchestra parts, so when the time comes to put in a small orchestra—as it will come—your library will be adequate for the occasion. We shall be pleased to assist your pianist in every way possible if he will write us and explain his needs.

The War Is Over

We should now sing of our heroes and we offer for your approval the song that typifies the national feeling of triumph.

Our Rainbow Soldier Boys

Written For, and Dedicated To, the Rainbow Division
Words and Music by

BETTY TILLOTSON

Read the words and rejoice with us in the wonderful sentiment that they express.
Your boy will be singing the song when he comes home; why not be prepared to join him in the chorus:

"We are all mighty glad to meet you,
Our Rainbow soldier boys.
We are all mighty glad to greet you;
You fill our hearts with joy.
When we sadly saw the train go,
We pinned our faith to the Rainbow,
And we're all mighty proud of you,
Our Rainbow soldier boys."

Musical Score of "THE GIRL OF MY DREAMS"

Starring BILLIE RHODES

A perfectly synchronized score that fits every scene of this spontaneous comedy-drama.

An original theme, "The Girl of My Dreams," was especially written to fit the personality of this dainty star. It blends into the scenes, increasing their merit, and renders a service to the musician that is invaluable.

Practical for any combination. Complete in every way. Organ or piano solo. Easy to play.

High Praise for Woman Reviewers from Great Sir Hubert of Cincy

WE have always contended that woman's work in winning the war could not compare with woman's share in the projection room battles to make the screen safe for exhibitors. From time to time, and even more frequently, we meet brave women in the darkness of trade-showing rooms doing their bit side by side with the equally sincere men who assemble to pass opinions on films as preshown for pre-release and otherwise.

Now comes the Col. Henry Watterson of Trade Newspaperdom to back us up in our opinion. For lo, and behold, "Marse Bill," the "Sage of Cincy," comes right out on his front page with these kind words in praise of the woman reviewer. He says he's strong for the feminine screen opinion:

"Just because she is always honest.

"No one can hand her a pinch of change, a wad of bills or a consideration of any kind and induce her to write disingenuously of a film.

"She always says just what she thinks and feels. Her every utterance registers a conviction.

"She may not always be right.

"She may not always hit the exact, the whole and the unadulterated truth, for it is given to few, if any, of us to do that, but always she tries to.

"Always, too, she is sincere."

On behalf of Frances Agnew, Helen Pollock, Aileen St. John-Brenon, Louella Parsons, Agnes Smith, Marion Russell, Margaret Campbell, Helen Rockwell, Harriett Underhill, Allison Smith, Margaret MacDonald and the other ladies who meet all films and take 'em as they find 'em, we extend thanks to "Marse Bill" for "them kind words."

They are truly deserved—and no Bushwah!

Sustaining Suspense in Summaries.

OUR idea of suspense is to follow the line of little . . . that go with the detailed summaries in some film reviews. We mean the series of Joefarnhams between here and there at the top of the column. The eyc creeps along the row of little dots, while palpatating anxiety increases in proportion to the width of the column.

Try it, read it slow, let the little dots sink in, and get the full benefit of one of the pleasantest experiences of your busy day.

Now then, they're off:

"His Picture in the Paper."

This is our New Year's present to Marc MacDermott, skillful actor and fine gentleman, who has lately been seen all too infrequently upon the screen. LIEUTENANT of the Marsh Aviation Field Corps met Bennie Zeidman, the Fairbanks publicity dispenser, on his return from the East.

"Is it true," asked the officer in all seriousness, "that you invited the President to dinner with Doug while you were in Washington?"

"Not that I know of," observed Bennie, "what do you mean?"

"Why," was the reply, "we heard that when you arrived in the Capital you rushed to Secretary Tumulty's office, and seizing him by the hand, cried: 'Joe, will you ask the President to come to dinner with Mr. Fairbanks tonight at the Willard?' They said that Mr. Tumulty protested that it was impossible, whereupon you replied, 'It's all right—Doug's going to buy the dinner'."

Mr. Zeidman indignantly denied the allegation, but the lieutenant remains unconvinced.

This Will Sell as Much Film As Some of the "Publicity"

NOT everyone in THE industry was privileged to be in Atlantic City during the sessions of the Reconstruction Congress of the United States Chamber of Commerce when THE industry asked Uncle Sam to hike away from the screen. Charles M. Schwab, boss boat-builder of the world, was there, and, in case you missed it, we reprint from the New York Times this much of a speech he made.

"Do you know," said Mr. Schwab, "the other night when I was down at Bethlehem, I had a dream. I dreamt that I ought to go to confession to tell some of the things I did twenty-odd years ago when a lot of big corporations were formed. You know, I had a little to do with the formation of one of them, at least. But in my dream I seemed to feel that I ought not to go to confession, unless I took Mr. Morgan with me. But then I remembered Mr. Morgan was a Protestant while I was a Catholic, and, in the dream, I couldn't figure out for a long time how I was going to bring Morgan to the confessional.

"But then a happy thought struck me. I remembered that my parish priest, good Father Zahm, who is sitting here on the platform, had a sympathy as broad as charity, and so I asked him if I could bring Morgan to confession. He thought it over for a while and concluded that he would strain a point and receive Mr. Morgan's confession with my own. A few days later, as I dreamed the dream, we went to confession and we told Father Zahm—Mr. Morgan and I—a lot of things that we had never told anybody else before and we never told anybody else afterward. Finally, when we seemed to be all through with our stories, the good father said:

"'You fellows wait here for a little, and I'll be back.'

"It seemed to me that he was gone an unconscionable while, and I was getting nervous. I waited a while longer, and then I said to Mr. Morgan:

"'Where do you suppose he's gone?' and Mr. Morgan replied:

"'Oh, he's just gone out in some other part of the church and will be back shortly.'

"I thought for a moment, and then I said: 'Don't you believe it. As sure as shooting, he's gone for a cop.'"

Toward the end of his speech Mr. Schwab spoke about the work of the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the splendid loyalty and co-operation shown by most of the men.

"But," he continued, "there were some slackers, of course. I remember being one day in a Pacific Coast yard, and the foreman pointed to a man, saying that he did not know what to do with him. I asked what was the matter.

"'Why,' was the answer, 'he's lazy and no good. Yesterday I told him so—told him to get out of the yard and never come back. But he was right back on the job this morning. I asked him if I hadn't fired him the day before, and he replied: "You did that, and don't you do it again. When I got home and told my wife she gave me hell."'"

The Queen of England Becomes Film Star in Patriotic Drama

WE LEARN from our London Evening News that Her Majesty has gone into pictures. A most important item in connection with the affair tells of the distribution of "Women Who Win," to be handled by T. H. Davison, an English film magnate who has visited America with profit to himself and to us.

Percy Nash, acting for Women's Service, a patriotic organization, produced the film, and the scene in which the Queen appeared was filmed in Agricultural Hall one afternoon. The artists on the scene were already at work, one of them being engaged "repairing airplanes."

The episode, which was filmed as the Queen walked up to this artist, has resulted in a very fine picture.

"How long have you been here?" the Queen asked the girl.

"Only a day."

"Why! How's that?"

"I'm a kinema artist, your Majesty," demurely replied the girl, who is the heroine of the story.

"Really! How do you do?" And the Queen shook hands warmly with the girl.

"We are very interested in the pictures," added the Queen as she passed out of the scene smiling.

LIFE IN THE INDUSTRY.

Another Spasm in Our Serial Scoop.
By Joseph F. Lee.

SYNOPSIS of What's Already Happened: O. Fuller Bull, General Sales Manager of a Certain Fillum Co., having been challenged to send a special "stunt" idea to one of his customers, writes the ensuing letter to Mr. Exhibitor, Somewhere, Nebr., to wit and viz.:

The Fatal Letter.

"Your recent communication of the 23d inst. addressed to me received and contents noted. No, I don't know how the 'Singing Arc Lamp' stunt is worked, but just to show you our company will not stop at anything to try and hold your business and help you in your 'hour of need,' I suggest the following ideas or stunts:

"I see by contracts sent in by our Mr. Rand and O. K. by McNally, our District Manager, that in the near future you have booked from us 'Should a Baby Die?' and have worked out the following stunt for you:

"About three weeks before you play this feature have some small cards printed announcing the fact that on the night you show 'Should a Baby Die?' you are going to give away to the person in the audience holding the right ticket a real live baby. This is bound to cause comment and is appropriate in keeping with the title or spirit of the feature.

"Then go to a baby store and buy a bonnet, cloak and mittens for a six months' old infant and exhibit these next to one of our one-sheet posters of 'Should a Baby Die?' in front of your theatre, explaining on a neat sign that these are the clothes the baby wears you are going to give away. Now comes the confidential part. Go out in the country and buy a young pig three or four weeks old. Dress him up in the baby's clothes and get a bottle of milk with a nipple, and when the person holding the right ticket steps on the stage make the following announcement:

"You are the winner of a baby.

"You then state age, color of eyes and whether male or female and I now take the pleasure in presenting you with a real live baby—pig.

"Reach in and hand him the dressed-up baby pig. Be sure and write me how much this increases your receipts as I may use your testimonial letter in our trade paper advertising; also send one of your pictures."

RESIGNS AS GENERAL'S DALLAS MANAGER

James B. Kelly Goes to Film Clearing House—Is Succeeded by Wallace Walthall, Brother of Henry

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

JAMES B. KELLY has resigned as manager of the General, in Dallas, and is now assistant to W. L. Merrell, special representative of the Film Clearing House, Inc., who has come here from New York to take charge of the Dallas office. The Film Clearing House, Inc., has offices at 1812½ Commerce street, the former General offices.

Succeeding James B. Kelly is Wallace Walthall, who was special representative of the General Film Company at Atlanta, Ga. Mr. Walthall, who is the brother of Henry Walthall, took charge of the General offices here December 16.

Use Long Distance Phone Instead of Wire.

Because the telegraph service following the federalization of various companies is so poor, Dallas film exchange managers and exhibitors also are doing most of their long distance business by telephone. The two Dallas telephone companies, the Bell and the Automatic, have recently merged and every effort has been made to perfect the long distance service which is proving satisfactory. Consequently, the telephone is being used rather than the telegraph, although it is more costly. Delayed and mislaid telegrams have been causing film men much inconvenience and expense lately.

Dugger Resigns from Vitagraph.

J. B. Dugger, for several years Dallas manager for Vitagraph, and one of the most popular film men in the Southwest, has resigned his position and severed his connection with the company. Mr. Dugger has not made public his plans for the future, but it is understood that he will be connected with another film company in Dallas. He had been contemplating resigning for some weeks. He will be back in Dallas late in December, after going on a quail shooting trip in East Texas.

Succeeding J. B. Dugger as manager of the Dallas branch is H. J. Bailey. Mr. Bailey, who took charge December 16, comes from Syracuse, N. Y., where he was Vitagraph manager. He also was manager at Minneapolis.

First National Holders Renew Contracts.

Manager Le Roy Bickel, of First National, reports that over 90 per cent. of the First National franchise holders in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas have renewed their contracts for the year 1919, and also that quite a number of new franchise holders have signed up.

Chavey and Lilly Visit Dallas.

A. F. Chavey, of the Hippodrome, Wolfe City, and Jack Lilly, of the Hippodrome, Commerce, were in Dallas during the second week in December, meeting their friends along film row. Both have been in officers' training camps, but have received their discharges.

Lynch Stricken with Influenza.

S. A. Lynch, of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, in Dallas to visit his branch office, was stricken with influenza, and on December 16 was in a serious condition in his suite of rooms at the Adolphus Hotel. He is under care of Dr. W. H. White, of Dallas, and Mrs. Lynch, who was summoned from her home at Asheville, N. C., is in Dallas with him. General Manager Freeman, of Triangle, came to Dallas from New York in company with his wife, to be with Mr. Lynch during his illness.

Brevities.

Miss E. Johnson, of the Liberty Theatre, Houston, one of the best known women exhibitors in the Southwest, was reported as being critically ill with pneumonia December 15.

Al Bartlett, formerly with Pathe, has joined the Paramount sales force.

R. E. McIntire, traveling auditor for Famous Players-Lasky, visited Dallas in mid-December.

Jack Boland, manager of the First National Branch at Oklahoma City, and J. Eison, his auditor, visited the First National offices in Dallas during December.

Claude Ezelle, manager of the Dallas Select branch, is seriously ill with influenza.

Exhibitors Visiting Dallas.

The following exhibitors were in Dallas visiting film exchanges and arranging bookings for the new year during the second week in December: E. T. Peter, Electric, Cuero; John Saeg, Grand, Ennis; J. W. Wright, Palace, Arlington; William Batsell, King, Sherman; Miss Callie Shotwell, Rex, Houston; Joe Phillips, Odeon, Fort Worth; J. A. Lempke, Crystal, Waco; Frank Miller, Pastime theatres, Duncan and Marlowe, Okla.; Ed McGuire, Egypt, Fort Worth; Quint Thompson, Lyric, Fort Worth; J. R. Robb, of Robb & Rowley, Big Spring, San Angelo, Hillsboro and Abilene.

Cincinnati Trade Letter

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Authorities Close the Music Hall Theatre.

ONE of the first instances of a penalty imposed on a moving picture exhibitor on account of violating orders regarding closing, and perhaps the only one, was that ordered by the Newport, Ky., police against the Music Hall Theatre at Eleventh and York streets. Reports alleged that the management was permitting women with children in their arms to enter the theatre, and, as this was against the rulings of the health authorities entered into in accordance with action taken by all of the cities on both sides of the river around Cincinnati, the theatre was ordered closed. It is said that it may be kept closed indefinitely.

Pathescope Opens Cincinnati Office.

The Pathescope Company, of New York, which makes a moving picture projecting machine which can be used at home or for sales purposes in offices, has established a Cincinnati branch. Quarters have been secured on East Sixth street at No. 117, over the Morris Bank, and F. J. Ronnell is in charge of the office and surrounding territory.

Miloslowky Dead in Chicago.

J. MILOSLOWKY, former owner of the Palace and Family theatres here, died suddenly in Chicago after a two days' attack of pneumonia. He had been in ill health for some years past, and retired from the picture business last summer, selling the Palace to the Blank interests and the Family to a local syndicate. Since then he has spent much of his time at the watering places. Miloslowky is survived by his widow and two daughters. He was wealthy and owned extensive automobile interests in Chicago.

Trade Showing of "Virtuous Wives."

The trade showing of "Virtuous Wives" at the Garden was the big event locally, and nearly a hundred Iowa exhibitors were in attendance. The picture was pronounced one of the best in years, and several big contracts resulted for the Blank office. The musical score was played by the Garden orchestra and pipe organ under the direction of Arthur Hayes. A road representative of Joseph Mayer, who produced the picture, was present.

Clark Receives Honorable Discharge.

Lafe Clark, formerly assistant manager of the Yale Photoplay Company, has returned from the Great Lakes Naval School after being honorably discharged. Clark will rest until after the first of the year, and will likely again go into the film business.

Work Progressing on Big Theatre.

Work is progressing quite rapidly on the new theatre at Sixth and Grand avenue. The house will be one of the most beautiful in the West. Rumor at times has connected Ascher Brothers, Pantages, the Orpheum Circuit, Ruben and Finkelstein and A. H. Blank with the lease. Investigation of the first four rumors has been found to be without foundation. There is still considerable talk about the Blank interests taking the house, but Mr. Blank states that no deal has been consummated as yet. It is planned to have the house in readiness for opening on or about April 1. It is to have 2,000 seats, and, since the vaudeville interests have passed it up, will have no provision for a stage, but will be devoted to pictures.

Blank Visits Chicago.

A. H. Blank spent a few days in Chicago in conference with prominent film officials. He signed up a few new features for his Davenport theatres while in the Windy City.

"Kaiser's Finish" Does Big Business.

J. C. Collins, who is handling "The Kaiser's Finish" for the Blank office, reports that the picture is doing a splendid business on a percentage basis. An elaborate lobby is carried, and Collins is putting up a strong campaign that seems to be getting results.

Moore to Redecorate His Theatre.

Leo Moore, of Centerville, was a visitor at local exchanges during the past week. Mr. Moore is having plans drawn for the redecoration of his theatre in the spring.

THEATRES REDUCE DISPARITY IN PRICES

Ottawa Picture Houses Even Up Admissions—Five Prominent Ones Now Charge Around Thirty Cents

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

STARTING with the week of December 16, the leading moving picture theatres of Ottawa, Ontario, were on a more even plane with regard to prices, whereas formerly the scales of admission rates were almost as varied as there are theatres in the city.

For many months the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, had been getting better prices than any other picture theatre in the city. Evening prices at the Regent have been 15 cents for the balcony, 25 cents for the orchestra floor and 35 cents for boxes. Main floor seats for matinee performances have sold for 15 cents. Similar prices have also been charged at the Family Theatre, which offers a combination picture and vaudeville program. The Dominion Theatre, offering vaudeville mainly, charges 10, 20 and 30 cents for evening shows.

Evening prices at the Imperial Theatre, an out-and-out moving picture theatre, had been 10 and 20 cents, and similar prices prevailed at the Centre Theatre. Both of these theatres have raised their prices five cents, so that the Regent, Imperial and Centre theatres, as well as the family Theatre with its vaudeville, are now in the 25-cent class for general admissions, with 15 cents for the balcony. Afternoon prices are 10 and 15 cents.

The Strand Theatre, Ottawa, a downtown house, is continuing with its 10 and 15-cent scale, while other houses around town still charge 5 and 10-cent prices.

Contrary to an expectation that theatre prices might start to come down after the war, the general trend in Ottawa is for still higher admission fees. One or two of the local exhibitors are already talking about a 35-cent top price, but it may take some time for this to be adopted, particularly in view of the announcements about two brand new theatres in the Capitol City.

Has a "Twelfth Anniversary Week."

Manager Hanitch, of the Dominion Theatre, Ottawa, observed the week of December 16 as the "Twelfth Anniversary Week" of the theatre. Special attractions were offered.

Manager Jennings, of the Strand Theatre, Ottawa, is also contracting the anniversary week fever. It is expected that the "disease" will break out in violent form during the first week in the new year.

Putting His Theatre in the Limelight.

Manager Crossman, of the Coliseum Theatre, 2215 Queen street east, has gathered a number of new ideas for this house, the ownership of which he recently acquired. The Coliseum is a suburban theatre of fair size, and just before its sale to Crossman it had been freshly decorated and partly remodeled, so that there was nothing to be done in this respect.

Crossman's first move was to line up his bookings for the month to come and to arrange a campaign to fit the pictures. He decided upon the plan of issuing a six-page folder every two weeks, and this contains a list of all future attractions. Twelve outside advertisements of standard size have been secured for this program.

A lost and found department was formally established at the manager's office in the theatre. A free checking department for baby carriages, bicycles, umbrellas, coats, parcels and other impedimenta has also been established, use of a vacant store in the theatre building being made for the purpose. Crossman also adopted the stunt of providing special pictures for children at the Saturday matinees.

As a further attraction at Christmas time, Crossman, who was formerly a member of the "Crossman Banjo Fiends" in big time vaudeville, arranged to have a large Christmas tree in the theatre from which to give small presents to child patrons at the Christmas Day performances.

He has also started building up a mailing list for the fortnightly program—something that the Coliseum has never had before. Three thousand residents of the neighborhood will receive copies of the program by mail every two weeks, the names having been secured from the city directory, telephone book and other channels.

Votes Against Proposed Exchange Fire Law.

Members of the Winnipeg Board of Trade took a mail vote on the question of the advisability of the proposed film exchange by-law which will compel local exchanges to move into one-story fireproof structures. The vote was overwhelming against the proposed law, 431 members marking the ballot paper as being opposed to the legislation and 163 supporting the by-law. The vote on a question as to whether local exchanges and theatres should be asked to pay additional taxes favored the film men even more than the ballot on the exchange building question.

"Musical Travelogues" at the Family.

H. C. LaMarre, formerly manager of the Allen Theatre in Westmount, Montreal, has organized a vaudeville act with John Fiddes, a well-known Canadian soloist, which is to have an indefinite run at the Family Theatre, Ottawa, starting Monday, December 9. The act has been called "Musical Travelogues," and it has a company of ten persons. Fiddes is well known in Canadian moving picture circles, as he has been the soloist at many theatres during the past three or four years. LaMarre, who possesses a good voice, also appears in the act.

The Family Theatre has a combination photoplay and vaudeville policy, and it is the intention of Manager Macdonald to make the "Musical Travelogues" a permanent feature at the theatre.

Indiana News Letter

By Indiana Trade News Service, 69 Layman Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

Gary Theatres Open to Good Business.

THE various theatres of Gary, Ind., played to capacity houses at their first Sunday show last week after the removal of the Board of Health's closing ban because of the decrease in influenza and pneumonia cases. Good pictures were presented at each and every theatre in the city, and the audiences were unusually responsive, indicating their appreciation of the pictures after their long absence of amusements. The theatre managers, in compliance with the suggestions from the Board of Health, were strict concerning the admission of anyone who appeared to have a cold.

Spray and Tarman Lease the Grand.

Charles Spray, formerly manager of the Blinn Theatre at Frankfort, Ind., and C. T. Tarman, who has a theatre at Sheridan, Ind., have leased the Grand Theatre at Bluffton, Ind., from the Gaiety Theatre Company, of that place. The change of management began December 16, with the stipulation that the Gaiety Company reserves the right to show "Hearts of the World" at a later date.

Messrs. Bommerscheim and Belger, managers of the Gaiety Company, say they intend to concentrate their efforts in the future on the popular Gaiety Theatre, which they have operated in conjunction with the Grand. Mr. Spray was formerly affiliated with the Columbia Amusement Company, of Frankfort, and for the last eighteen months operated the Blinn and Royal theatres there. He is an experienced exhibitor, and his friends are predicting continued success for him in the operation of the new project at Bluffton.

Orpheum Holds a Potato Matinee.

A potato matinee, the admission for which was one potato, was given by the management of the Orpheum Theatre at Elkhart, Ind., on Saturday, December 21. All of the tubers—and there were several bushels collected—were turned over to Miss Bessie Owens, city welfare worker, for distribution among the poor of the city at Christmas time. "The Midnight Patrol," a Select film, was the attraction.

Annual Licenses for Exchanges.

All exchanges in Indianapolis have been notified by Jacob H. Hilkene, director of the city's fire prevention bureau, that on January 1 they must take out annual licenses, which cost $25 each. This is as a result of a provision of the city ordinance which was passed some time ago, and which was designed to reduce fire hazards at film exchanges.

Will Give Christmas Presents to Orphans.

For the last thirteen years, David W. Maurice, manager of the Family Theatre at Lafayette, Ind., has played the role of Santa Claus for the little orphans of the city, and is going to do the same thing again this year. This year he has booked a special show for the kiddies, and intends to set aside a certain day for the entertainment. Following the show the children will receive candy and presents, and all will be taken to and from the theatre in machines belonging to the Red Cross Motor Corps.

Film Men Returning from Service.

MANY familiar faces are again to be seen in the film district now that Uncle Sam is beginning to release his soldier boys from the camps and cantonments in this country. In common with employers in all other lines of business in this city, the film men contemplate re-employing all of the people they lost through enlistment or the draft. This matter has received the attention of the Washington Film Exchange Managers' Association, and its members are making room for the returned boys.

Earle E. Reese, who has been in the officers' training camp at Camp Lee, near Petersburg, Va., has returned to Washington and is now connected with the Exhibitors' Co-Operative Exchange on Ninth street, assisting Abe Dresner in handling the "Submarine Eye" and the Houdini serial, which the exchange has just secured for Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Louis Malinsky has returned to the employ of Harry Crandall and is now operating at the Metropolitan. He was called to the colors and was assigned to a motorcycle division at a camp near Baltimore.

John Payette is back on the job with Goldwyn, having been discharged from the army. He was a sergeant and was attached to an engineer company at Camp Humphries.

G. A. Sherwood, who was called to Camp Lee, Va., for service, and who was formerly with the Mutual Exchange, is expected back in Washington as "Mister" Sherwood within a few days.

Rosenthal Returns to the Fold.

Lester Rosenthal, who some time ago was with the General Film Company in this city, is now connected with the Famous Players-Lasky Exchange. He has been out of the film business for some time. William A. Busch, formerly assistant manager for the Famous Players' Exchange, is now a roadman with the Metro Exchange.

GUTHARD LEASES MAJESTIC THEATRE

Detroit's Beautiful Amphitheatre Passes Into His Hands January 1—Future Policy Not Announced

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

THE Majestic Theatre, Woodward and Willis avenues, Detroit's beautiful amphitheatre playhouse, has been leased by the Majestic Theatre Company to Henry J. Guthard, treasurer of the company, and himself one of the pioneers in the industry. He has for several years been operating the Norwood and Fine Arts theatres, both on Woodward avenue. With the Majestic, Mr. Guthard will have three theatres on that thoroughfare.

Mr. Guthard has no announcement to make as to the future policy of the Majestic, which passes into his hands on January 1. He is certain, however, to continue booking first-run pictures, and they will be the best the market affords.

M. W. McGee, managing director of the Majestic, may be induced to remain a while longer, although he handed in his resignation some time ago to take effect on January 1.

Change of Policy at the Regent.

Charles H. Miles, who operates the Regent and Orpheum theatres, and who has been operating the Regent this season as a first-run picture house exclusively, announces that starting January 29 the Regent will change its policy, playing six acts of vaudeville and a feature picture, which will be first and second run. There will be one show in the afternoon and one at night, with prices 25, 35 and 50 cents. On Saturdays, Sundays and holidays there will be an extra night show. The Regent, which is Detroit's largest theatre from the standpoint of seating capacity, is located at Woodward and the Grand Boulevard, about three miles from the downtown section. The annual rental is around $50,000 per year, but from the standpoint of size, beauty and substantiability, it stands alone in the state of Michigan. Tom Ealand, of the Orpheum, will continue in complete charge of all bookings, while Courtland Marsden will continue as the Regent house manager and publicity director.

Hyman Gets Michigan Rights to "Woman."

Arthur S. Hyman, of the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, Owen Building, Detroit, returned from New York on December 17 with the announcement that he had purchased the Michigan rights to Maurice Tourneur's picture, "Woman." Mr. Hyman has already secured a first-run at the Colonial Theatre, Detroit, and will play it throughout the state on percentage only, putting it out as a regular road attraction, with special billing and publicity.

Stuart Goes to the Fox Exchange.

Frank Stuart, who has been with the Detroit branch of the General Film Company for nearly five years, has tendered his resignation, and has accepted a position as assistant to M. S. Bailey, manager of the Fox Exchange in Detroit. Mr. Stuart succeeds Eddie Fontaine, who has gone with the Detroit branch of the Artcraft-Paramount as supervisor of bookings and service.

World Correspondent Extends Thanks.

As we enter upon a New Year, it is appropriate at this time for the Moving Picture World correspondent in the Motor City to extend his thanks to the exhibitors and exchangemen who have co-operated so splendidly during the past year in making the news columns of the Moving Picture World. The Detroit office of the Moving Picture World is at 719 Free Press Building, and the telephone number is Cherry 2951. The World correspondent is always pleased to meet exhibitors and exchangemen, and will be glad indeed to receive news at any time.

Both exhibitors and exchangemen will have many problems confronting them during the year in the state of Michigan. The legislature meets after January 1, and no one knows what is in store for the moving picture industry in the way of adverse legislation.

Trade evils still exist in the industry, but closer co-operation between all branches of the industry are bound to minimize them and stamp out some of them.

Hennessy Becomes Churchill's Assistant.

R. J. Churchill, special representative for the United Picture Theatres of America, has arrived in Detroit, and has appointed to assist him in the sales work Earl V. Hennessy, for the past few months with Goldwyn, and for several years an exhibitor. Mr. Hennessy knows the territory, knows the local situation and knows most of the Michigan exhibitors.

Mundstuk Gets More Pictures for Michigan.

Dave Mundstuk, of the Strand Features, Detroit, just back from New York, announces many new pictures for Michigan. Among them a series of two-reel Westerns with Tom Mix, a series of Kay-Bee subjects, and several features, "The Battle of Gettysburg" and "Unconditional Surrender." He has already booked them to L. H. Gardner, of the Empress and Royal theatres, Detroit, and Lipp & Cross, of Battle Creek.

Beware of Merchants' Matinee.

Exhibitors through the country should beware of a man who visits them in the interest of a merchants' matinee. In Detroit, he went by the name of Wilson. His stunt is to make the merchants pay in advance to have advertising film thrown on the screen of a certain theatre. He gets the consent of the theatre, and then disappears after collecting the money, thus putting the theatre "in bad" with merchants.

Washington Shows Detroit-Made Film.

The Washington Theatre, Detroit, week of December 15 played "The Mysterious Mr. Browning," the first Detroit-made feature, produced by the H. N. Nelson studios, and starring Walter Miller, Edna Mason and Paul Panzer. It was made last summer. In connection with the Washington showing the Nelson Company made pictures on the stage of the theatre at every performance, being the interior scenes of a two-reel comedy, "The Cub Reporter," the scenario being written by Al Weeks, the dramatic editor of the Detroit News. The finished comedy was shown at the same theatre the following week. It is the plan of the Nelson Company to produce a series of features and comedies during the coming year.

Steele Leases the Regent Theatre.

James Steele, who makes his home in Pittsburgh, Pa., and former division manager for the Famous Players-Lasky Company, has leased the new Regent Theatre, Bay City, which gives him, in addition, the Washington and Wenonah theatres in that city—three in all. Mr. Steele makes his Detroit headquarters in the Book Building on Washington Boulevard. He also operates the Lincoln Square Theatre in Detroit.

Michigan News.

Detroit, Mich.—A dinner to Eddie Polo, Universal serial star, was given at the Hotel Statler, Sunday evening, December 15. Among those present were Will Rogers and Billie Ritchie, of Ziegfeld's Follies; Paul Bush, Detroit Universal manager, and Harry Scott, manager of the Madison Film Exchange, Detroit.

Saline, Mich.—F. C. Zimmerman will open his new theatre around January 1. It is up to date in every way.

PARKER RESUSCITATES THE ORPHEUM

Run Down Utica Theatre Put On a Profitable Basis By a Man Without Showmanship Experience

By Clifford Carroll, Utica Observer, Utica, N. Y.

THE new Orpheum Theatre, one of Utica's largest neighborhood theatres, is unique in that it upsets that stated phrase that a theatre, in order to do a good business, must have constant personal attention of a man long experienced in the show business. The new Orpheum is a remarkable illustration of how a run down theatre was put on a paying basis by a man who is not a showman. The present lessee of the theatre is Carroll N. Parker, of Niagara Falls, N. Y., who leased the new Orpheum for his father in September, 1916. Shortly after taking possession of the house, Mr. Parker, Sr., suffered a breakdown in health, and had to go away to his home. As his son had furnished the capital, the lease was in his name, and, of course, he had to keep it up. He hired a showman to manage the theatre. The results were unsatisfactory.

William P. Donlon, for some years proprietor of the old Orpheum on Lafayette street, was manager during the summer and fall months of 1917, and he started the theatre on a paying basis. When Mr. Donlon left, Mr. Parker decided to run the theatre himself from Niagara Falls with the help of his employes at the theatre. Although not being a showman, he has made a signal success of the theatre entirely by what he calls "absent treatment." Mr. Parker is an accountant and office manager of one of the largest manufacturing plants in Niagara Falls. In taking over the direct control of the theatre, Mr. Parker took the stand that a moving picture theatre was no different from any other business, and if good, sound business principles were used that was all that was necessary to make it a success.

Theatre Has Fine Location.

The new Orpheum was formerly the South Street Theatre, and was opened in July, 1914, by the Lumberg Theatre Company, associated with William Mackie, who acted as manager. They continued the theatre until Mr. Parker leased it in the fall of 1916. The house is situated in the centre of a fine residential district and growing business section in the central part of the city. Situated on a car line, its posters of current attractions can be plainly seen by a large number of persons at all times of the day. The exterior of the building is of gray cement and red brick, and the interior is prettily but plainly decorated. There are 800 opera seats, all on the main floor. There is a centre and two side aisles, and a cross aisle about half way down leading to the centre exit. Along the right side of the house are three exits, and at the rear are five pairs of double doors, which are used as exit and entrance doors. During the showing of the picture the house is lighted by amber colored bulbs suspended from the ceiling with inverted fixtures. Along the side walls on each side, about six feet from the floor, are attractive lighting fixtures, some of which are lighted with small amber colored bulbs during the show. At the rear of the back row of seats is a sort of board backing, which keeps the cold air and drafts from those sitting in the back when the doors are opened. This is much appreciated by those who sit near the back, especially in the cold weather.

Atmospheric Screen Used.

The pictures are projected upon an Atmospheric screen, and through the alertness and experience of the operator, Samuel Gray, the new Orpheum boasts of one of the best projected pictures in the city. The screen is surrounded by a heavy black border, which offsets the edges of the picture in a fine manner. A mercury arc rectifier is used in changing current.

At the centre of the rear lobby wall is a spacious ticket office with windows on all sides, and in back of which dainty curtains are hung. On the walls of the lobby was framed portraits of picture players and announcements of coming attractions. The lighting fixtures are attractive, and the walls and ticket office are prettily decorated. The manager's office, store room and projection room are of adequate size, and are located on the second floor.

The house is heated by steam radiators placed along each of the side walls of the building and in the lobby. There is also a small radiator in the booth and manager's office. Three large ventilators in the roof furnish fresh air, as do a number of openings near the ceiling along the walls.

Program Changed Daily.

The new Orpheum changes its pictures daily, and has a matinee from 1:30 p. m. to 5 p. m. and evening shows from 7 to 11 p. m. On Saturdays the shows are continuous from 1:30 to 11 p. m. Mr. Parker uses the open booking plan entirely. The average show presented consists of a five-reel feature and news weekly and comedies. The prices are: Adults 15 cents and children 11 cents in the evening, and at the matinees six cents for all seats. The new Orpheum uses an advertisement and reader every day in the morning and two evening papers, and C. A. Carroll, a local newspaperman, is press agent.

Advertises in Three Dailies.

Music for the pictures is furnished by a New Era Concert Organ and a violinist. Double feature programs on various days of the week have proven popular with patrons, and may be made a permanent feature of the policy. Practically every theatre uses but one inch, but Mr. Parker, firm in the conviction that advertising pays, threw a bomb shell into the offices of the other theatres here by coming out with a three-inch advertisement in the three daily papers here. The firm belief in Utica has been that a neighborhood house need not advertise, but the new Orpheum has upset this theory, having drawn persons living a long ways from the theatre to see a certain picture, the advertising of which has appealed to them. Mr. Parker has now booked second-run Artcraft and Paramount pictures, in addition to a number of big open booking plan features.

New Orpheum Theatre, Utica, New York.

Park Will Revert to Dramatic Stock.

The Park Theatre, Utica, unable to do business with pictures, will go into dramatic stock. The last time the theatre opened was on September 23 last, at which time three vaudeville acts, a feature picture, comedy and weekly were given. Following a three weeks' closing due to the epidemic the house reopened with a picture policy, and after a week went into a double feature policy. The Park is located in an out-of-the-theatre district, but is a beautiful house. Last year it was run in the same manner as the Strand, New York, with a big orchestra, best productions and concert singers.

Finds Syracuse a Good Show Town.

Ye scribe made a visit to Syracuse on Sunday, December 15, and if ever there was a good show town Syracuse is the best bet. Of course it was Sunday, but I was informed that it was the same every day in the week. Lines reaching from box office way out to the street car tracks and middle of the road were in evidence at every theatre. In Utica on Sunday it is so dead that there are many residents who go to Syracuse to relieve the monotony.

Utica Shorts.

Alfred S. Black, of Rockland, Me., and Samuel Goldstein, of Springfield, Mass., were visitors in Utica last week.

The Savoy Theatre, a house in the Italian section of the city, is now making arrangements for an early opening with pictures.

Seattle Trade Letter

By S. J. Anderson, 807 Leary Building, Seattle, Wash.

Fox Official in Seattle.

THE Seattle Fox office had as visitors last week the general manager, W. R. Sheehan; Carl Downing, head of publicity for the company, and Paul C. Mooney, district manager. They left for Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles early in the week, taking A. W. Eden, Seattle manager, with them.

Hicks Called to New York.

Harry H. Hicks, who has had charge of the Seattle Select office for the past six months, received orders this week to report to New York. As soon as a new manager can be found for the Seattle office he will leave for the East.

Resigns from Liberty Theatre.

Col. E. A. Braden has resigned the management of the Liberty Theatre at Camp Lewis, where he has been for the past year. Charles Salisbury, one of the best known publicity men in the show business, has succeeded him. Mr. Salisbury comes to Camp Lewis from Camp Fremont, where he managed the Liberty Theatre.

Exhibitors' to Open Calgary Branch.

The Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation, of Toronto, has decided to open a branch office in Calgary, Alberta, early in 1919, according to a recent anouncement. The company already has exchange branches in Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg.

With the opening of the Calgary office, a representative of the company will work out of that branch to cover the theatres in British Columbia.

Davis Recovering from Influenza.

W. C. Bachmeyer, district manager for the Metro, with headquarters in Cincinnati, who has been in Pittsburgh for the past ten days, looking after the office during Manager Davis' absence, expects to be able to leave for the Queen City, the latter part of the week, as Mr. Davis is rapidly recovering from his attack of the influenza, and expects to be back in the office soon.

Pohrer Returns to Pittsburgh.

Joseph Pohrer, formerly operator at the Fifth Avenue Arcade, who has spent the past year in the engineering department of the United States Army at Washington, has returned to the city and will soon be back on the job again.

Cohen Back from Officers' Training Camp.

L. R. Cohen, a well known roadman of Pittsburgh, is back in the city again after six months' absence in the Officers' Training Camp at Camp Lee, Va. He is working for the Universal and is specializing on Universal special attractions.

Philadelphia Trade Letter

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Bethel Select's Special Representative.

BILL BETHEL, who has been released from the navy, and who was formerly identified with the Metro Film Exchange for several years, is now with the Select Film Exchange as special representative. Max Milder, the manager, reports a flourishing business, and contemplates a good season ahead.

Segall Takes Over the Drury.

Charles Segall, proprietor of the Apollo, Fifty-Sixth and Franklin theatres, has just added the Drury at Thirteenth street and Germantown avenue to his chain of theatres. The Drury was formerly owned by J. Conway, who has been an exhibitor for several years, and who also holds other amusement interests in this city.

Hatch May Open Exchange in Philadelphia.

J. Frank Hatch, of the Hatch Film Corporation, of Pittston and Newark, is considering the prospects of coming into Eastern Pennsylvania territory and opening an exchange in Philadelphia for the distribution of his state rights productions. Mr. Hatch has earned the reputation of being an enterprising showman, having operated several theatres throughout the country besides having been successful in exploiting "The Whip."

Official Film Breaks Records.

"Under Four Flags," the third official war picture of the Government's series, was shown at the Stanley Theatre during the week of December 16, and played to the biggest Monday night in the history of the theatre.

Gill Complimented on Business Secured.

J. F. Gill, manager of the Mutual Exchange, received a letter from the new Affiliated headquarters of the Mutual commending him on the amount of business acquired by the Philadelphia office, and also complimented him upon the efficiency of his staff of employes.

Triangle Holds Weekly Trade Showings.

J. Hagerty, manager of the Triangle Exchange, is holding weekly pre-release reviews every Saturday, which is attended regularly by a large number of local and out of town exhibitors.

Great Crowds at Benefit Show.

Manager Sullivan, of the Belmont Theatre, recently had his hands full trying to hold an exceptionally large crowd in check while giving a benefit performance one Sunday for the relief of devastated France. The crowd became so unruly that he was compelled to call for extra police reserves. Three shows were given during the evening, while the silver offerings were taken at the door. On behalf of Fred G. Nixon Nirdlinger, who is the sponsor of these Sunday performances at several of his theatres, the Triangle has donated many features for the cause.

POTTER TO ENLARGE LIBRARY THEATRE

Plans to Make It the Largest and Most Beautiful House in Warren, Pa.—Also Operates Two in Erie

By Elmer H. Mayer, 231 Collins Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

O. A. POTTER, of the Columbia and Majestic theatres, Erie, also the Library and Columbia theatres, Warren, is making preparations to greatly enlarge and elaborate his Library Theatre in the latter named city. He will close the Columbia here, May 1, which will be taken over by Melvin Brothers, of Bradford, Pa. Plans being formulated entail an expenditure far in excess of $10,000, and will make this house the largest and most beautiful in Warren. Work on the theatre will commence within the near future.

Mention might be made of Potter's Columbia Theatre, in Erie, which, only a few months ago, was leveled to the ground by a disastrous fire. Pictures are put on here, with the aid of stage settings, a large orchestra, and many other little originalities much the same way as the larger houses in New York operate.

Mr. Potter has just recovered from a two weeks' siege of tonsilitis and a touch of the influenza.

Tarbell to Manage Vitagraph in Chicago.

E. F. Tarbell, manager of the Pittsburgh office of the Vitagraph, has been promoted to the managership of the Chicago office of the same concern. He will be succeeded in Pittsburgh by F. W. Redfield, who has been assistant manager of the Chicago office, the latter having been transferred to the Coast, where he will act as division manager, succeeding the late Mr. Naugle, who died recently. Mr. Chatburn was formerly manager of the Pittsburgh office, having left for the Windy City last April, when Mr. Tarbell was promoted from the rank of salesman to manage the office.

F. I. L. M. Club Elects.

At the last meeting of the F. I. L. M. Club, of Pittsburgh, Leo F. Levison, manager of the Select Exchange, was chosen as president, succeeding John McAleer, of the Universal Exchange. J. E. Davis, manager of the Metro Exchange, was re-elected treasurer and William H. Rippard, manager of the Mutual, was chosen secretary. George F. Callahan, of the Exhibitors' Service, was elected chairman of the Board of Appeals. The greatest harmony prevails among the members, and the organization will doubtless continue to do the good work it has accomplished in the past.

Quill, Fox Salesman, Is Promoted.

L. A. Quill, for the past six months a member of the salesforce of the Pittsburgh Fox exchange, was recently promoted to the position of manager of the Denver office of the same company. He left last week for the West. Mr. Quill was formerly auto editor of the Pittsburgh Dispatch, prior to which time he was manager of the Hippodrome Theatre, at McKeesport.

Polo Makes Big Hit in Pittsburgh.

Eddie Polo, Universal serial star, had a pleasant stay in Pittsburgh. He made a big hit at the Minerva Theatre, where the crowds frequently got so dense that there was danger of accident to someone. The front resembled a circus, with tents, sawdust, etc., and helped to attract attention. At the Elmore Theatre the crowds were unable to get in, and at the Century Theatre, East Ohio street, Manager Schweitzer had his hands full to save his railings and other breakable property.

On Saturday afternoon moving pictures were taken of Polo in company with Mayor E. V. Babcock, Director Pritchard, of the Department of Public Works, and Captain Marshall, of the mounted police, on the steps of the City-County building. The picture also showed Manager McAleer presenting a silver loving cup to Polo, a gift of himself and employes of the Universal office force. In the picture also appears the police horse, "Eddie Polo," named after the screen star a year ago, through the instrumentality of Mr. McAleer, the manager of the local Universal Exchange. The films made in Pittsburgh will appear in one of the news weeklies issued by the Universal.

Chaplin Crowd Keeps Lights Out.

Manager A. J. Simon, of the Strand Theatre, Oakland, had all sorts of trouble recently, due to the crowds attracted by Charlie Chaplin in his latest celluloid effusion, "Shoulder Arms." When "Si" returned from supper he could not get into the front of the theatre and had to climb into a window. Pretty soon he received a telephone call to come out in front of the theatre and help disperse the crowds, which interfered with street car traffic, but he failed to accede to the demand. Later in the evening his boss came along, and noticing that the big electric sign was dark, he edged his way to "Si," and started to complain, but the only answer he got was: "Go throw on the switch if you can, it's more than I have been able to do, although I have tried to get through that crowd a dozen times." The boss didn't try it, so the sign remained dark for the night.

Scourge Keeps Many Towns Closed.

The Spanish influenza epidemic is still keeping many towns in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia shut up tight. They are opening up more rapidly now, however, and things look brighter every day. The Paramount and Grand theatres, Sistersville, W. Va., opened up last week after a shutdown covering a period of eight weeks.

Operators' Union Officers.

The new officers of the Moving Picture Operators' Union of Pittsburgh for the coming year are as follows: Joseph Dean, president, formerly secretary for the past five years; James Gilliand, vice-president, formerly of the executive board; James Sipe, secretary, ex-president, a pioneer operator; A. G. Williams, secretary-treasurer, re-elected; Ralph Freeman, business manager, re-elected, also ex-president of the union. The new officers will be installed at the next meeting, January 5, 1919.

New Projection Room at Fox Exchange.

Manager Price, of the Pittsburgh Fox Exchange, announces the completion of his new private projection room, which is one of the largest and most complete in the city. Mr. Price says he will designate one day each week, probably Wednesday, on which he will run pictures all day for the benefit of exhibitors, and invites them to avail themselves of the opportunity of seeing the latest releases.

McAleer Made Member of Safety Council.

John McAleer, manager of the Pittsburgh Universal Exchange, has been appointed a member of the National Safety Council by the Director of Public Safety of Pittsburgh, and will take an active interest in the work of the organization. It is entirely likely that films and slides will be used to edueate the publie in the matter of safety in schools, highways, etc.

Burhorn Succeeds Osborne at General.

J. H. Burhorn is the new manager at the General office, suceeeding M. E. Osborne, who has been transferred to the Philadelphia branch of the same concern. Mr. Burhorn came here from Dallas, Tex., where he was employed by the General. He was also formerly associated with the Kleine exchanges in Dallas and St. Louis.

THOUSANDS FLOCK TO SEE HYGIENE FILM

Police Called When Overflow Crowds Surged at Doors of St. Paul Auditorium to See "The End of the Road"

By William Edward Mulligan, Minneapolis Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

WHILE 4,000 persons surged about the doors of the St. Paul Auditorium on the night of Friday, December 13, officials of the State Board of Health tried vainly to make arrangements for a second showing of "The End of the Road," a social hygiene motion picture.

With more than 3,000 inside, the disappointed crowd became so insistent that police reserves were called to quell the riot. It required nearly two hours to clear the streets, many waiting until the show was over before leaving.

"When I arrived at 7:25 p. m. more than 1,000 persons were jammed about the doors," said Dr. H. G. Irvine, director of the social hygiene division of the State Board of Health. Dr. Irvine found it necessary to call police assistance to enter the auditorium. "When I saw the crowd I tried immediately to arrange for a second show at 9:30 p. m., but without avail," he said.

It was learned that someone picked the doors of the St. Paul Auditorium between 6 and 6:30 p. m., so that when officials of the show opened the house at 7 p. m. they found 2,000 persons already inside; the remaining seats were taken immediately, and before 7:30 it was found necessary to lock the doors and send in a riot call.

On account of the unexpected rush to see "The End of the Road" in St. Paul, Dr. Irvine arranged for two showings at the Minneapolis Auditorium on Saturday night, December 15. Although precautions were taken against a repetition of the St. Paul disorder, thousands flocked to the Minneapolis Auditorium to see the picture, and it was with difficulty that the police maintained order. The Minneapolis showings were given at 7:30 and 9:30 p. m., and the first audience was requested to leave quickly to allow the second show to start promptly.

Demand for tickets to the motion picture was so great that Dr. Mabel S. Ulrich announced early in the week that tickets would not be necessary for admission in Minneapolis. Any person more than 16 years old was admitted without charge until the auditorium was filled. Ten thousand tickets were distributed at the Y. W. C. A. Monday and Tuesday.

The picture was shown as a part of the national campaign of the Social Hygiene Division of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities. The incidents of the story were taken from real life cases that came under the observation of Katharine Bement Davis while she was commissioner of correction in New York.

Holmes Makes 100 Per Cent. Trip.

E. S. Holmes, manager of the Minneapolis Vitagraph Exchange, in the first real work since his recent attack of influenza, returned from a flying trip to La Crosse, Wis., with an armful of contracts representing 100 per cent. of the Vitagraph output for that city. He booked to the Bijou Theatre the rotary star series and the Big V comedies. Manager Koppleberger contracted for all Blue Ribbon features and the Vitagraph serial, "The Fight for Millions." The same productions were booked by the Dreamland Theatre, a suburban house in La Crosse. Mr. Koppleberger also booked the Vitagraph special, "Over the Top," for showing early in the new year.

Hawarden Theatre Is Burned.

The Lyric Theatre at Hawarden, Iowa, was burned to the ground, with a complete loss of equipment. Mr. Jobst and son operated the Lyric. The younger Jobst had his ears and head severely burned, and had a narrow escape from death in the fire.

Burke Back with Select.

Tom Burke has been mustered out of service, returning to his old post as manager of the Minneapolis Exchange of the Westcott Film Corporation. He was called into the service three months ago, entering a special radio course at the Dunwoody Institute. He was ready to sail when the armistice was signed.

Stillwater Theatre Purchased.

F. W. Boll, manager of the Majestic Theatre at Stillwater, Minn., has purchased the Hilltop Theatre in that city. He has remodeled the house and installed two new Power's 6b machines and a Gold Fibre Screen. The Hilltop Theatre was opened Sunday, November 24.

Shubert Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn.

The accompanying pictures are interior and exterior views of the Minneapolis Shubert Theatre, recently taken over, remodeled and refurnished by the William Fox Film Corporation, of New York.

The Shubert, for years one of the leading playhouses of the city, opened under the Fox management November 23 with W. A. Raynor in charge and A. Roberts as his assistant. Theda Bara, in "Salome," was the first offering, drawing big business, and since then only Fox stars have been shown.

The color scheme was entirely changed and the stage reset with new scenery. New wall decorations and lighting effects have been installed, and the entire theatre has been refurnished with new carpets. It is now recognized as one of the most beautiful moving picture houses in the Northwest.

Elliman Buys Shaefer Film Company.

H. E. Elliman, prominent Minneapolis real estate dealer, has concluded a deal for the purchase of the Shaefer Film Laboratories, of Minneapolis. He states that new arrangements will bring double assurance to exhibitors of increased box office receipts from screen advertising, and that this latter phase of the Shaefer business will become the principal activity of the organization under the new management. "I believe there is a big field for screen advertising in the Twin Cities and the Northwest, and we are going after that business with much greater effort than heretofore," he said.

Cleveland Trade Letter

By M. A. Malaney, 206 Sloan Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

Metro Program Going Big.

MANAGER ALMY, of the Cleveland Metro Exchange, reports a revival of interest in the Metro program among first run theatres in his section. The Mall and Alhambra, first run theatres in Cleveland, have signed up again for the service, while the Dome, a first run theatre in Youngstown, has done the same. In Fremont, the Strand has contracted for the Metro service.

Porter Visits Cleveland.

E. M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, was in Cleveland last week interviewing dealers in Simplex machines. He left for New York, after stating he had been out on a two weeks' trip studying conditions.

Installations of Argus-Sheck Adapter.

Since the Argus Lamp and Appliance Company opened its theatre supply division in Cleveland several installations of the Argus-Sheck adapter have been made in Cleveland. One of the most recent was at the Deucan Theatre on Broadway.

Omaha News Letter

By Guy Leavitt, World-Herald, Omaha, Neb.

Stolte is New Strand Manager.

A. G. STOLTE, formerly an exhibitor at the Palace Theatre, Vinton, Ia., then manager of the Strand, Cedar Rapids, Ia., and after that for a brief time representative in this territory for "Hearts of the World," has accepted a position as manager of the Strand Theatre in Omaha.

Manager Stolte's first idea as manager of the Strand was a big stage setting for "The Forbidden City," illustrating the play with Chinese scenes on the stage. The theatre was decorated with flags, the fifteen-piece orchestra played Chinese music and the usherettes were in Chinese costumes. Incense was burned to add to the atmospheric effect. Mr. Stolte is famous throughout Iowa and Nebraska for his theatre settings to carry out the idea of a motion picture play.

Goldberg Strong Advocate of Reissues.

Manager Goldberg, of the Sun Theatre, Omaha, popular ten-cent downtown house, is a strong advocate of reissues, favoring particularly the Hart, Fairbanks and other big star pictures. "Many of my patrons have come to me to say they had seen the pictures, but they were glad to see them again," he said.

"My principal fault with reissues is in their lighting. Even when the best pictures are selected for reissues, the photography, due to the lighting, is noticeably faulty. Instead of the soft depths and shadows of the modern pictures, the reissues are often so glaring that the features of the actors are almost ghastly. Some of the plots are so good, however, that we can look over the technical faults."

"Wattie" Watts Returns.

Harry B. "Wattle" Watts, former manager of the Strand Theatre in Omaha, and lately a private in Uncle Sam's army, has returned to Omaha with his honorable discharge in his pocket and will go with the A. H. Blank Enterprises.

Rialto Entertains Wounded French Heroes.

When a train of wounded French soldiers stopped in Omaha for a few hours, the Red Cross canteen workers telephoned Manager H. M. Thomas, of the Rialto Theatre, suggesting the guests were in the city without entertainment. Manager Thomas promptly invited them to the Rialto, where the orchestra played French airs and the crowd arose and applauded. The Rialto, as well as other Omaha theatres, has been offered to patriotic organizations for any capacity they may serve. During the Christmas roll-call week of the Red Cross desks were kept in the lobbies of the theatres.

Gives Show to Soldiers' Relatives.

W. H. Brill, "Hearts of the World" representative, co-operated with the World-Herald, newspaper in Omaha, in offering a free show to mothers and wives of soldiers. All that was necessary was to show a letter from the son or the husband. The theatre was crowded, and the World-Herald gave the event plenty of publicity.

Does Big Advertising on Chaplin Film.

When J. C. Duncan, manager of the Plaza Theatre at Sioux City, Ia., showed "Shoulder Arms," he waged a big advertising campaign in the local newspapers. One feature of this campaign was a series of advertisements which showed Chaplin's picture, but did not mention his name. In a letter Mr. Duncan says the picture drew capacity houses at every show.

Strike Ties Up Business.

For nine days Omaha was tied up by a street car strike. Business at the downtown picture houses suffered a fifty per cent. loss, but the suburban houses reported a thriving nine days.

INAUGURATE NEW POLICY AT THE STRAND

Calgary Manager Will Change Program Three Times a Week—Signs $25,000 Annual Service Contract

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

STARTING with the week of December 9, the Bijou Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, made use of its new policy as arranged by Manager H. F. Hill. According to the official announcement made by Manager Hill, the Bijou will change its program three times each week for a whole year without variation. He recently signed a contract with Harry A. Kaufman, Western division manager of Regal Films, Limited, for complete service for the fifty-two weeks. According to the schedule, Metro releases will be featured on Mondays and Tuesdays; World features will be presented on Wednesdays and Thursdays, and Triangle subjects will be the attractions on Fridays and Saturdays. Manager Hill announces that the contract for pictures for the whole year totals $25,000. One of the terms of the contract is that he is to have exclusive runs in Calgary of the Metro, World and Triangle pictures.

Daily performances will run from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m., and the orchestra will provide music at both matinee and evening shows. The evening price for adults will be 22½ cents, the odd amount being the Provincial war tax of 2½ cents on the 20-cent ticket. Matinee admission price will be 20 cents, which means that the theatre takes care of the war tax for afternoon admissions. The price for children at all times is 9 cents. This price has been established for the children so that the youngsters need not pay a war tax, the Government charging a one-cent levy on 10-cent tickets.

In announcing the new policy of the theatre to patrons, Manager Hill said: "I take pleasure in offering you this program, for I believe that it represents one of the best ever shown in Calgary. I personally guarantee every production that you will witness to be clean, wholesome and of highest entertainment value. I especially invite the patronage of women and children, and will try to give you a clean and interesting program at all times."

During the past year Manager Hill has made considerable progress in building up a steady patronage at the Bijou Theatre. He believes in the personal touch, and tries to become acquainted with all regular patrons. One of his stunts is to publish personal letters of recommendation for current or coming attractions.

Boy Found Dead in the Princess Theatre.

The Princess Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, has rather a gruesome mystery. When the theatre was opened on the morning of December 11 by the caretaker, K. Skinner, the body of a fourteen-year-old boy was found on the main floor. The lad had apparently fallen from the balcony, and the neck was broken. It is believed that the boy hid in the theatre until the place was closed, and had fallen from the balcony during the night.

Montreal Screen Club Launched.

The Screen Club, of Montreal, Quebec, held its opening celebration of the season at the club quarters at 319 University street on Wednesday evening, December 11. The features of the function included a dance, cabaret show, the presentation of acts from various local vaudeville houses and the screening of a new feature. The musical portion of the program was directed by Willie Eckstein, of the Strand Theatre, who organized a jazz orchestra for the occasion.

The officers of the Screen Club include the following: Honorary President Howard Conover, manager of the Imperial Theatre; J. J. Unger, of Regal Films, Limited, president; J. Mills, manager of Loew's Theatre, vice-president; Fred Crow, manager of the St. Denis Theatre, vice-president. Executive and entertainment committees, Phil Hazzar, Montreal manager of the Canadian Universal; Maurice West, Fox manager; George Nicholas, of the Strand Theatre; J. P. O'Loughline and Ed. English, of Regal Films, Limited; Mr. Warnicker, of the Regent Theatre, and H. Gagnier, Vitagraph manager.

The first event was a big success, and more functions are being planned.

Conover Deviates from "The Beaten Track"

Manager Howard Conover, of the Imperial Theatre, Montreal, Quebec, has been doing things just a little out of the ordinary during the past few weeks.

On Saturday, December 14, for instance, Conover had quite a day of it. He gave a special children's show at 10:30 a. m. for "Johanna Enlists," and the program also included several short subjects of interest to the children. The regular performance started at 1 p. m., and, after two hours of pictures, an orchestral concert was conducted under the direction of J. J. Goulet. The soloist for this concert was Enzo Bozzano, a bass soloist. This recital lasted for about thirty minutes.

From Monday to Friday, inclusive, during the week of December 16, the Imperial presented "Jack and the Beanstalk" once each afternoon starting at 1 p. m., and Christmas shoppers were invited to bring their children to the theatre for a rest and to see the feature. The regular program started at 3 p. m. during the five days. On Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, Peggy Hyland was seen in "Marriages Are Made," and from Wednesday to Saturday the regular feature was "A Woman of Impulse."

Manager Conover has arranged to make the Saturday matinee recitals and the children's matinees a regular weekly feature at the Imperial Theatre.

27 Theatres Show "Lure of the Circus."

Following the visit of Eddie Polo, the Universal serial star, to Toronto during the early part of December no less than twenty-seven different Toronto theatres booked "The Lure of the Circus," the current Universal serial.

Order Prohibits Standing Room Sales.

The Health Board of St. Catharines, Ontario, has issued an order which prohibits the admission of more people to any theatre, church, school, hall or street car than can be accommodated in regular seats. This move was taken as a precaution against a possible come-back of the epidemic.

Theatre Damaged by Rioters.

A Montreal exhibitor suffered a considerable loss during the strike of Montreal policemen and firemen on December 12 and 13, when a mob wrecked the front of the Laurier Moving Picture Palace on St. Catherine street east. The theatre is situated near No. 13 Fire Station, which was partially destroyed by the rioters. After ruining the fire equipment the mob turned its attention to a nearby clothing store, and, for some unknown reason, to the theatre. The store was soon stripped of its entire stock, while the front of the theatre was damaged to the extent of $2,000. The city of Montreal will be asked to pay damages for this loss, it is understood, because of the failure of the administration to provide protection.

Fined for Taking View from Lobby.

The taking of a photograph from the lobby display of the King's Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, cost Fred Ruiz a fine of $10 and costs. The accused pleaded guilty to the charge.

CARMEN'S STRIKE HITS EXHIBITORS

Theatres in Kansas City Suffer Reduction in Patronage—But Jitney Service Helps Somewhat

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

TRAINMEN of the street railway company struck the night of December 10, and for two days Kansas City had no street car service. Cars were put out Friday, December 13, and during the next few days more and more cars were added, though the result was far from normal service. This strike naturally had a disadvantageous effect on patronage of moving picture shows, the suburban houses being quite as seriously affected as the downtown houses. Jitney service brought many people downtown who did not have cars or friends with automobiles.

The lack of stroet cars causcd people to visit the theatres in their own communities, but not in sufficient numbers to maintain the volume normally received. Suburban managers count on a considerable amount of their patronage from a distance.

Says Clientele Is Guiding Point.

The fear of competition sometimes induces an exhibitor to put on shows more frequently than his judgment tells him is advisable. "I got my exhibitions on a profitable basis, when I assumed a new angle on the question of afternoon shows," said T. A. Spillane, proprietor of the Spillane Theatre, a suburban house. "The real criterion is the desire of the public—not the number of shows somebody else runs. I used to run afternoon programs, week days and Sundays, but when I decided to analyze the need for matinees I cut out these extra shows, as an experiment. And I have not resumed them. I get almost the same total number into the house during the day giving only two shows, and these in the evening. This experience has opened my eyes as to the way to go about it in making decisions on any subject involving service to my public. The source of information is not the other exhibitor, but my own clientele, the people who are likely to visit my house," Mr. Spillane is inclined to believe that much grief for exhibitors and unnecessary antagonism among them, can be avoided if they will worry less over the patronage the other fellow is likely to get away from them and keep their thoughts more on the wishes of their own trade.

Blank Offices Ready for Business.

The newly opened offices of the A. H. Blank Enterprises in the Lloyd Building, have been decorated, equipped and is now ready for business. The office has its own prints, the "paper" is in stock, and the organization is on the job. R. S. Edwards is installed as booker and office clerk; Mrs. S. Jackson as inspector, and H. Carr as stock keeper and shipping clerk. Lee D. Balsly, manager, is enthusiastic over the lato announcements of attractions for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

How Weary Keeps His Miner Patronage.

F. G. Weary, proprietor of the Faris Theatre, Richmond, Mo., has his largest patronage from the miners and their families in the coal fields of this territory. These people have been peculiarly susceptible to the fears of influenza, and they have stayed away from the theatre. The theatre was closed for a month, but has been running now since November 28.

While Mr. Weary has adopted various methods of increasing business while the miners are staying away, he has not placed great stress on this added clientele, but has continued to look to the miners as his steady customers. An instance of the manner in which he keeps the miners closely affiliated with him is in his employment of operators. For several years he has employed men from the mines, who get out at 4 o'clock and have plenty of time to prepare for the evening work at the theatre.

The operator who had been working for the past two years died recently, and his widow, who had frequently assisted in running the machines, has been employed. This woman is known well among the miners and they appreciate the opportunity given her by Mr. Weary for earning her livelihood. There are several young miners in Richmond who at various times have learned the operator's tasks and can be called upon in emergencies.

Exhibitors Are Not Visiting Exchanges.

"Far fewer exhibitors are coming into the exchanges than before the influenza epidemic put the kibosh on business," said a Kansas City manager. "Perhaps the reduction in business has made staying at home a matter of economy, but even managers whose houses have been open fairly steadily are not making their usual weekly trips. Many exhibitors are coming in because they have nothing to do at home, taking advantage of the time to get better acquainted with the exchanges and their offerings. But the total number of visitors has fallen materially—and has caused some anxiety as to the future work that will be necessary to stimulate the enthusiasm of exhibitors and get them into close touch with the productions. They have to get information some way about what's going on. Unless they are reading the magazines and our letters faithfully they will be falling far behind."

Walker Joins Fox Kansas City Forces.

C. A. Walker, formerly with the Fox organization at Dallas, Texas, has joined the Fox forces at Kansas City. Mr. Walker had, previous to his connection with the Dallas exchange, edited the Motion Picture Journal, which had started as a house organ for a Dallas theatre.

Kubitzki Promoted to Manager of Mutual.

W. J. Kubitzki, for the past year cashier of the Mutual offices at Kansas City, has succeeded L. B. Brown as manager. Mr. Kubitzki had, previous to his Kansas City work, been connected with the Triangle organization. He was installed in his new position by O. R. Hanson, special representative of Mutual. J. W. Flynn has joined the organization as bookkeeper. Mr. Brown, well known in film circles for his exchange experience in St. Louis, Kansas City and elsewhere, has left the business and will give his time to a publishing enterprise in St. Louis in which he has an interest.

Doric Shows "Lafayette, We Come."

The Affiliated gets its introduction in Kansas City territory through the Doric Theatre, Kansas City, where "Lafayette, We Come," will be shown the week of December 29.

Dayton News Letter

By Paul Gray, Dayton Theatre Building, Dayton, Ohio.

Dayton Film Nearing Completion.

THE last scenes of an after the war feature, six reels in length, are now being "shot" in Dayton, according to a statement made recently by Chester De Vonde, the director, and Will Ohmer, wealthy manufacturer. Seventy-five thousand Daytonians will take minor parts in this spectacle, which is in no wise an "industrial" venture, but which will be shown as a commercialized product for public consumption.

This film story is the conception of Will I. Ohmer, head of the Recording and Computing Machines Company, who employ about seven thousand.

The picture was conceived with a view to telling the boys in uniform that the people—civilians—of the United States have been heart and soul with them throughout the entire conflict. In addition to showing the lads in khaki, the film will show what the "folks at home" did in order to win the war.

A big feature of the story is the emphasis placed on the absolute necessity of united thought and action on the part of the people of this country to the end that Bolshevikism and anarchy may never set foot here. The Wilbur Wright and McCook flying fields figure prominently in the film.

Business Slack Just Before Holidays.

As was to be expected, all the local theatres suffered to a slight degree just before the Christmas holidays. Patrons were busy shopping and could not attend the theatres in such great force as when unoccupied. Business, however, will pick up after the holidays.

Mark Gates Returns to Dayton.

Mark Gates, managing director of the Dayton Theatre, Dayton, who has been in New York for the past two weeks, was seen at that institution early Sunday morning, December 22. Mr. Gates has many new ideas picked up while in New York. The Dayton opened Christmas with "The Greatest Thing in Life."

Over 100 Ohio Towns Closed on Sundays.

The Ohio State Screen League is rapidly including in its membership campaign all of the exhibitors and managers in Ohio, and meetings are being held right along, according to Harry Kress, of the Piqua Amusement Company, who is campaign manager. It seems as though the proposed law to legalize Sunday shows will go through. Over one hundred Ohio towns are now closed on Sunday due to the efforts of "reformers."

Cohn Succeeds Redelle at the Sherman.

Victor Cohn is now manager of the Sherman Theatre, Chillicothe, Ohio, succeeding Elmer Redelle, former manager. Mr. Cohn had been identified with the Sherman since its opening. The situation in Chillicothe is not near so good at the present as it was several months ago, when Camp Sherman, near there, was in full operation. A lively bid for business is now being looked for with the departure of the many soldiers there.

FOX TO RELEASE THEDA BARA'S "SALOME"

Super-Production Now Ready for General Distribution on the Open Booking Plan

ONE of the most hopeful developments in the motion picture industry has been the growing education of the public to accept big, special photoplays as being in the same class as stage productions. In the early days of the motion picture business, when films were run as trailers to a vaudeville show, there were only a few enthusiastic believers in the screen who dared predict a higher estate for the motion picture than that of being merely a filler in some other entertainment.

But since "Cabiria" and "Quo Vadis" first showed to the public the practically unlimited scope of the new art the film has steadily progressed upward in popular estimation until today exhibitors have little difficulty in getting relatively the same admission prices for big, special films as dramatic theatres receive for similar successes.

Although this development in the film industry has been comparatively recent, the industry nevertheless can point to several pictures which have proved big money-makers as special attractions. One of the biggest successes of this kind in the whole history of motion pictures was "The Birth of a Nation." This famous masterpiece made millions of dollars for exhibitors throughout the country. Many theatres now in a flourishing condition can trace their success to their showing of "The Birth of a Nation."

"Quo Vadis" was another huge exhibitor success, millions of people flocking to the theatres to see this picture, then unparalleled in its scope of story and dignity of production.

The same was true of "Cabiria." Exhibitors, at first sceptical as to the possibility of persuading the public to pay more money, found that, with the enormous advertising this picture had obtained through its runs in New York and other large cities, they were able to pack their houses with it at high prices.

Another of the big money-makers of this nature, from the point of view of the exhibitor, was "The Honor System," R. A. Walsh's drama of prison reform. "Cleopatra," released last August after a most successful career as a William Fox special feature, is now piling up additional proofs of the wisdom of exhibitors in booking big pictures.

William Farnum's great picture, "Les Miserables," now among the big money-makers, went to exhibitors after having established its drawing power in the leading dramatic houses of the country. Now another big, special attraction is to be released to exhibitors on an independent basis.

This is "Salome," the Theda Bara super-production, which William Fox has shown in some of the big playhouses in the principal cities. In view of the money made by other special pictures mentioned, officials of the Fox Films Corporation forecast that "Salome" will prove another clean-up for exhibitors. Although "Salome" was still continuing its remarkably prosperous road career as a special William Fox attraction, Mr. Fox decided that conditions in the industry caused by the influenza epidemic and the sudden cessation of hostilities were such that exhibitors should have the advantage of playing a big feature and thus start the new year with a success that would make up for the weeks of influenza idleness.

Chinese Women in Metro Picture.

Ten full-blooded Chinese women from the Chinatown of Los Angeles are working at the Nazimova studios in Hollywood in "The Red Lantern," the mammoth Nazimova production now being filmed there with Albert Capellani directing the Russian star.

As only two or three of the almond-eyed women speak English they receive their stage directions from M. Capellani through an interpreter, Jim Wong, who scoured the Chinese quarter to obtain these types. They are working in the picture's coffin shop scenes, which abound in a weird mystery that is peculiarly Oriental.

Studio at Arctic City Ready for Producers

ARCTIC CITY, with a newly completed, fully equipped studio, is now available for independent producers desiring to rent a studio with the remarkable natural conditions of Arctic City. This city at Port Henry, devoted entirely to motion picture production, is a great location for western, northwestern, lumber camp, Yukon, Siberian, Lapland, Russian, Eskimo, and similar pictures.

It is only eight hours from New York City and has remarkable mountains, valleys, rivers, lakes, waterfalls, precipices, chasms, forests, logging camps, log runs and jams.

A new studio has recently been completed and equipped with every essential and facility and properties of every description, with a stage 80 by 100 feet. The studio and all the facilities of Arctic City are now under new management and rental prices. Particulars may be obtained from Edward Small, Inc., 1493 Broadway, New York.

In addition to its remarkable natural scenery and added facilities, Arctic City also has a zoo of trained animal actors, including Russian bears, Russian timber wolves, educated horses, hurdlers and broad-jump horses, police dogs, Eskimo dogs and sledge dogs. Thrilling wild animal stunts can be staged by Michael Schliesser, well known for his work of this nature in motion pictures.

Select Takes Over Schomer's "Ruling Passions."

SELECT announces the acquisition of Abraham S. Schomer's latest photoplay, "Ruling Passions." The picture will be released exclusively through the twenty-one Select exchanges in the United States, and will be handled as a Select special attraction.

"Ruling Passions" is the latest work of the man who gave to the public "The Yellow Passport," "Today" and "The Inner Man." The talent of Mr. Schomer encompasses the ability to write and produce plays upon the speaking stage and to write and produce photoplays upon the screen as well. In this manner "The Yellow Passport," first presented by him upon the Yiddish stage, was afterward made a successful photoplay. "Today," which Mr. Schomer wrote for the speaking stage, made a hit on Broadway when presented with Emily Stevens in the role of the woman who could not stand the sting of poverty, and this, also, was later presented on the screen, with Florence Reed as its star. Mr. Schomer also presented "The Inner Man" first on the speaking stage, it having been one of the Broadway presentations of a season or two ago.

The photoplay, "Ruling Passions," presents an original story, which has been both written and directed personally by Mr. Schomer. It is a story which is characterized throughout by good feeling and good fellowship. There is nothnig morbid or disagreeable about this picture.

The late Edwin Arden is co-featured in "Ruling Passions" with Julia Dean. Both do work before the camera which is impressive for its sincerity. And the others in the cast are as satisfactory in their respective roles.

Laugh Statistician Is Busy.

Maurice A. Kashin, manager of the Broadway Theatre, New York, announced on the front cover of his house program for the week of December 8 that Charlie Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms" has provoked 22,341,570 different and distinct laughs in the eight consecutive weeks it has played at that theatre.

This total is arrived at by the statistician for the Broadway Theatre. He figures that "Shoulder Arms" has been presented in that house 252 times; that precisely 314,570 persons paid admissions to the theatre in seven weeks, or 44,953 patrons a week.

Mr. Kashin adds: "If there are seventy-one laugh-provoking tricks in 'Shoulder Arms,' and if, in order to ascertain the precise number of laughs brought forth at the Broadway Theatre, we were to multiply the number of people who had viewed the film by 71, we would get a total of 22,341,570."

Abramson Making "The Echo of Youth."

At the Biograph Studio, Ivan Abramson is hard at work on a production for the Graphic Film Corporation under the title of "The Echo of Youth." A strong cast has been engaged for this production, and includes such favorites as Charles Richman Leah Baird, Pearl Shepard, Marie Shotwell, Jack McLean, William Bechtel, Peggy Shanor and Philip Van Loan. The author-director claims it is the strongest story he has written, and is due to create a great deal of discussion when it is released.

The release date is scheduled for some time in January.

Find Grave of Edith Cavell.

The grave of Edith Cavell, the British Red Cross nurse, whose death at the hands of a German firing squad furnishes the theme of Select Pictures' special attraction, "The Cavell Case," has been established by a German plan of the National Cemetery in Brussels, according to a dispatch from London last week. The plot has already been decorated by members of the foreign legations in Brussels, and by King George and Queen Mary of England.

William Fox Releases Start New Year Briskly

FOR variety of theme and settings, the productions to be released in January by William Fox set a high standard for 1919 pictures, it was announced this week by the Fox Film Corporation. Sixteen pictures, representing all but one of the various William Fox brands, will be distributed in the first month of the year.

Under the Standard Pictures group two pictures will be released. One of these is a super-production titled "The Light," staged by J. Gordon Edwards. This picture tells the story of "the wickedest woman in Paris," and how she is redeemed through love for a blind artist. Several of the exterior scenes were taken in New Orleans, as that city was found to come nearest in this country to duplicating the atmosphere of Paris. Another Standard picture to be released is "Woman, Woman!" starring Evelyn Nesbit. This feature is an adaptation of a novel, "On Desert Altars," written by Norma Lorimer, and was staged by Kenean Buel.

A Tom Mix subject and a Gladys Brockwell feature will be released under the Victory Pictures group. The Tom Mix offering is "Treat 'Em Rough," which has won unusual commendation from trade press reviewers. This picture was directed by Lynn F. Reynolds, and was made on a ranch at Prescott, Ariz. One of the most thrilling scenes shows Tom Mix "bulldogging" the leading steer in a stampede of cattle. "The Call of the Soul" is the title of Miss Brockwell's January release. This picture, directed by Edward J. LeSaint, is described as one of the strongest productions in which Miss Brockwell has appeared in several months. Mother-love is said to be the dominant theme.

Two Excel pictures will be released. They are "Smiles," featuring Jane and Katherine Lee, and "The Girl with No Regrets," in which Peggy Hyland is starred. In "Smiles," little Jane and Katherine have a play that is said to be full of extremely humorous situations. The story was written by Ralph H. Spence and Albert Glassmire, and was directed by Arvid E. Gillstrom, who directed the Lee children in two of their most recent pictures —"Swat the Spy!" and "Tell It to the Marines."

In "The Girl with No Regrets," Miss Hyland will appear in the role of a young girl who, through no fault of her own, becomes entangled with a band of crooks. The picture is said to be highly dramatic in its development, and has an unusual climax. It was directed by Harry Millarde.

Four of the William Fox "Great Nine," a group of former successes that have been revised and retitled, will be released in January. These are "The Serpent," featuring Theda Bara; "Regeneration," "The Broken Law," starring William Farnum, and another Theda Bara super-production, "Under Two Flags." In their original form these plays were among the most successful from a box office standpoint that have been released by William Fox, and in their new form, it is said, they are still further improved.

January will see the inauguration of the former Tom Mix two-reel comedy successes. Five of these successes in re-edited and revised form will be issued every other week beginning January 12, so that the January releases in this group will be "Hearts and Saddles" and "A Roman Cowboy." One Fox-Lehrman Sunshine comedy will be issued, "Oh, What a Knight!" January will be an exceptionally big month for the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons, four of these fun subjects being scheduled for release. They are "The Lion Tamers," "Here and There," "The Hula Cabaret" and "Dog Gone Tough Luck."

Wm. Farnum Starts Work on New Picture.

Work was started this week on the newest William Farnum de luxe production, temporarily titled "The Lucky Charm," at the William Fox studios in Fort Lee, N. J., under the direction of Richard Stanton. The story was written especially for Mr. Farnum by George V. Hobart, the well known playwright.

The character that the Fox star will portray is entirely different from any in which he has been seen. It will give the "Farnum fans" a chance to see their hero in both evening dress and hunting costume. Supporting Mr. Farnum are Anna Luther, Anna Lehr, Anna Schaeffer, Lyster Chambers, G. Raymond Nye, Ed. Roseman, Henry Armetta and George Stone.

Cartoon Charlie Crosses Rhine.

Pat Sullivan is the creator of "Over the Rhine with Charlie," the second of a series of one-reel animated cartoons to be released by Universal. The cartoon show how Charlie takes over the German territory that the armistice demands be held by the Allies until permanent peace is declared, and Charlie goes through some unique stunts in carrying out his mission.

Mayer's Trade Showings Make Hit With Exhibitors

THE practical showmanship methods of circus and road show advance men applied to special feature attractions brought more than two hundred exhibitors to Milwaukee and a crowd of more than five hundred theatre owners in Minnesota to Minneapolis to attend special trade showings of "Virtuous Wives," first of the Anita Stewart productions to be distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

The plan, new to the film industry, is fostered by Louis B. Mayer, producer of "Virtuous Wives." It consists of special campaign work, whose responsibility it is to co-operate with the local branch managers of First National exchanges to create interest among exhibitors in each territory and induce them to attend the trade showing at the exchange centre. Following him comes a second Mayer representative with the "show."

The first of thirty of these trade showings was held in Milwaukee on Friday, December 13. More than two hundred exhibitors were present, with umbrellas and rain coats for protection from a severe rainstorm. William H. Leahy, director of publicity for Stewart productions, had succeeded, by using real advance man methods, in arousing an unusual amount of interest.

The production was shown under the direction of Joseph Lee, sales manager for Anita Stewart Productions. After its presentation, Mr. Lee told the exhibitors of the advertising possibilities for them in the story.

The second showing was held at the Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, on Monday, December 16. The applause which greeted the production from more than five hundred exhibitors in the Minnesota territory gave an indication of their confidence in its box office value.

The illness of Mr. Mayer delayed the start of the Eastern showings, but Leon J. Rubenstein and Rudie Cameron have already made arrangements for a special presentation of the production in Pittsburgh on December 29, and a showing in Philadelphia on January 6.

Police to See "The Midnight Patrol."

That uniformed policemen throughout the United States will enthusiastically approve of Select's Thomas H. Ince special production, "The Midnight Patrol," is evidenced by a letter received from T. O. Tuttle, branch manager of Select's Atlanta exchange. The work done by Branch Manager Tuttle in exploiting this special is in line with the suggestion contained in Select's publicity bulletin issued last week.

"The Midnight Patrol" is a picture in which the policeman is an important figure, and it is believed by General Sales Manager Woody that the exhibitor's strongest advertising point is in interesting the police of his town. Mr. Woody has therefore instructed branch managers throughout the country to render special service to exhibitors by arranging private showing for their respective police departments.

This procedure is more than meeting the success anticipated, as indicated by Branch Manager Tuttle's report. Mr. Tuttle has instructed his traveling salesman who is handling this feature in his territory to carry with him one print of "The Midnight Patrol," and wherever possible invite the officials of the police department to be present when showing this subject to managers.

Rainbows Successful for General.

From the United States Motion Picture Corporation, of Wilkes-Barre, which produces the Rainbow comedies, comes a review of the work done in the last three months in supplying the persistent demand for desirable short-length humorous pictures for rounding out theatre programs. Much satisfaction is expressed at the entertainment value of Rainbow comedies. They have proved very acceptable at General Film Company exchanges.

Three new comedies for this series are ready and soon will be added to those at General Film Company exchanges.

Heffron Directing Desmond.

Thomas N. Heffron directed William Desmond in his first production, "Life's a Funny Proposition," which was made by Jesse D. Hampton for the Exhibitors' Mutual.

For many years Mr. Heffron directed on the speaking stage, and in this capacity was associated with Cohan and Harris, William A. Brady, Mrs. Fiske, A. H. Woods, Charles Frohman and Augustus Thomas. In addition to appearing in pictures, he has to his credit many excellent productions.

How Goldberg Upset the Town's Ten-Cent Limit

AN ordinance passed by the City Council of Williamsburg, Ky., which prohibited local exhibitors from charging more than ten cents as their maximum admissions, thereby restricting them to cheap and inferior productions, has been invalidated through the action of Lee Goldberg, manager of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, of Louisville, owners of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for that territory.

Mr. Goldberg received from an exhibitor in Williamsburg an application for a booking on "Joan, the Woman." When the theatre owner was told of the rental, he advised Mr. Goldberg that he would be obliged to violate the city ordinance and charge more than ten cents as the admission price if he was to make any money on the feature. He explained further that the ordinance provided for a material increase in the license fee of any theatre exceeding the maximum admission allowed under it. The City Council had succeeded in making it practically impossible for Williamsburg exhibitors to book special feature attractions without a loss.

Mr. Goldberg wrote a letter to the council. In it he said among other things:

"We believe your council and the merchants of Williamsburg ought to encourage the theatre managers to present the biggest photoplays the market affords, and when they get an attraction like 'Joan, the Woman' (which, for instance, showed in New York at $2), you ought not to prohibit them from charging the prices that are within reason and such as are necessary for them to charge to come out without a loss."

A few days later the Williamsburg exhibitor wrote in for the film. The City Council had evidently come to a fuller understanding of moving pictures.

Universal's Publicity Policy Praised.

Universal exchanges have the past few weeks been receiving many commendatory letters from newspapermen and exhibitors regarding the new publicity policy of the organization. Recently Universal issued sixty different styles of single and double column cuts of its stars, newspaper and screen, and free from art work or captions of any sort. These cuts Universal Exchange publicity managers are sending to newspapers desiring them, and the Universal Bulletin, a weekly motion picture news service, is being sent to over three thousand newspaper photoplay editors regularly.

On a recent tour of all exchanges, Tarkington Baker, director of publicity, appointed several new divisional publicity men. These men assist exhibitors in every way possible, writing special stories and ads for them, and supplying newspapers with special features and data. Publicity men for the Indianapolis and Minneapolis districts are to be appointed shortly.

Big Interior Sets for "A House Divided."

The working staff of the Blackton studios has been kept busy day and night for the past two or three weeks building several big sets for Commodore Blackton's newest production, "A House Divided." It is a domestic drama of love, marriage and divorce presenting a decidedly original development of the theme, a story of sacrifice which is said to afford an intensely dramatic and unexpected climax.

Its principal locale is London, several of its characters being prominent in the political life of England. It is for these incidents that the big interiors are required. Much of the action of the story takes place in the House of Commons, and Mr. Blackton promises to make these scenes not only strikingly realistic, but among the most spectacular he has ever produced.

"Under Four Flags" Heads World List for January

WORLD exhibitors will note with interest the galaxy of stars which appear in the pictures scheduled for January releases by the World Film Corporation. Exhibitors will also be interested in knowing that "Under Four Flags," the third Government war picture, which had such a phenominal success at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres upon its initial presentation in New York City, is scheduled for release on January 6.

First on the program of January World pictures comes "What Love Forgives," starring Barbara Castleton and Johnny Hines. Muriel Ostriche and John Bowers are prominent in the cast. The story of "What Love Forgives" was written by Gardner Hunting. The scenario was made by George D. Proctor, and the production was directed by Henry Vekroff. This attraction is scheduled for release on January 6.

Coming on January 13 is a novel production, "Love in a Hurry," starring Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley. This attraction is a picturization of a popular magazine serial, "A Huge, Black One-Eyed Man," written by Kenyon Gambier. Wallace C. Clifton wrote the story, and Dell Henderson directed the picture. George MacQuarrie has a prominent role. Albert Hart is seen in a striking role that called for a remarkable make-up. Kid Broad has a humorous role, and other film favorites are seen.

The production scheduled for release on January 20 is "The Bluffer," starring June Elvidge. Miss Elvidge is supported by a remarkable cast, including George MacQuarrie, Muriel Ostriche, Irving Cummings and Frank Mayo. The story and continuity were both written by Clara S. Beranger. The picture was directed by Travers Vale.

The final release for the month is a Louise Huff production, and is scheduled for publication January 27. The title is "Heart of Gold." Lucy Saruer wrote the story, and the scenario was prepared by Clara S. Beranger. Prominent in the cast are Johnny Hines, Anthony Merlo and Marion Barney. Travers Vale directed.

Select Photographs Big Dining Room.

For the first time in its history a Broadway hotel whose fame as a hostelry is nation-wide has been used as the scene of a motion picture. Norma Talmadge, Select star, was the recipient of this mark of personal esteem from the hotel management on a recent night after the usual guests had left and business was over.

Miss Talmadge is at work on "The Probation Wife," a story of modern metropolitan life. The action calls for several scenes in a fashionable dance-restaurant; the hotel suggested itself at once to Miss Talmadge, but the idea was pooh-poohed by her director, who had made several unsuccessful attempts to secure the use of this "location" in the past. But the Select star put it over on all the "wiseacres"; she went to see the manager in person, and, of course, she won out.

And that is how the film fans will see the beautiful dining room in all its splendor.

Nazimova Again to Clip Locks.

Once again will Nazimova clip her locks in the cause of art. The brilliant Russian actress bobbed her hair to play the French artist's model in "Revelation," and now she will have it shorn quite short for the role of the half-Chinese girl, Mahlee, in "The Red Lantern," to be filmed at the Nazimova West Coast studios, with Albert Capellani directing.

In "The Red Lantern," which was adapted by June Mathis and Mr. Capellani, Nazimova will be starred in the complex character of a Eurasian—daughter of a Chinese mother and an English father—who is caught in the maelstrom of the Boxer rebellion, as well as in the tangled skeins of love.

Louise Glaum's "Sahara" Is Nearing Completion

THE first of the Louise Glaum feature productions, "Sahara," is nearing completion. According to those associated in the making of it, including the star, the supervising director, Allan Dwan, and the author, C. Gardner Sullivan, it will be a photodramatic sensation.

No expense has been spared in the selection of supporting players or in properly and elaborately dressing the production. One set, a magnificent room in the "Palace of the Moon" in Cairo, was built and decorated at large cost. The desert scenes breathe the romance and the vastness of the great waste from which the film production gets its name.

The important dramatic role opposite Miss Glaum is taken by Matt Moore. Edwin Stevens has the heavy part, and Pat Moore, a four-year-old child actor, plays a role that will stamp him as a great kiddie player.

The direction of "Sahara" is in charge of Art Rosson.

"Little Mary Sunshine" Heads Pathe for Dec. 29

THE Pathe program for December 29 is headed by Baby Marie Osborne, the talented child player, in "Dolly's Vacation," a charming young-and-old story by Mrs. George Griffin Lee, produced by Diando and directed by William Bertram. Little Sambo is the sable assistant of "Little Mary Sunshine," and there is a capable cast, comprising Jack Connolly, Bob Gray, Bert Wilson and Howard McKenzie.

"Wolves of Kultur," the patriotic serial featuring Leah Baird, presents a characteristically thrilling episode in No. 12, called "The Tower of Tears." A frightful drop into the waters of Ausable chasm is one of the several happenings in this installment.

Harold Lloyd, assisted by Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard, goes through some funny adventures in the Rolin comedy, "She Loves Me Not." The Arizona Ace calls him "a bomb-proof, India-rubber guy with a mighty laugh-larrup."

Post Travel Series No. 25 gives many charming and instructive views of unusual locations and life in Japan.

Official War Review No. 27 shows in a comprehensive fashion the activities of the armies of England, France, Italy and America just before the cessation of hostilities and creates the same amount of thrills and tense interest. This series has been pronounced "the best historical serial ever made."

Exhibitors' Mutual Names Fifth Release.

"Life's a Funny Proposition," William Desmond's first production made by Jesse D. Hampton for distribution through Exhibitors' Mutual, will be released on January 12. This subject marks the fifth release of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation. Its predecessors were Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas," Billie Rhodes in "The Girl of My Dreams," Henry B. Walthall in "And a Still Small Voice" and Bessie Barriscale in "All of a Sudden Norma."

Jay Belasco plays one of the leading parts. John Steppling, well known for his character work in pictures, plays the part of the uncle from Kansabraska. Others in the cast are B. Du Vaul, Vera Doria, Lillie Sylvester, Joe Franz and John McGregor.

New Order of Releases of Tom Mix Comedies

THE work of re-editing and retitling the five Tom Mix two-reel comedies to be released by William Fox has been completed, and the order of their release, in conjunction with Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedies, was decided upon this week. Here follows the schedule.

The first Mix subject will be "Hearts and Saddles," which will be released January 12. This will be followed by a Fox-Lehrman Sunshine comedy, "Oh, What a Knight!" The second Mix comedy will be "A Roman Cowboy," to be followed a week later by a Sunshine comedy, "A Lady Bellhop's Secret." The next Mix comedy will be "Six Cylinder Love," after which will come "His Musical Sneeze," another Henry Lehrman creation. Tom Mix in "A Soft Tenderfoot" will be followed by a Sunshine comedy and the fifth Mix subject, "Tom and Jerry Mix."

The five Tom Mix subjects were selected from among all the two-reel comedies made by this star because of their speed and their previous box office success. In their present form they are declared to be much better than originally, because whatever material was formerly in them that would tend to drag or retard the movement has been eliminated. The new subtitles, too, are declared to be exceptional for their brightness.

"Why Germany Must Pay" (Screen Classics).

"Why Germany Must Pay," a stirring historical novel of the screen with an all-star cast, is Screen Classics, Inc.'s, latest patriotic super-feature to be completed. Charles Miller directed it. It will be distributed by Metro after the first of the year.

The story of "Why Germany Must Pay" is human, powerful and dramatic, the background of the war being used to bring home to every one what is uppermost in the mind of the world today—indemnity. A young Alsatian, Conrad Le Brett, is forced to fight at the beginning of the war on the side of Germany, though his soul revolts at the brutality of his associates.

Creighton Hale plays the young Alsatian. Others in the cast are Florence Billings, E. J. Connelly, Frank Currier, Henry Kolker, Joseph Kilgour, Earl Schenck, Margaret McWade and H. C. Carvill.

"Common Cause" Stars for "A House Divided."

The five leading players in J. Stuart Blackton's latest screen production, "The Common Cause," have been gathered together again to interpret the leading roles in his next special feature titled "A House Divided." This picture, which is being produced under Commodore Blackton's personal direction, is an adaptation of Ruth Holt Boucicault's novel, "The Substance of His House."

The five stars are Herbert Rawlinson, Sylvia Breamer, Lawrence Grossmith and Charles and Violet Blackton. Each of these players made an individual success in "The Common Cause," distributed by Vitagraph, and they have equally effective parts in "A House Divided."

The supporting cast for this quintette of stars includes Sally Crute, William Humphrey, Eric Mayne, Marie Burke and Shirley Huxley. Jack Martin is assisting Commodore Blackton.

Julian a Stickler for Detail.

Rupert Julian, Universal director, has always been a stickler as to detail, but in the filming of "Pirate Gold," a forthcoming release starring Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford, Mr. Julian established a "high water mark." In several scenes an ancient sea warrior handles several hundred old doubloons. The property man provided some ancient coins for the scene, but Mr. Julian refused to begin work on this episode of the story until exact duplicates of the legal tender of Spain in 1797 were cast. In order to obtain what Mr. Julian desired, Assistant Director Rex Hodge had to search through a score of books at the Los Angeles library before he found a facsimile of the old Spanish coins, and it took the entire following day to prepare molds for the coinage of the serial hundred pieces necessary for the photoplay.

Adolphe Osso

Who Has Entered the Producing Field.

Louise Lovely Engaged by Metro.

Louise Lovely is Hale Hamilton's leading woman in "Johnny on the Spot," the Shannon Fife story adapted by June Mathis. It is under production at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, with Harry L. Franklin directing.

Mabel McQuade,

Appearing in Support of Corrine Griffith in "The Girl Question" (Vitagraph).

"The Wildcat of Paris" Starts Universal's Year

THE WILDCAT OF PARIS," featuring Priscilla Dean, will be Universal's first special attraction of 1919. Incidentally it will be the first feature release of this company in the new year. This will be followed by "The Nature Girl," featuring Violet Mersereau, and "The Craving," featuring Francis Ford—two Bluebirds. "Roped," Harry Carey's latest special attraction, adapted from the original story by Eugene B. Lewis, and showing the Western actor in the role of a society man, is scheduled for release the second week of January. This is to be followed by "Who Will Marry Me?" which features Carmel Myers, and "The Game's Up," starring Ruth Clifford.

The release of "The Light of Victory," featuring Monroe Salisbury, has been postponed due to the fact that climatic conditions in California made it impossible to finish the photographing of the film on scheduled time.

Though no release date has as yet been set it is expected that the Jewel superfilm, "The Heart of Humanity," will be released late in January, and it is also possible that another Mildred Harris feature will be released late in the month.

Jane Acker Back to Screen in Support of Geo. Walsh

AS an example of the policy of William Fox of surrounding his stars with casts of players of recognized ability, it was announced this week that Jean Acker, formerly one of the best known feminine leads in the profession, had returned to the films as member of George Walsh's company, which is filming "Tough Luck Jones." Miss Acker, who has been "out of pictures" for two years or more, formerly played in support of some of the leading stars, and is widely known as an actress of considerable ability.

It is understood that the William Fox organization is negotiating for another well known actress to play the part of the ingenue lead. Mr. Walsh and his company have been making interior scenes at the Eclair Studio in Fort Lee, N. J., during the past week. After the holidays they will go to Florida to shoot exteriors. The company is being directed by Edward Dillon, who also directed George Walsh in "Luck and Pluck."

"Prussian Cur" and the Fate of Ex-Kaiser.

Reflecting the great interest aroused in this country by discussions here and abroad as to what shall be done to the ex-Kaiser is the success credited by William Fox to "The Prussian Cur" since the signing of the armistice. Reports to the Fox Film Corporation, it is said, show that practically every print of this picture throughout the country has been booked for all of January, and exhibitors who have shown "The Prussian Cur" during the last few weeks report great business.

Produced as one of the William Fox big, timely pictures, "The Prussian Cur" is regarded as more timely now than at any date since its release. This, in the opinion of officials of the Fox Film Corporation, is because newspapers are carrying first-page stories to the effect that the Allies intend to show no mercy toward the Hohenzollern family.

Desmond Playing in Parker Story.

The story of William Desmond's first production, "Life's a Funny Proposition," produced by Jesse D. Hampton for release through Exhibitors' Mutual, was written by William Parker. In this picture Desmond plays the part of Jimmie Pendelton, who has not permitted New York to affect him too seriously, but plays the good fellow when his best friends drops in on him with a bevy of chorus girls from the Follies. Affairs of this kind require frequent wires to Uncle Tobias in Kansabraska for funds.

"Wife or Country" Is a Psychological Spy Story

HARRY MESTAYER is the star and author of "Wife or Country," the Triangle release scheduled for December 29. It is described as a psychological story with a spy plot, and is said to picture dramatically the stimulating qualities of self-respect.

Mr. Mestayer, who will be recalled for his work in "The House with a Thousand Candles," "Stop Thief" and several Triangle productions, plays the part of Dale Barker, formerly a prominent lawyer, now a victim of drink. Gretchen Lederer is the woman who finds the key to his downfall and opens the way for his redemption through her appeal to his respect. Through her influence he regains the wealthy clientele that is the just reward of an expedient lawyer; his success in "coming back" surprising his most intimate friends, while his marriage to the woman who has saved him is her reward.

But loyalty is never loved, and the climax of the play presents a situation where the permanency of a man's reclamation is tested. For his wife becomes involved in a plot intermingled with German propaganda, and he is compelled to choose between loyalty to his wife or loyalty to his country.

Gloria Swanson and Jack Richardson have prominent parts in the supporting cast. E. Mason Hopper directed. Clyde R. Cook was the cameraman.

Picture Shows Facial Rebuilding.

One of the new films released by the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures which is calculated to arouse comment and which is considered the most unique of the series prepared for theatre use is called "New Faces for Old." The whole reel is devoted to showing exactly how wounded soldiers of the Allies are receiving special treatment to enable them confidently to mingle again with friends and family after they have been badly disfigured. Quite a connected story is worked out.

This release has been sent to General Film Company exchanges for distribution. Two other subjects are "Homeward Bound," dealing with American soldiers preparing to return, and "Russia, a World Problem," showing curious scenes in the great country which is now a decided question mark before the peace conference.

Salvation Army Story Progressing.

After extensive preparations and considerable revision of the script to strengthen the story to the utmost, the big production dealing with the work of the Salvation Army, both at home and abroad, during war times and in days of peace, is now well under way at the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's Hollywood studios under the direction of Edward Jose. Rainy weather is interfering to some extent, but will not materially hamper work as there is much interior picturing to be done as well.

Eugene O'Brien, Ruby de Remer and Catherine Calvert appear in three of the important roles, while Commander Evangeline Booth of the Salvation Army will make special appearances in scenes to be taken in New York after the work in California is completed.

Prescribe Chaplin for Dullness.

B. F. Keith's National Theatre, of Louisville, Ky., sought an attraction that would draw the attention of the public in the dull period of the week before Christmas. Manager Robert Wayne selected Charlie Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms." Tony Sudekum, proprietor of the Princess, Nashville's vaudeville theatre, exhibited "Shoulder Arms" for a return engagement. Other Tennessee cities that demanded return engagements of "Shoulder Arms" were Chattanooga and Knoxville.

Pathe's Serial Program for 1919 Well Under Way

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., intends to maintain its position during the year 1919 as the greatest distributor of successful serials in the picture industry," declares Vice President Paul Brunet, in announcing Pathe serial plans for next year. "The Perils of Pauline," which marked the inauguration of the modern fifteen-episode continued feature, established Pearl White in the position she holds today. Pathe has produced twenty-two serials since that time and they have made millions for exhibitor, producer and distributor.

Pearl White and Ruth Roland will of course head the program. Miss White, in "The Lightning Raider," concerning which so much has been heard in the way of advance praise, will make her first appearance in the new serial on January 5.

On February 2 Pathe will release the initial episode of an eight-chapter serial entitled "The Terror of the Range," and featuring Betty Compson and George Larkin. This serial is also the result of a preconceived and well thought out plan on the part of Pathe executives. Pathe believes that the demand for "westerns" has never abated to a full degree, but rather moves in cycles. In other words, every so often there is a call for a good western subject.

"The Terror of the Range" is a western serial, by W. S. Douglas and Lucien Hubbard. It was produced by Diando and directed by Stuart Patch. Its story, revolving around a famous western bandit, is located on the border line between Mexico and the United States. It is peopled with cowboys, Indians and Mexicans of the type dear to the heart of the fans. Betty Compson and George Larkin were also in "The Border Raider."

Ruth Roland, the second of the Pathe duo, also will be prominent in the Pathe serial program for 1919. She is now at work at the Astra studios, at Glendale, Cal., on a fifteen-episode serial tentatively called "The Long Arm." The authors are Arthur Reeves, author of the "Craig Kennedy" stories, and Charles Logue. "The Long Arm" will be placed on the screens immediately at the conclusion of "The Lightning Raider," probably some time in May. Its story is an intensely interesting one, revolving around a cult of East Indians who are tiger worshippers.

Immediately at the conclusion of work on "The Lightning Raider" Pearl White will start work on another serial. This is as yet unnamed.

This program will carry Pathe serial plans through the year of 1919, and it will enable exhibitors to have a Pathe serial, with one or another of the Pathe stars, on their programs every week.

Keenan Picture Released January 12.

Interest in the plans of Frank Keenan, already outlined, to become an independent producer will be deepened upon the presentation of "The Midnight Stage," an Extra Selected Star Photoplay, released by Pathe on January 12. Mr. Keenan has declared he will risk his professional reputation and the fortune which has been placed at his disposal to make the very best pictures from the best stories obtainable and cast by the best talent. "The Midnight Stage," he says, may be regarded as a promise of what may be expected when he turns to the new enterprise.

Mignon Anderson is charming as Mary Lynch, and Maude George gives a strong dramatic portrait of Nita, the discarded one. Others in the cast are Charles Gunn, Joseph J. Dowling, Thomas Guise, Wadsworth Harris and Ernest C. Warde, the director who does an evilly fascinating bit.

Long Bookings for Burlingham Travelogs.

A number of the most recent bookings of Burlingham Travel Pictures being reported from General Film Company exchanges, through which they are distributed by the William L. Sherry Service, indicate the popularity with which they are received.

Keith's, of Providence, has booked a series of ten subjects for a run of a week each. The Stillman, Cleveland, has signed for the series. The beauty of the Alpine views in the Burlingham pictures, along with the adventure thrills presented in them, are, from all accounts, making this series desirable to exhibitors.

Paramount Releases a Frederick Jan. 5.

A Paramount release of January 5 which should prove of more than passing interest is "Out of the Shadow," in which Pauline Frederick plays the stellar role. This is an adaptation of "The Shadow of the Rope," a novel by E. W. Hornung, author of "Raffles."

Wyndham Standing appears in the leading male role of Richard Steel. Eve Unsell prepared the scenario from which the production was directed by Emile Chautard.

Among Independent Producers

Conducted by C. S. SEWELL

Gaumont Starts Pacific Coast News and Graphic

THE Gaumont Company announces that beginning about January 1, it will issue a Pacific Coast edition of the Gaumont News and Gaumont Graphic. These will be edited by Eugene W. Castle, who has been associated with the Gaumont News Service for more than five years, and, in addition to being an excellent cinematographer, is also a newspaper man of long experience.

The Gaumont laboratories in the East have been noted for the quality of the negatives and rapidity with which they have prints of news events, but distance has prevented Pacific Coast theatres from screening these events as promptly as theatres in the East, but under the new arrangement Western theatres will be able to show events which happened in adjacent states before the negative could reach New York.

During the war Mr. Castle has been a sergeant, handling publicity in the U. S. Marine Corps. In future he will be located in San Francisco, and can be addressed care San Francisco Bulletin. A capable corps of camera men, many of whom have been associated with the Gaumont News Service in the past, will be maintained in various parts of the West and will report direct to Mr. Castle.

Tourneur's Record for the Past Year

THE year 1918 has been one of striking achievement for Maurice Tourneur, in which he has established himself in the front rank of independent producers. Undaunted by ominous conditions, he organized the Maurice Tourneur Productions, having already produced many notable films, including Maeterlinck's "The Bluebird," "Prunella," "Barbary Sheep," "The Whip," and others. But he felt that only as an independent producer could he achieve his ideals.

As his first production he chose the Drury Lane melodrama, "Sporting Life," and in his belief in the story not the star he selected Constance and Fair Binney, practically unknown, for the leading feminine roles. This production proved to be a big success and was purchased by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which is releasing it as a special. His next production, "Woman," was of an entirely different type, and was the embodiment of an idea which he had been developing for years, dealing with the effect of femininity on history. Its premiere at the Rivoli was a success, and Mr. Tourneur decided to release it on the open market so as to give it individuality of exploitation.

Finishing "Woman," he again turned to melodrama and produced "My Lady's Garter," from a mystery story by Jacques Futrelle, which will shortly be launched. Recently he took over a portion of Goldwyn's Culver City studios, and is now working there on his fourth independent production, the title of which will shortly be announced.

"The Silent Mystery" Is an Egyptian Story

FRANCIS FORD'S skill in directing serials has gained him a large following, and in his latest production, "The Silent Mystery," which is now in its seventh episode, he is said to have surpassed his former standards. This serial is described as having pep and punch in abundance, together with all the elements necessary to a successful serial, and to have a story moving in logical sequence.

As announced in our last issue, a large proportion of the territory has already been sold on this production. However, there still remains open some choice territory in the Middle West and on the Pacific Coast.

The story begins in Egypt, where the wife of a wealthy ship owner, finding herself short of funds, steals a marvelous jewel from a sacred temple and secretes it in a mummy case. She involves her daughter, Betty, played by Mae Gaston, in the intrigue, and becomes the object of the malevolent operations of the priestess. Kah, portrayed by Rosemary Theby, who enlists the services of a band of marauding pirates, who bend their efforts to the sinking of ships in addition to aiding in the recovery of the much-wanted jewel.

They do not reckon, however, upon the American detective, Phil Kelly, portrayed by Francis Ford, whose love for Betty and determination to put an end to the pirates leads him through paths fraught with danger. In one instance, deadly fumes are injected into an underground pit, and he also has to reckon with a diabolical apparatus for torpedoing ships at sea by wireless. However, in the end he triumphs.

Louis Burston is producing the "Silent Mystery," and it is being released through Hiller & Wilke, Inc., Longacre Building, New York.

Lesser Buys Territory on "The Spreading Evil"

James Keane, producer of "The Spreading Evil," the big picture on the social evil which is being marketed throughout the county on the state rights basis with the approval of the Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, and others prominent in public life, has returned to New York after a trip to Chicago.

Mr. Keane's trip was undertaken some days ago on practically a moment's notice when Sol Lesser, the well known Pacific Coast film operator, showed a strong disposition to secure "The Spreading Evil" for some of the territories in which he is interested. Mr. Lesser was leaving New York and didn't have time to discuss final details of the transaction, so Mr. Keane went with him with the result that the picture was screened again for Mr. Lesser in Chicago, and the deal was closed. Mr. Lesser now has the feature for California, Arizona and Nevada. Prints have been shipped him from New York, and the picture will be on exhibition in theatres in the territory mentioned within the next ten days.

"The Spreading Evil" continues to do a splendid business in the New York territory under the direction of Dave Solomon, who has secured the booking rights for New York State. An important booking recently announced was for the Symphony Theatre, ono of the finest houses in New York City.

Rooms for Exhibitors in Hall's Branch Offices

L. S. CARD, general sales manager of the Independent Sales Corporation, of which Frank Hall is president, has issued an order to all branch managers throughout the country to make special provision for the comfort of out-of-town exhibitors who may be visiting any of the cities where the Independent Sales Corporation maintains a unit.

This order specifically states that the outer rail forming a conventional barrier between customer and office force be dispensed with, also that a commodious room fitted with desks, tables, chairs, telephones, etc., be placed at the exhibitors disposal, so that they may have a place to meet friends, write letters, get 'phone calls, and, in fact, make this room their headquarters during their stay.

It is announced that this order has already been put into effect, and that the exhibitor will find every courtesy extended to him in each of the branches of the Independent Sales Corporation which are maintained in the same offices as the Film Clearing House branches. Attention is called to the fact that under this arrangement the exhibitor is enabled in many instances to transact all of his business under one roof, as the physical distribution of the films of many large producers will be handled through the Film Clearing House, and the booking of many independent producers through the Independent Sales Corporation.

Sales Manager Card's order, however, does not restrict the branch managers to extend courtesy of their offices exclusively to those dealing with the above mentioned concerns, but to extend a welcome to all.

Shallenberger Announces "The Commercial Pirates"

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, announces the release on the state rights market of "The Commercial Pirates," a new six-part drama from an original story, dealing with a subject that has agitated the social and business world.

The theme of the picture concerns the work of representatives of a tremendous trust which in its greed to monopolize a certain product is met with the invention of a young man which, if exploited, would put the trust out of business. To overcome this they employ secret agents, among whom is a woman, in an endeavor to first buy the invention, and, failing in this, to secure it by other means.

Interwoven into this theme is a love story of the young inventor and the daughter of a proud but poverty stricken Southern gentleman. Derwent Hall Caine portrays the role of the young inventor, while Madamoiselle Valkyrien is cast as his sweetheart.

The production was released to state rights buyers on December 30.

Hatch Buys "Wives of Men" for Three Eastern States

THE Pioneer Film Corporation have sold to Frank Hatch, of Pittsburgh, rights on "Wives of Men" for Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Southern New Jersey. This feature is said to have proved one of the best box office attractions released on the state rights basis, exhibitors all over the country reporting excellent business being done with it.

The Pioneer company is also now negotiating with state rights buyers in the territories of Illinois, Indiana and New England on the picturization of "Little Orphant Annie," the world-famous poem by James Whitcomb Riley. The interest being shown in this production is quite natural, owing to the fact that "Little Orphant Anne" has been so widely read by young and old folks throughout the country, and is a masterpiece, because of its deep pathos, interesting story and its true to life nature, making it excellent screen material.

The picture is said to follow closely the original text. One of the high lights of the production is the fact that the late James Whitcomb Riley appears in many of the scenes. Territory on "Little Orphant Annie" is fast being contracted for.

Herbert Lubin Recovers from Serious Operation

HERBERT LUBIN, one of the officials of the recently organized S-L Pictures, expects some time this week to be able to leave the sanitarium, where he has been confined for some time as the result of an operation. Mr. Lubin went under the surgeon's knife some weeks ago, this being the second time within the past year that he had to undergo an operation.

As soon as he is able to travel, Mr. Lubin will leave for a visit to Palm Beach, Fla., to recuperate. During his confinement in the sanitarium the initial S-L feature starring E. K. Lincoln and directed by Ralph Ince has been practically completed, and immediately upon his return he will take up the matter of distribution of the series of special features to be produced by this company.

Arthur H. Sawyer will supervise the activities of the studios and other matters pertaining to the affairs of S-L productions during Mr. Lubin's absence from the city.

Transport "Leviathan" Shown in Gaumont News

AMONG the interesting subjects in Gaumont News No. 39 is the recent return trip of the huge army transport, the "Leviathan," formerly the "Vaterland," the pride of the German Navy. This is the vessel which the Germans particularly attempted to render useless by destroying intricate machinery when it, along with others, was seized by the Government. However, it was quickly put in order by the naval engineers, and successfully transported more than 100,000 soldiers to France.

This number of the News also contains effective photographs of the Southern Commercial Congress recently held in Baltimore, at which there was featured a great naval pageant, and is said to contain the best pictures of American war vessels and hydroplanes taken since the beginning of the war. Other subjects show Secretary McAdoo turning over his office as Secretary of the Treasury to his successor, Carter Glass; Governor Manning, of South Carolina, and his wife, parents of six sons fighting for the Allies; the battle cruiser North Carolina, first of the warships equipped to bring troops home; inspection of a French munition factory by American officers, and another installment of "Flying for Uncle Sam" showing the work of balloon observers.

Gaumont Graphic No. 39 shows King George decorating American heroes, and there are many pictures of our boys pushing into Germany. One scene shows the base of the long range gun that bombarded Paris. Other subjects show the Italian ambassador to France taking a balloon trip; the opening of a sanitarium for tubercular soldiers in France; the convention of the War Emergency and Reconstruction Congress in Atlantic City, and Galli-Curci and other songbirds auctioning apples to help war-stricken Italians.

Marcus Loew Books "Wanted for Murder."

The Independent Sales Corporation announces that Marcus Loew has completed arrangements for booking the Harry Rapf production, "Wanted for Murder," for his circuit of theatres. This booking follows closely upon the presentation of this picture at the Broadway Theatre, New York, and the announcement that it would be handled by the Independent Sales Corporation through the Film Clearing House.

Unique Press Sheet on "Wanted for Murder"

FRANK HALL, president of the Independent Sales Corporation, who is himself an exhibitor, advises that in line with the desires expressed by a number of exhibitors he has had his press department prepare a unique press sheet for "Wanted for Murder."

This press sheet is unusually large, and the upper half is so arranged that the exhibitor can use it effectively in his lobby. It contains only the title, "Wanted for Murder," a descriptive line, scene and poster cuts and a closing shot with a ticket-buying appeal. The lower half is devoted to press stories and reproductions of accessories other than posters. The press stories comprise two medium length and two short advance "readers," a long and a short synopsis, one medium and one short reader for the opening day, and a medium and short story for the day following. They are all written in the language of the exhibitor, so that when the name of the theatre and town is inserted they can be clipped and used verbatim.

In addition the press sheet also suggests stunts which are said to present practical novel and inexpensive ideas. There are also music cue sheets and lines that can be used as "teasers." The cuts and slides have been carefully selected, and none are used that are not filled with plenty of "action."

Osso Says War Pictures, If Good, Always Please

OF THE NUMEROUS films that were completed last week I saw two. One of them was in every sense a "war film." The other was a pictorial tribute to the heroes of the great victory. At any rate, both, to my mind, seemed to be the kind of subjects concerning which there has been much said and written and debated—the kind of films concerning which it has been said "The public doesn't want them."

Immediately after the signing of the armistice I had my doubts as to the rosiness of the future of the "war films." The diverse predictions were confusing, and so I decided to do a little of my own probing and investigating. It was no easy proposition to get the dope straight, for the exhibitors themselves were much at sea on the subject.

This is not difficult to understand, inasmuch as they would play a "war film" on a certain day and "die," and then, a day or two later, play another one and "clean up" with it. Thus a great big question-mark loomed up before the exhibitor and hovered over the "war films."

Made a Check of War Subjects.

We checked up in three ways, as follows: A direct canvass of every book publishing house was made to determine what their experience with war-books had brought to light. We discovered in almost every instance that a particular phase of the war, treated in some novel way, proved successful. In every instance it was a book relating to the war that was the best seller. They condemned word-pictures of atrocities and found the public hungry for accounts of true incidents or moments that ought to become permanent in the traditions of America's part in the conflict.

We solicited syndicates furnishing the newspapers with feature stories and aricles for publication, and, in conjunction with one of the largest feature syndicates in the business, wrote to the feature editors on the newspapers they served, and again we found that fiction based upon true occurrences, anecdotes avoiding a noticeable propaganda, were eagerly devoured and were good circulation builders.

Conducted Canvass of Exhibitors.

In additlon to the above, we wrote to exhibitors in various parts of the country —not form letters; we wrote to exhibitors we knew. They were personal letters asking which of the "war films" they played were the ones they "cleaned up" with and which ones "died." The replies we received cinched my belief. They checked up with an idea back in my head that the war films released until recently were produced before the signing of the armistice, and those of them that "died" had unmistakably hoped to rely upon strong strafing titles and tricks to win applause rather than furnish a 100 per cent. story and production.

A good story, well acted, with good photography and properly produced must be successful whether it be war or any other subject and is bound to please an audience anywhere in the world. That's all there is to it. We get back to the same old situation—a good picture will bring the money and a bad one won't.

The two films referred to were Allan Holubar's "Hearts of Humanity" and Leonce Perret's "Stars of Glory"—two productions bearing on the war, yet each of a distinctly different type. They are the two best films I have seen in a year. The story in each case is beautiful and both are electric heart-appeals. Only a war subject could offer the tremendous possibilities that both of these productions have taken advantage of to the fullest extent.

Alma Hanlon Is Starred in Arrow's "Profiteer"

WHAT is described as an up-to-the-minute dramatic production is "The Profiteer," in which beautiful Alma Hanlon is the star and athletic Jack Sherrill having the leading male role. The cast supporting these two well known players is said to have been selected for its acting ability, and the production to be one possessing strength of story, virility, swift action and beautiful scenery.

It is announced that the story was written with the idea of making an "after the war" picture that dealt with certain phases of profiteering, and the actual production commenced the day the armistice was signed. By means of a great deal of overtime work the picture was completed in four weeks, and has since been cut and edited and advertising matter prepared. The production was directed by J. K. Holbrook.

According to a statement issued by the Arrow Film Corporation, they have taken the actual cost of the negative, added a small percentage of profit to the producer and established a price which, when apportioned among the different state rights territories, calls for a figure which stamps it one of the biggest bargains of the season.

An attractive line of advertising matter has been prepared for this production. There are 11x14 and 22x28 photo enlargements in sepia and colors, two styles of one sheets, two styles of three sheets, one style six-sheet from hand-drawn sketches, two styles of slides, heralds from art drawings and a press book.

Complete Advertising Aids for New W. H. Reissues

THE W. H. Productions Company is endeavoring to show exhibitors and exchangemen that a good reissue can be put out on an equal basis with the latest productions. As each new series is launched the complete outline for presentation and exploitation is laid before the exchanges.

On the four new series of reissues to be released soon, namely the fifteen two-reel Kay Bee Columbia Western dramas, and the fifteen two-reel Kay Bee Union Western dramas, also on the series of twenty-eight Keystone Liberty single-reel comedies, the exploitation campaign is said to have brought rapid and tangible results, as inquiries are being received daily from some of the most reliable exchanges in the country, and territories are being disposed of rapidly.

The W. H. Productions announce that these new series have been reconstructed, re-edited, and, in some instances, retitled, and that the Kay Bees represent the pick of short Western dramas, while the Keystones are great comedy productions featuring a combination of prominent comedy stars of today, under the direction of one of the best directors in motion pictures.

Says an official of the W. H. Productions Company, "That the exhibitor appreciates the box office value of reissues is evidenced by the rapidity with which the territories are being disposed of. The exhibitor finds the public wants to see the reissues, either because they have never seen them before, or, if they have seen them, his patrons will remember the laughs and thrills and will be even more anxious to renew these old acquaintances. Also, the fact that a man will remember a picture he has seen probably three or four years ago, speaks well for the worth or the enjoyment such a productions affords."

"The W. H. Productions Company have prepared complete, new advertising posters on the new series. There are one, three and six sheets on the Kay Bees, with 8x10 photos. The posters and photos are selected with an idea to box office drawing power, and in every case where the title has been changed, the old title, as well as the new, is plainly stated. Exhibitors are instructed as to the value of displaying the old as well as the new title. The advantage of such a course is pointed out to them, and they have found from previous experience that it pays."

Tourneur's Showmanship Apparent in His Films

THE rapidity with which territories are selling for Maurice Tourneur's production, "Woman," indicates that first of all he is much of a showman. His productions are said to be pictures that appeal to the imaginative and successful exhibitor. There is always one element that stands out. This was apparent in his earlier offerings, such as "The Whip," which has a sensational railroad collision; in a word, it had the punch of a showman.

His exquisite production of Maeterlinck's symbolical fantasy, "The Blue Bird," introduced the impressionistic art of the theatre. "Sporting Life," the adapted Drury Lane melodrama, possessed remarkable fog scenes in the London streets. "Woman" also makes an appeal to the innate sense of the showman, for it is unique, and is unlike other film productions. It is neither a spectacle, a drama or a melodrama. It is something new to the screen. In this lies the showman's appeal. This photoplay possesses a little of everything, from a daring but tasteful handling of the scene in the Garden of Eden to a sweeping glimpse of dissolute Rome, from the civil war days to the modern period of supreme sacrifice for democracy.

The disposal of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia is just announced by Hiller & Wilk, selling agents for Maurice Tourneur productions. This territory was purchased by First National Exchange, of Pittsburgh.

Tom Mix Reissues Appeal to Buyers.

Exhibitors and state rights buyers, as well as trade press critics who have seen the first two releases of the series of sixteen two-reel Tom Mix comedy dramas that Exclusive Features, Inc., are placing on the market, seem to be of the opinion that they fill a long-felt want as an aid to exhibitors in building up a program, and the manner in which territory on these productions is being disposed of would appear to bear this out. These "big, little features," as they are called, contain punch and thrills, with a mixture of laughs, and are of the kind that will interest young and old.

Tom Mix has become one of the most popular of Western stars, and these two-reelers are said to be among the best pictures in which he has appeared. They were produced by William N. Selig, a man who appreciated the value of Western comedy-dramas and knew how to produce them.

Universal Buys Two Negatives.

The Universal has purchased from the Argosy Films Company the negatives for "The Craving," featuring Francis Ford, and "After the War," featuring Grace Cunard.

"The Craving" is adapted for screen use by Francis Ford from his own scenario, which deals with the rivalry existing between an American inventor and an East Indian scientist who steals the Yankee's formula for a powerful explosive, but loses his life when the theft is discovered and the Westerner comes to obtain his prescription and in a scuffle with the Hindu causes an explosion.

"After the War" has been referred to as a timely picture of the year. The story deals with conditions in Belgium and France after the armistice has been signed.

Mutt and Jeff in Travelogue.

In the latest Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon release, "Here and There," Mutt and Jeff, the first animated pen and ink characters to introduce a travelogue in motion pictures, once more take their camera and grind bits of novel educational film in various parts of the world. Mexico is one of their stops.

There they are shown testing the national dish of our Southwestern neighbor, the hot tamale. Mutt passes on the quality of the peppery food, judging the worth of the tamale by its effects on little Jeff.

In Egg Harbor, N. J., Mutt and Jeff show the habits of the egg plant. From there they go to Australia, where they meet a flock of boxing kangeroos, much to the discomfiture of Mutt. These and other incidents in the film are said to make "Here and There" one of the funniest Mutt and Jeff subjects yet produced.

"Heart of Wetona" a Pleasing Western.

A vivid illustration of the progress in making Western pictures is given in Norma Talmadge's Select picture, "The Heart of Wetona," which, as a play two seasons ago, was one of the hits on the Broadway speaking stage. "The Heart of Wetona" is a story of the West, with just the right type of cowboys and Indians to bring the public hunching forward on their seats when the screen actors go tearing across the plains on their racing horses.

The director, who in this case happens to be Sidney A. Franklin, has discovered the secret of making a Western picture without a shooting in every scene; while the star, who is Norma Talmadge, portrays the heroine without hissing and cursing.

"THE GREAT VICTORY"

Wilson or the Kaiser, the Fall of the Hunzollerns" Is Ready for Release as Screen Classic.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

FOR immediate distribution and during the weeks that decent nations sit in conference to decide the fate of Germany, "The Great Victory" will be a release of great importance to the Allied morale. Yankees, especially, are inclined to have bad public memories; political differences, because of our habit of submission to majority rule, don't last long after election. And in the greater and more vital issues created by the assaults of the Hun there is, even thus soon, increasing evidence that there is a considerable element of public opinion lapsing into a state of indifference as to Germany's fate.

Pacifists, pro-Germans and "jelly-fish" individuals will find little in "The Great Victory" to absorb as entertainment. Just as some of the newspapers set in a group the boastings of Bill Hunzollern, so has this Screen Classic, Inc., presentation, directed by Charles Miller, chosen the "high spots" in Hunnish brutality and injustices to mankind. There is a scene to score beside the "sword being thrust into the Kaiser's hand"; there is a match for, "I'll stand no nonsense from America after the war"; the jolly old "mailed fist," the braggart "biting on granite," and all the vaunts and boasts of the Hun of Huns are parried and checkmated in scenes that recall, and keep in mind, the fiends who ran riot among their decent and respectable neighbors.

Edith Cavell is "tried" and slain; the Lusitania is torpedoed; the rape of France is visualized in rather effective mob-drives. We see the Hun of Huns stalk and rave in the days in which he planned to triumph—and when he falls there is a splendid "vision" of madness in which double-exposure keeps scores of jeering soldiers circling about the Beast of Berlin, while he slashes thin air with delirium's sword. The producers started to announce the production before November 11. Since the armistice it is fair to presume efforts have been made to revise the original work in an effort to edit into it the changed temporal conditions.

The work of revision has been well done. We now see recent history re-enacted in well devised scenes. The representation has been carried right down to the time President Wilson sailed away on the George Washington. Thank goodness there has been no attempt to "vision" the future. The past has been well and vigorously dealt with, and in the weeks to come the beastliness and mad passion for world-conquest that inspired the Hun will be kept in view of picture patrons while statesmen measure the corpse of autocracy for its grave of oblivion.

The happiest possible selection of "types" for the famous characters, reflecting those notables as we have seen them in life or in pictures, makes some of the representations amazing. The likeness of Fred C. Truesdell to Wilson is remarkable; the man who plays McAdoo is almost a double, and the "type" of Secretary Lansing was an admirable selection. To show how much it will cost to put the complete title in an electric sign we give it here: "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser, the Fall of the Hohenzollerns."

Just how long "The Great Victory" will have profitable appeal this writer makes no attempt to prognosticate. But it is well to repeat that for immediate showings, and, while peace parleys are under way, it's a good exhibitor bet—and showings will be a good thing for our national spirit.

"THE HEART OF HUMANITY"

Allen Holubar's Nine-Reel Jewel Production a Great Drama of War.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A YEAR or two ago the name of a certain young director appeared occasionally among the one and two-reel subjects being made by the Universal Company. The name was Allen Holubar, and every time it appeared it was attached to a picture that stood out in a promising way from the general run of things. Last Friday night, at the Broadway Theatre, Mr. Holubar appeared personally with a nine-reel vehicle featuring Dorothy Phillips which amply redeemed this promise. Mr. Holubar has been reaching for the moon, as the saying goes, and if he has not entirely got hold of it, he has at least found a very conspicuous "place in the sun."

This production, "The Heart of Humanity," is one of the biggest and most satisfying stories that have come out of the great war. It may be late from the point of stimulating morale, but it is never too late to see a story such as this—wonderfully mounted, splendidly acted, altogether beautifully done. We have seen nothing recently that has quite so successful a blend of scenic beauty, humor and human tenderness. The director has an almost unerring faculty for selecting vital and pertinent situations, and his whole production is "on the key." The close of the subject leaves one with only two minor critical suggestions worth recording, the question of whether a few of the battle scenes might not be spared, and whether the struggle between the girl and the Hun—splendidly as it has been acted—does not occupy too much space.

This story, which was written jointly by Olga Scholl and Mr. Holubar, and to which the latter has given seven months in the making, is a great war epic of Canada, a pictorial poem of exquisite feeling and sentiment. The story is so well made that it might well be presented officially by our Government to the Government of Canada as a tribute to her splendid spirit of sacrifice. The sufferings of the Widow Patricia, who sends her five sons and sees but one of them return, typify the sufferings of all Canadian mothers, whose Spartan courage has until now received but little recognition.

The settings of the story are its first claim to special merit, at least first in order, for by the time the plot itself gets to moving and the actors get their chance the observer has already succumbed to the charm of lake and timber and the Canadian out-of-doors. The introduction of the widow and her sons—John, Paul, Jules, Maurice and Louis, is something that will linger in the memory. All love the girl, Nanette, but she marries John, and it is on the very day of the wedding ceremony that the news of war comes in dramatic fashion.

Dorothy Phillips is seen here at the height of her abilities as a screen performer. This means a great deal for, to the writer's way of thinking, she is one of the most natural and effective artists we have. She plays here with assurance and fine emotional effect, and even though we favor cutting somewhat the struggle scene at the close, for the sake of proportion, we have never seen this situation more admirably acted. It threatens to run away with the whole story as it stands. Much of the credit for this also goes to Eric Von Stroheim, a most hatable Hun, who has previously appeared in "The Unbeliever" and "The Hun Within."

Margaret Mann, as the Widow Patricia, carries the sympathies every moment; she visualizes perfectly the sufferings of the mother which are only soothed by the glory she later feels in the sacrific made by her sons. In the latter roles appear William Stowell, Robert Anderson, Frank Braidwood, George Hackathorne and Walt Whitman.

The battle scenes are stupendous and compel the closest attention every moment they are on the screen. Tanks, aeroplanes, flame-throwers, and all of the paraphernalia of modern warfare, are employed. We think this will stand cutting, though it is a pity to see it go, for it has been astonishingly well produced. As it stands the offering is a great success.

"THE CABARET GIRL"

Five-Reel Bluebird Features Ruth Clifford in Conventional Social Satire.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

WHILE this five-reel offering, "The Cabaret Girl," at no time gets entirely away from strictly conventional situations, there is a rising interest as the production progresses which well repays watching it. Ruth Clifford is cast in the leading role, that of Ann Reid, a country girl, who revenges herself upon high society for the slights put upon her by the mother and friends of the man she loves. It is a situation of almost perennial appeal, and is in this instance quite well presented.

The story opens amid pleasant country scenes, where the hero, Ted Vane, chances to cross a stream in his automobile and discovers Ann bathing. She is attired in a bathing suit, but has suffered the embarrassment of having her clothes stolen by a playful canine. Ted assists her in recovering them. The scene changes to the city, where Ann, struggling to make a living with her voice, is forced to sing in a cabaret. Ted discovers her, and asks her to marry him. He introduces her to his parents, and the girl, finding herself the victim of persistent snubbing, proceeds to burlesque some of the fashionable dames about her in an effective and amusing way. The break with her lover which follows is afterward repaired.

The number was adapted by Rex Taylor from a story by Hope Loring and directed by Douglas Gerrard. Others in the cast are Ashton Dearholt, Carmen Phillips and Harry V. Meter.

"WHAT LOVE FORGIVES"

Five-Reel World-Picture Presents Interesting Problem Story By Gardner Hunting.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE plot interest in this five-reel subject, "What Love Forgives," released by World-Pictures, is stronger than the presentation. The story, which was adapted by George D. Proctor from the original by Gardner Hunting, and directed by Henry Vekroff, has one rather novel phase at least, in that it introduces John Bowers in the part of the hero, David Knox Endicott, as a young man with a conscience. The situation with respect to this could have been made much more dramatically effective than it appears in this offering, which tends too much to a strictly narrative style.

David Endicott is a young man born and bred in a New England home, and most carefully reared by his mother. The latter is astounded to find a genius for song-writing breaking out in her son, and urges him to forsake the frivolous, popular style of songs for more serious work. David then writes a song from which the story takes its name, "What Love Forgives." He is induced by some college boys to play it one night in the theatre for an actress in the "Blue Moon" company, named Dorothy Deal. He does this reluctantly, and afterward meets the actress, who proceeds to draw him into intimate relations with herself. She later lays a moral claim upon David, after he has fallen in love with another girl, but her blackmailing tactics are of no avail. The situations in this are rather broad, but should not give offense.

Barbara Castleton and Muriel Ostriche play the part of the two girls. Others in the cast are John Hines, Bobbie Connelly, Florence Coventry, Joe Smiley and Hazel Coates.

"THE HOPE CHEST"

Paramount Presents Dorothy Gish in an Adaptation from Mark Lee Luther.

IT being quite the mode to give attractive stars plays which could not stand on their own merits, Miss Dorothy is handed another of the poor girl who wears beautiful clothes "after all." There is nothing else visible in the story. Her father is a vaudeville actor; she works in a candy store of the "Ballantynes," and young Ballantyne, who amounts to nothing whatever, the stupidest kind of an inanity, runs away with the little girl and marries her.

There is some faint objection on the part of the parents, such as there might be in any country where people are supposed to be divided into classes, but the elder Ballantyne says to his son in the end: "You have done just as I would have done," and that is all there is to it.

Out of this weak and wobbly old vehicle, the kind that tires the audience and injures the star's reputation, Miss Dorothy emerges gleefully, almost tickled to death that she can appear in such a play and manage to be interesting.

A more perfect type of the sweet and spoiled little tomboy than Dorothy will be hard to find, expressive in every motion, particularly with the eloquent little feet of hers. The director seems to know that her tootsies are the most interesting thing in the play—which gives an idea of about how much the "play" itself is worth. Dorothy is the only thing in it.

"THE POOR RICH MAN"

Bushman and Bayne Star in Speedy Metro, Good Entertainment Resulting.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THERE will be no question but what partisans of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will be pleased with the result of their appearance in this Elaine Sterne story. The outcome would be good entertainment even if less skillful players were concerned in the transaction, but with Bushman and Bayne leading the last ounce of possibility is extracted from A. S. Le Vino's scenario under Charles J. Brabin's direction.

"The Poor Rich Man" is a comedy-drama compiled for entertainment only. To be sure, there is a mild exposure of selfishness and a mean bit of trickery to contrast the clean-cut endeavors of the hero to win his way to happiness and fortune. It is early decided that Mr. Bushman shall be the idol of Miss Bayne's heart, hence there is no suspense in the heart interest.

The issue deals with a young "spender" who is left to redeem himself within six months with only a tumbled-down road house to build upon. This property he converts into a resort of fashion and charges regular profiteering prices. Then the young male who threatens to fall heir to Bushman's rightful fortune takes a tip from an actress friend and wrecks the reputation of the road house, but matters turn out in satisfactory detail and all ends well.

It will not be through force of the story that "The Poor Rich Man" will most please; it will be for the reason that Bushman and Bayne put their best effort into the swift-moving circumstances and thereby bring a generous measure of entertainment to apply. Above all things, there will be nothing to jar the sensibilities of the most exacting; there is a refreshing hour for screen fans who have had their fill of war plays, problems, deep villainy and general tribulation.

"THE HEART OF WETONA"

Norma Talmadge Reveals Deep Feeling in Fine Production of Select Picture.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ONCE more a combination of story, direction and acting in which all three elements are intelligently and artistically handled points the way to successful picture production. An error in one division of the work serves to emphasize the excellence of the other qualities of "The Heart of Wetona," a screen version of George Scarborough's stage play, which has been put into scenario form by Mary Murillo and directed by Sydney A. Franklin.

Norma Talmadge has the title role. The picture is in six reels. Condensed into five thousand feet it would be more direct and gain greatly in dramatic force. The finish is retarded to the disadvantage of the story. Aside from this fault, which is easily remedied, "The Heart of Wetona" takes rank with the best of the Norma Talmadge Select productions.

As for the star's share of the labor, none of her impersonations has revealed deeper feeling or a better understanding of the art of acting. There is never the slightest doubt in the mind of the spectator as to what Norma Talmadge is trying to convey. And on the other hand, she never oversteps the demands of the situation. Her acting is always clear and concise, and dominated by a fine sincerity. As Wetona, the child of an Indian chief and his white wife, she is picturesque and beautifully human, and the story of her adventure before she finds her real mate will be followed with compassionate interest.

Put briefly, the plot of "The Heart of Wetona" relates how an Indian girl who has been educated and reared as an American girl gives her heart to a white man only to be betrayed. When she is chosen as the vestal virgin of her tribe, she reveals her secret, and the chief, her father, tries to force her to tell the name of the guilty man. Wetona will not speak, and the chief is led to believe that Hardin, an Indian agent, is the one. To save the girl, Hardin offers to marry her. The rest of the story is devoted to showing how Wetona learned the true character of her betrayer and the worth of Hardin, who has always loved her.

The production was made principally in the West, and the locations are all beautiful and in perfect harmony. The acting of Fred Huntley as Quannah, Thomas Meighan as Hardin and Gladden James as Anthony Wells give these characters their full measure of interpretative skill. The fine photography is due to the ability of David Abel.

"I WANT TO FORGET"

Five-Reel Fox Subject Presents Evelyn Nesbit in Story of Secret Service.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

SUCH drawing power as this five-reel offering entitled "I Want to Forget" exerts will be chiefly due to the public interest in Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw. The story itself, written and staged by James Kirkwood, is a most ordinary spy yarn, and disappointing from a dramatic standpoint. Evelyn Nesbit has some effective poses at times, but the production has been overloaded with close-ups to the detriment both of the star and the drama itself.

The heroine, Varda Deering, is a girl who has played fast and loose with life, and is known as a repentant butterfly when she meets the hero, Lieutenant John Long. The lieutenant at first recoils from her, though charmed by her personality. Later, when he sees her kindness to the chauffeur's son, and learns of her general sweetness of disposition, he falls in love with her.

When the war reaches America, Varda is ready to serve the Allied cause, but a German secret agent named August Von Grossman holds the whip hand over her for a time, threatening to expose the fact that she had once lived in Vienna. Varda remains in his power but a short time before she makes a break for liberation. She tries to stab Von Grossman, but fails. Later the German locks both herself and the lieutenant in a large safe, and they almost suffocate, but are providentially saved.

Henry Clive has the role of the hero. Others who appear are William R. Dunn, Jane Jennings and Russell Thaw.

"EVERY MOTHER'S SON"

Five-Reel Fox Production Features Charlotte Walker in War Tale of Mother Love.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

CHARLOTTE WALKER gives a vivid picture of a fond mother's emotions as she watches her three sons go to war in this story, entitled "Every Mother's Son." A mother's pacifism is not to be confused with pro-Germanism or pro-anything-else, but simply the fear of seeing her son's life lost. Many mothers have undoubtedly taken just the stand assumed by the woman of this story in the early part of it before she had finally learned that in the battle between right and wrong all men must fight until right eventually conquers, as it inevitably must.

The story opens with home scenes in the lives of Franklin Gilbert and his family. At the beginning of the war they burn all books and music written by German artists, and are ardently for the allied cause. But when the call comes to America to send her sons the mother weakens. She sees the first and second sons leave under protest, but when it comes to giving up the third, her youngest, she actively rebels, and takes the youth away in a closed automobile. The father, Franklin Gilbert, follows, and sees that the boy does his duty.

There is some splendid acting on the part of Charlotte Walker in depicting the mother role, and she shows in lucid style the change of heart that came to Mrs. Gilbert after working among the submarine victims. Her soul is then enlisted in the fight, and she sends not only her sons, but her husband as well.

The fighting scenes in France are quite realistically staged, and the love story of the eldest son, Elliot Gilbert, is interesting. This is not the strongest story that has come out of the war, but it has a fine motive, and is well put together.

Percy Standing plays the father, Edwin Stanley, Ray Howard and Gareth Hughes the three sons, and Corone Paynter and Bernard Thornton have other roles. Raoul A. Walsh wrote and directed the production.

Harry Mestayer and Gloria Swanson Featured in Triangle Production of Spy Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WRITTEN by Harry Mestayer, who plays the leading male role, the Triangle production, "Wife or Country," in which Gloria Swanson is the heroine, is a spy story of considerable interest. The scenario was made by Charles J. Wilson, and E. Mason Hopper directed it. The clash between the two female characters of the story is not sharp enough to obtain the best dramatic results. They love the same man, and the woman who first marries him, although an adventuress, commands too much of the spectator's sympathy to make a perfect foil for the heroine. The production and the acting of the cast are of good quality, and several of the situations are cleverly worked out. The connection of German intrigue with the plot is not sufficiently pronounced to hurt the interest now that the war is over.

Dale Barker, the part played by Harry Mestayer, is a young lawyer who has become a victim of strong drink. He has nearly lost his rightful place in society when he meets the woman who awakens him to his danger, and out of gratitude makes her his wife. Mrs. Barker has a secret which she hides from her husband: She is an agent for the German Government. Obliged to earn her own living, she is led into serving the Huns almost without realizing how she has been entrapped. She loves her husband, but discovers, later on, that he has found his real mate in Sylvia Hamilton, a stenographer in his office. The rest of the plot is concerned with showing how Mrs. Barker's jealousy leads to her rival's finding out that her employer's wife is a German spy. The finish leaves the lawyer and Sylvia united.

In addition to Harry Mestayer and Gloria Swanson, the cast contains the names of Jack Richardson and Charles West. Cameraman, Clyde R. Cook.

"THE GREATEST THING IN LIFE"

Griffith Creation of Sweet Human Traits Brought Out in War at Once a Love Story and a Grand Spectacle.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

TO the millions of soldiers coming home, to millions of others at home and their sweethearts and wives, the military story which is not a sham, which may be intensified in action, just as life is intensified in drama, will not lose its charm during this generation. There is more melodrama, more exquisite pathos, more comedy material, for that matter, more real drama stored up in the events of the war than in all our previous history. The playwright who ignores this, and Griffith is not one of them, ignores the spirit of the American people. Griffith is essentially a playwright, both by nature and training, and he is wise in his generation to seize upon those themes which are closest to the hearts of our people.

The greatest thing in life, that which is responsible for flowering the earth with children, is love, human love, if it must be so designated. Love is above the animal instinct, beautifying and enriching it in a thousand ways, one of these being the idealism of womankind, another the illusions of man. He must have his illusions, or he refuses to love, quits when they are destroyed, while she, the world mother, loves on in spite of losing them.

Such is the theme of Griffith's story, with Lillian Gish in an exquisite portrayal of the thoroughly feminine character that seeks to be impressed, her performance straight through being without a blemish, a beautiful characterization.

A crowded house at the Strand began to applaud pure artistry, a wondrous scene in the air, of upcurling smoke from exploding bombs, across which an occasional airship was seen darting, and these scenes are beyond the ordinary, as far removed from claptrap as any of the kind ever shown on the screen. That applause rises as the action goes on partly from relieved suspense, partly because we realize now that we are reading history in picture form. The only marring detail, some early subtitle commentaries, are forgotten in the splendid merits of the production, in its tender notes of pathos, its sincerity, its beauty, its grandeur. No discriminating person can see "The Greatest Thing in Life" and not sigh for more Griffiths.

"WHEN A MAN RIDES ALONE"

Picturesque and Thrilling Five-Reel Pathe Subject of Western Melodramatic Type.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

FOR those who love the wide, sweeping vistas of the great Southwest, with horsemen riding at full speed over mountains and plain, this is just the right subject. It is one of the most highly picturesque numbers, from a scenic standpoint, that the writer has ever seen. The accompanying story, which was written by Stephen Fox and directed by Henry King, is a characteristic Western melodrama, with an agreeable romantic flavor added.

The opening scenes depict a birds-eye view of some border outlaws attacking a mule-back shipment of gold ore. The rangers in charge of the gold are almost annihilated, and their chief, who is known as Captain Bonfire, is made captive shortly after he leads a counter attack on the outlaw's stronghold.

William Russell is cast in the role of Captain Bonfire, which is well suited to his dashing qualities. He is first attacked by the heroine, the beautiful daughter of a native ranchman, who is friendly to the bandits, but later the girl falls desperately in love with him. She and her old servant announce his death, and pretend to have buried him. The hero comes to life at an exciting moment, and fights several duels with the bandit leaders. The love affair between himself and the girl is quite unusual, and the action of the story is full of melodramatic tricks.

Carl Stockdale and Lule Warrenton are also in the cast.

"THE CAPTAIN'S CAPTAIN"

Alice Joyce in Vitagraph Production of Fantastic Story That Is Amusing at Times.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WHEN a novel has been written with a quaint old chap named "Cap'n Abe" as its principal character, it is difficult to turn the story into a moving picture and arrange matters so that stellar honors go to an attractive young woman, even after changing the title. "The Captain's Captain" is taken from a novel by James A. Cooper, and Alice Joyce is the featured player. Produced as a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature and directed by Tom Terriss, the picture reveals a fantastic plot that can never be considered seriously.

It has considerable humor of an obvious kind, however, and the acting and production get the best out of the situations, except the ones where the shipwrecked East Indians are introduced. All attempts to make these scenes impressive are defeated by the improbability of the material, and it would have been better to treat the incident frankly as burlesque.

The plot revolves around Cap'n Abe, a storekeeper in a New England coast town, who is looked down upon by his neighbors because he has never sailed the ocean. He is always telling about his brother, Am'zon, who is a regular salt water cutthroat. Louise Greyling, Abe's niece from the city, comes to visit him, and learns the brother is a myth and that the Cap'n gets his tales of him from a scrapbook containing stories and a picture of a real pirate chief.

Abe is made to pretend to go away and return as Am'zon, his disguise being copied from the picture of the buccaneer. The pirate's reputation induces his brother's customers to settle up their old bills and pay cash for additional purchases. The arrival of the East Indians forces Abe to assume his own character. The brown men claim the pirate desecrated their temple, and try to kill Abe. There is a slight love motive for Louise and a wealthy young fellow whom she mistakes for a fisherman.

Alice Joyce does the little that falls to her share gracefully and intelligently. She is capably supported by Arthur Donaldson as Cap'n Abe, Percy Standing as Cap'n Joab, Julia Swayne Gordon as Aunt Euphemia, Eulalie Jensen as Betty Gallup and Maurice Costello as Lawford Tapp. The scenes along the coast are realistic.

COMMENTS

General Film Company.

HITTIN' THE PIKE (Rothacker).—A reel of film which has been taken for the most part aboard the various sensational railways of a "Coney Island" resort. Those who have no objections to looping the loop or taking a nose spin may be pleased with the picture, which does a large "best" toward making one acquainted with all the sensations of a resort of this kind.

Advertising Angles: The big angle here is the star in the type of play in which he has won his greatest success. Work on this angle in your newspaper and other advertising. Recall the other plays in which he has appeared, and add, "and here's an even stronger role, that of a prospector who seeks gold merely that he may start on his quest for the man who wronged his sister. He finds him, but——." Try and use the scene cuts in your advertising space. It will help identify the player to those who are not yet familiar with his name but remember his work.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Window cards, 14x21. Heralds. Lobby display photographs, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Slides. "THE WILDCAT OF PARIS"

Universal Presents Priscilla Dean in a Picturesque Story of How the Underworld of Paris Drove the Prussians from Its Gates.

Cast.

Colette .....Priscilla Dean
"The Toad".....Louis Darclay
Jean Rovel.....Edw. Cecil
Cheron .....Lucille Furness

The Story: Colette, a beautiful girl, lived among the Apaches of Paris as the queen of a faction more lawless and desperate than other denizens of the outlaw kingdom. She was loved violently, after the Apache fashion, by "The Toad." Jean Rovel, an artist, was fascinated by the girl's marvelous beauty, and, after some difficulty, persuaded her to pose for him. "The Toad" was crazed with jealousy.

Paris was aflame with war. The crack division of the Kaiser's army was at the gates of the city. The Paris garrison powerless.

The authorities of Paris called upon the Apaches to repel the invaders with some of the wild fury with which they have fought the police. Colette, "Joan of the Apaches," led her outlaws against the Hun. The Kaiser's division showed its heels.

Feature Priscilla Dean as Colette and Edward Cecil as Jean Rovel.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Exciting Story of Love and Intrigue Picturing Present Day Parisienne Life.
Priscilla Dean Star of Exciting Story of the Parisian Underworld.
Life Among Paris Apaches Pictured in Realistic Scenes.
With the Hun at the Gates, Paris Apaches Win the Day.
Thrilling Encounters and Daring Adventures in Exciting Photoplay.

Advertising Angles: Hang most of your effort on the picturesque feature of how the lawbreakers of Paris formed into an army and turned with fury against the invader. Emphasize that it is not a war story, but that it deals with the Parisian underworld and their wonderful drive against the Hun. Tell that it is founded upon fact, but given a gorgeous coloring through the clever story woven into the incident.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six sheets. Stock one-sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays. Slide. Heralds. Players' cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two columns wide. Press book.

Released January 2.

"WHAT LOVE FORGIVES"

World Pictures Presents Barbara Castleton and Johnny Hines in the Fascinating Story of a Composer with a Conscience.

Cast.

Helen Haynes.....Barbara Castleton
Jonathan Hall.....John Hines
David Knox Endicott.....John Bowers
David, the boy.....Bobbie Connelly
David's Mother.....Florence Coventry
Dorothy Deal.....Murlel Ostriche
Arthur Haynes.....Joe Smiley
Dorothy's Girl Friend.....Hazel Coates

Directed by Henry Vekroff.

The Story: David Endicott, a college boy, has been very strictly bred. At college he develops as the writer of songs of unusual merit, and through one of his songs he comes in contact with Dorothy Deal, a musical comedy star. The morning following their meeting Dorothy marries Arthur Haynes, a business man, and leaves the company, leaving a note for David, accusing him of having ruined her. It is a clumsy joke, but it oppresses the puritanical young man. David meets Helen Haynes, who admires his songs. Her father has lost his money, and he suggests a Chautauqua tour. They are married and begin their tour. Dorothy, who had left Haynes when his money vanished, seeks to prey upon David, but is unmasked by Helen.

Feature Barbara Castleton as Helen Haynes and John Hines as Jonathan Hall.

"TREAT 'EM ROUGH"

William Fox Presents Tom Mix in the Story of a Cowboy Who Adopted the Motto of the Tank Corps and Lived Up to It, Adapted from Seltzer's "The Two-Gun Man."

Cast.

Ned Ferguson.....Tom Mix
Mary Radford.....Jane Novak
Ben Radford.....Val Paul
Dave Leviatt.....Charles LeMoyne
John Stafford.....Jack Curtis

Directed by Lynn F. Reynolds.

The Story: Ned Ferguson, a daredevil cowboy, is hired by John Stafford to run down the cattle rustlers who are robbing him. On the way to the ranch he is bitten by a rattlesnake and is nursed by Mary Radford, who is writing a western novel. Dave Leviatt, the ranch foreman, persuades Stafford that Mary's brother, Ben, is the head of the rustlers, and Ned is told to get him; then Ben is told that Dave is after him. They come to an understanding, but Dave shoots Ben from under cover, and Ben is certain that Ned has double-crossed him, and Mary will have nothing to do with Ned even when he saves her life in a cattle stampede, but Ned runs down the rustlers and Mary takes him to be her permanent hero instead of merely putting him in her book.

Feature Tom Mix as Ned Ferguson and Jane Novak as Mary Radford.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Dashing Story of Western Life That Makes Your Blood Hop.
Thrills and Excitement in Daring Screen Stunts and Adventures.
A Biff-Bang Story of a Human Fighting Engine in Full Swing.
The Kind of a Play That Shows Why Americans Are Self Reliant.
Tom Mix, Dare-Devil of the Plains, in Ideal Photoplay.

Advertising Angles: Play up Mix and lay particular stress upon his feat of bulldogging the leading steer in a stampede of two thousand cattle. Work on this angle to make them want to see the feat. Also capitalize the fact that the story is adapted from Seltzer's novel of "The Two-Gun Man."

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets, two styles of each. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).

"EVERY MOTHER'S SON"

William Fox Presents the Distinguished Player, Charlotte Walker, in a Story of World-Wide Appeal.

Cast.

An American Mother....Charlotte Walker
An American Father (45)..Percy Standing
Eldest Son (24).....Edwin Stanley
Second Son (21).....Ray Howard
Third Son (18).....Gareth Hughes
A Daughter of France.....Corone Paynter
Lieut. Von Sterbling...Bernard Thornton

Directed by R. A. Walsh.

The Story: The mother, having given up her eldest sons to the army, and having seen her husband leave her to take a dollar-a-year position, refuses to permit her youngest son to be drafted, until a boatload of castaways, victims of a U-boat raid, are brought to shore near her home, when she gives her best-beloved to the cause of humanity. The eldest son is reported dead and the second wounded. Peace is declared, but it promises to be a sorry Christmas season. But the youngest boy comes back from camp and the wounded lad is returned with an honorable discharge, and to crown her joy the eldest boy comes with the little French girl who helped his escape from the German lines, and whom he has married.

Feature Charlotte Walker as an American mother and Percy Standing as an American father.

Program and Advertising Phrases: The Greatest Story of Mother-Love Ever Visioned on the Screen.
Fulfillment of Victory in the Prophecy of the Blessings of Peace.
There are Heroes "Over Here" as Well as There Were "Over There."
Great Film Drama Glorifying the Patriotic Women of America.
Brilliantly Reflecting the "Mother's Page" in American History.

Advertising Angles: Charlotte Walker is known to most amusement seekers. If necessary identify her through her past successes. For the rest, appeal to every mother's son and their mothers with the human touch of the play.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets, two styles of each. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).

Mrs. Douglas.....Corenne Grant
Kenneth Douglas.....Patrick Calhoun
Jack Baggot.....Stanley Pembroke
Mrs. Baggot.....Ruth Lackaye
Mrs. Preston.....Mabel Hyde

Directed by Howard M. Mitchell.

The Story: Kathleen can remember no other parents than Mrs. Baggot, whose son, Jack, was a thief. Kathleen herself has been taught to pick pockets. She is adopted by the wealthy Mrs. Preston and reared as her own child. She becomes engaged to Howard Murray. Jack comes to her for money for a getaway, and she steals a necklace from her benefactress. The action is overseen by Kenneth Douglas, who tells her that he will recover them. He has held up Jack and obtained the pearls. Lured to Kenneth's apartment by his promise to return the pearls, she kills him in defense of her honor. Murray, who has followed, assumes the crime, but Kathleen confesses to Kenneth's father her reason for her action, and learns to her horror that she has killed her own brother.

Feature Kathleen Clifford as Kathleen Preston and Kenneth Harlan as Howard Murray.

Directed by Colin Campbell.

The Story: Truxton Darnley, a secret service man, ships aboard the Viking, a supply boat to a German raider, which plies out of San Francisco. He is discovered and thrown overboard, landing on a small island, where he is befriended by Lurline. He starts for San Francisco to defeat a plot to blow up a munitions works. Lurline is sold into marriage to Olsen, but escapes by swimming to the steamer on which Darnley is traveling. She is recovered by the spies and forced to work in the Barbary Coast saloon which is the headquarters of the gang, but in the raid which follows Darnley's disclosures she is rescued and found to be the daughter of the owner of the munitions plant.

Feature Juanita Hansen as Lurline and Al Whitman as Truxton Darnley.

"GO WEST, YOUNG MAN"

Goldwyn Presents Tom Moore in the Brisk Story of a Tenderfoot Sheriff Who Was a Boomerang to Those Who Planned to Impose Upon His Greenness.

Cast.

Dick Latham.....Tom Moore
Rosa Crimmins.....Ora Carew
Amos Latham.....Melbourne MacDowell
Hugh Godson.....Jack Richardson
Dandy Jim.....Edward Coxen
Crimmins .....Robert Chandler
Joe .....Hector V. Sarno

Directed by Harry Beaumont.

The Story: Dick Latham has a quarrel with his rich father and determines to seek a living out west. He has not the fare, but he soon learns of the box-car Pullman, and makes the trip in company with a crowd of hoboes. In a far western town he is appointed sheriff by a gang of politicians who seek to use him for their own ends, but Dick meant every word he said when he took the oath of office, and he made the town a model for all the west, incidentally winning the girl.

Feature Tom Moore as Dick Latham and Ora Carew as Rosa Crimmins.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Horace Greeley Laid the Foundation for This Gripping Photoplay Years Ago.
Love, Romance and Adventure Combined in Gripping Photoplay.
When They Said He Couldn't Make Good He Quickly Showed 'Em.
Tenderfoot Conquers a Town and Wins Girl of His Dreams.
How a Silk-Lined Prodigal Son Came Back to a Rough-House Welcome.

Advertising Angles: Play up Tom Moore. He has been a star for a longer period than the third picture of his star series would indicate. But keep away from the "Brown of Harvard" suggestion of the press book. That will not help. On the other hand, there are some good details in the press book to serve as the basis of advertisements. Use these. If you can afford it, have snipes with the title posted the day before your advertising campaign is due to start. Repeat this on cards for distribution. Just use the title and the house name and date, the last in small type well below the 36-point title.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six and and one 24-sheet. Rotogravure one-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Coming and current slides. Advertising and scene cuts. Photographic line-cut copy for ads. Press book. Music one-sheet.
Released December 29.

"OH, JOHNNY!"

Ira M. Lowry Presents Louis Bennison in His Original Role in a Famous Stage Success.

Cast.

Johnny Burke.....Louis Bennison
John Bryson.....Alphonse Ethier
Charlie Romero.....Edward Roseman
Van Pelt Butler.....John Dale Murphy
Earl of Barncastle.....Frank Goldsmith Adele Butler.....Virginia Lee

Directed by Ira M. Lowry.

The Story: Johnny Burke comes east to visit his ward, Adele Butler, who has been taken up by eastern relatives when they find that she has money. They are merely exploiting the girl to profit by her riches, and when Johnny breezes in they find him very much in the way. Even Adele is led to think his manner too pronounced to be acceptable to her new eastern standards, but when he shows her that she is being robbed right and left by her supposed benefactors, her sentiments undergo a change and Johnny goes marching home with his bride upon his arm.

Feature Louis Bennison as Johnny Burke and Virginia Lee as Adele Butler.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Photoplay Shows How a Smiling Gun-Man Won a Fortune and a Bride.
Adventure Coupled with the Romance of a Lost Mine and Found Heart.
When They Dared Him to Start Something He Went On and Finished It.
Western Bravery and Eastern Cunning Joined in Photoplay Romance.
Western Daring Meets Eastern Scheming, and the Best Man Wins.

Advertising Angles: Bennison is a new star. Introduce him as the leading player of the stage version of this story and tell that he has played in the leading cities the past two years. Establish his claim to stellar honors. Then draw on the angle of the breezy westerner who happens upon a rather snobbish colony of eastern society people and suggest what is likely to happen. You can pick up good ideas from the Goldwyn press sheet. Use it carefully.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six and one 24-sheet. Rotogravure one-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Coming and current slides. Advertising and scene cuts. Photographic line-cut copy for ads. Press book. Music one-sheet.

Released December 22 by Goldwyn.

"THE VIRGINIAN"

Jesse L. Lasky Presents Dustin Farnum in a Reissued Version of One of the Most lasting of the "best sellers."

Cast

The Virginian.....Dustin Farnum
Molly Wood, a teacher..Winifred Kingston
Trampas, a rustler.....Billy Elmer
Mr. Ogden.....Monroe Salisbury
Mrs. Ogden.....Anita King
Uncle Hughy.....Sydney Deane
Lyn McLean.....Hosea Steelman

The Story: The story of the dashing cowboy who takes his name from his native state is almost too well known to need retelling. How he wins the admiration of the new school mistress, yet cannot win her hand; how he avenges the insults offered her by Trampas, the local bully; how he runs down the rustlers, repels an Indian attack, is left for dead and is nursed back to life to take final vengeance upon Trampas, are all incidents familiar to every reader of books, and the picture situations are even more vital than Wister's famous story.

Feature Dustin Farnum as the Virginian and Winifred Kingston as Molly Wood.

Famous "Best Seller" and Stage and Screen Hit Now Revived.
Great American Story Enacted by Famous Star of Stage and Screen.
Owen Wister's Great Novel Screened by Famous Star and Cast.
Remind You to "Smile When You Call Me That Name."

Advertising Angles: Offer this reissue as one of the stories that will live, and link star and title in all your advertising. The book is so well known and the play made such a favorable impression on its first showing that you need only to give full publicity to its new presentation. Straight advertising, plus posters, will carry you through.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising lay-out mats. Slides. Press book.

Released December 29.

"THE SPENDER"

Metro Presents Bert Lytell in a Spirited Version of Frederick Orin Bartlett's Saturday Evening Post Story.

Cast.

Dick Bisbee.....Bert Lytell
T. W. Bisbee.....Thomas Jefferson
Elmer Robbins.....Clarence Burton
Stetson .....William V. Mong
Helen Stetson.....Mary Anderson

Directed by Charles Swickard.

The Story: Dick Bisbee is the nephew of T. W. Bisbee, a millionaire factory owner. Through the enmity of a manager, he loses his position. Stetson, known as Old Faithful, feels sorry for Dick and persuades him to make his home with him while he finds employment. When Dick sees Helen Stetson, he is only too glad to accept the invitation. T. W. meanwhile finds that there are no pockets in his shroud and accepts Dick's advice before his own heir. He abandons his misely habit of thought and spends his money in having a good time under Dick's guidance, finding in the love of Dick for Helen a romance that replaces the love he never himself knew.

Feature Bert Lytell as Dick Bisbee and Mary Anderson as Helen Stetson.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Bert Lytell Presents a Comedy-Drama Radiating Happiness and Good Will.
A Picture That Reflects the Joy of Living.
How a Stony-Hearted Miser Was Changed Into a Philanthrophist.
Screen Version of Popular Story from Saturday Evening Post.
Speed and Ginger in Unfolding Delight of Happy Comedy-Drama.

Advertising Angles: After the star work on the angle of the tightwad who decided to become his own heir. Bear down hard on this in your press work and advertising, and also use the fact that this is a Post story. For a novelty, get a blank will form and insert T. W. Bisbee's name as devising to "myself" his fortune. Letter it—"If we had more wills like this, what would lawyers do for a living?"

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six sheets. Press sheet. Filler sheet. Ten-minute novel. Slide. Heralds. Lobby displays, 8x10 sepia, 11x14 sepia, 22x28 colored. Cuts.
Released January 6.

"LITTLE MISS HOOVER"

For a full treatment of this Paramount story see the issue for December 28, in which this release is treated at length.

"ALL OF A SUDDEN NORMA"

The Exhibitors' Mutual Distribution Corporation Presents Bessie Barriscale in the Story of a Girl of Quick Decisions.

Cast.

Hamilton Brisbane.....Joseph Dowling
Norma Brisbane.....Bessie Barriscale
Cuthbert Van Zelt.....Albert Colby
Oliver Garret.....R. Henry Grey
Duke of Duffield.....Frank Leigh
Emerson Trent.....Melbourne MacDowell

Directed by Howard Hickman.

The Story: Norma Brisbane is thrown upon her own resources by the death of her father, and she proceeds to go into "the business of making money." That's about her idea of business, and she goes into it with a vengeance. She provides herself with a fictitious husband, but later changes him for a real one and, as he happens to be the nephew of a millionaire, she goes out of business again.

Feature Bessie Barriscale as Norma Brisbane and R. Henry Grey as Oliver Garret.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Speedy Story of a Girl Who Worked Fast and Always Delivered the Goods.
How a Pretty Girl Turned Sleep-Walking to a Profit.
Impulsive Girl Wends Her Way to Happiness Through Adventure.
Bessie Barriscale Returns in One of Her Happiest Characterizations.
Girl of Impulse Turns Crook to Win the Award of Happiness.

Advertising Angles: Work on the star's popularity for all it will bring you. For the rest use the angle of the girl who went into the business of making money, and hammer on that in all its aspects, but be careful not to suggest that she took the easiest way. Make it clear that she used her wits. Work such lines as "She made $20,000 betting an English lord his bridal jewels were paste, because she knew. She had stolen them and had put them back."

Advertising Aids: One each one, three and six sheets. Banner unmounted. One, two and three column cuts and mats. Lobby displays, 11x14, 22x28. Slides. Press sheet.
Released January 5.

"SHE HIRED A HUSBAND"

Bluebird Presents Priscilla Dean in the Vivid Story of a Girl Whose Prevailing Trait was Perversity.

Cast.

Daphne Trowbridge.....Priscilla Dean
Mrs. Trowbridge.....Marian Skinner
Mr. Trowbridge.....Frederick Vroom
Tom Dunstan.....Pat O'Malley
Colonel Dunstan.....F. A. Turner
Gerald Grant.....Charles Gerrard
Le Grand.....Sam Appell
Jerry Grogan.....Harry Todd

Directed by Jack Dillon.

The Story: Daphne's specialty is doing the things she should not and ignoring all that she should do. When her aunt trics to marry her off, she refuses the man she loves just because everyone is so delighted that she is going to marry him. She becomes engaged to a man everyone slanders, but when she learns that the slander was merely a ruse to force her into a marriage she rebels again and hires a woodsman, who happens to be the first man she meets, to go through a ceremony with her and, armed with the marriage certificate, she proudly marches in on the wedding party. She doesn't know that the man she married is the first man she refused and that he has been in the woods looking after some timber interests, but Tom kidnaps her, and in the end she is happy with her hired husband.

Feature Priscilla Dean as Daphne Trowbridge and Pat O'Malley as Tom Dunstan.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Strangely Interesting Story Screened in Thrilling Details.
Perverse Girl Hired a Husband Rather Than Marry the Man She Loved.
The Strange Nature of Woman Shown to Be Past Comprehension.
Every Knock Was a Boost With This Girl and Dan Cupid.
Strange Adventures of a Willful Girl Who Had Her Own Way.

Advertising Angles: Pick up the angle of the chance marriage, and work on that for your main appeal. Ask the women if they would marry the first man they met. Tell them to try the experiment some day by going on the strect and seeing whom they meet first, and then come on down to your theatre and see how one marriage turned out.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six sheets. Stock one sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays. Slide. Heralds. Players' cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two columns wide. Press book.
Released December 16.

"THE RACING STRAIN"

Goldwyn Presents Mae Marsh in a Romance of Thrills Laid in Kentucky and Saratoga.

Cast.

Lucille Cameron.....Mae Marsh
Gregory Haines.....Clarence Oliver
Jim De Luce.....Clifford Bruce
Colonel Cameron.....W. T. Carleton
Schuyler.....Edwin Sturgis
Johnny Tweed.....Tammany Young

Directed by Emmett J. Flynn.

The Story: Lucille Cameron, a plucky girl of Kentucky, learns that her father, Colonel Cameron, is close to financial ruin because of his friendship for and his dealings with "Big Jim" De Luce, a New York horseman and wildcat stock promoter.

Once the owner of a big racing stable, a filly, Southern Pride, is all that is left him. There is a heavy mortgage long overdue on the Cameron estate, and the Camerons wonder why no attempt is made at foreclosure. At a Red Cross lawn fete Lucille gives she meets Lieutenant Gregory Haines, just returned, wounded, from France. Their acquaintance soon ripens into love, to the chagrin of "Big Jim," who has annoyed Lucille with his attentions. The resultant drama is stirring and well worked out.

Feature Mae Marsh as Lucille Cameron and Clarence Oliver as Gregory Haines.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Thrilling Photoplay of Romance and Revenge Settled at the Race Track.
See the Exciting Racing Scene Filmed During a Saratoga Classic.
A Love Story and a Love Race for Fame and Fortune.
Engaging Love Story Fresh and Winsome as Spring Breezes.
The Screen's "Best Bet" Is Mae Marsh in "The Racing Strain."

Advertising Angles: In addition to working on Miss Marsh's name, appeal with the love for horses that is inherent in most persons. Tell that this is the story of Kentucky, home of the best racing strains. You can also make capital of the fact that some of the scenes are laid at Saratoga, where the most fashionable race meet in America is held. For lobby work use horse fittings, or set up a bookmaker who distributes circulars instead of betting tickets. There is plenty of chance here for local color. Use it as freely as your appropriation permits.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six and one 24-sheet. Rotogravure one-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Coming and current slides. Advertising and scene cuts. Photographic line-cut copy for ads. Press book. Music one-sheet.

Released December 22.

"THE SPREADING EVIL"

James Keane Presents an Intensely Dramatic Story of a Drug Hoarder Who Suffered for His Sins Against Humanity.

Cast.

Emil Hartsell.....Howard Davies
Karl Hartsell.....Leo Pierson
Lennon Morrett.....Carlyn Wagner
Alice Kellar.....Irene Wylie
Dr. Carey.....Wm. A. Hackett
Jules Le Moyne.....G. B. Williams
Adolph Kellar.....Joseph Clancy

Directed by James Keane.

The Story: Through the influence of Dr. Carey, an American blood specialist, an American philanthropist is persuaded to finance the researches of Emil Hartseli, a German chemist, who is searching for a specific for social disease. In return Hartsell pledges himself to give the formula to the world. Instead, the death of his benefactor causes him to break his pledge and commercialize the remedy. His son, Karl, is sent to America to represent his father's interests there. The outbreak of the war shuts off the supplies from Germany and the remaining quantity of the specific sells for fabulous sums. Karl, on the eve of his marriage, is induced to go out for "one more good time," and contracts the disease. The supply of the drug is exhausted and Dr. Carey goes to Holland and there meets Hartsell, telling him of the danger which confronts his son. Hartsell suspects a trap to procure the formula and himself comes to America in a submarine, which is torpedoed by the coast patrol, and the unfortunate Karl, deprived of his last hope, walks into the sea which has already claimed his father.

Feature Howard Davies as Emil Hartsell and Leo Pierson as Karl Hartsell.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Social Problem of the World War and Hunnish Greed and Lust for Gold.
Sociological Problem Play of Vast Importance Carries Great Lesson.
Pictorial Warning to Heedless Humanity Threatened with Extinction.
How a German Drug Monopolist Sought to Exterminate a Race.
Great Lesson in Morality and Sociology Taught in Gripping Drama.

Advertising Angles: Be careful in your advertising not to trespass the bounds of good taste. Work through the local or county medical society, through welfare workers and others who are in a position to forward your propaganda. It would be a good plan to announce that this story will not interest the kiddies and that therefore they will not be permitted to attend.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, one three-sheet, two six-sheets, one twenty-four-sheet. Advertising electros, one four-column cut, four two-columns, two three-columns, four one-column cuts. Oil paintings for lobby, upright, two 40x60, two 30x40; flat, two 30x40. Heralds. Set of ten 11x14 photographs and set of ten 8x10 rotogravures. Squeegees for newspaper cuts. Story cuts, four two-columns and four one-columns. Press matter. Slides. Photographic reproductions of letters of indorsement.

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good clean entertainment.
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

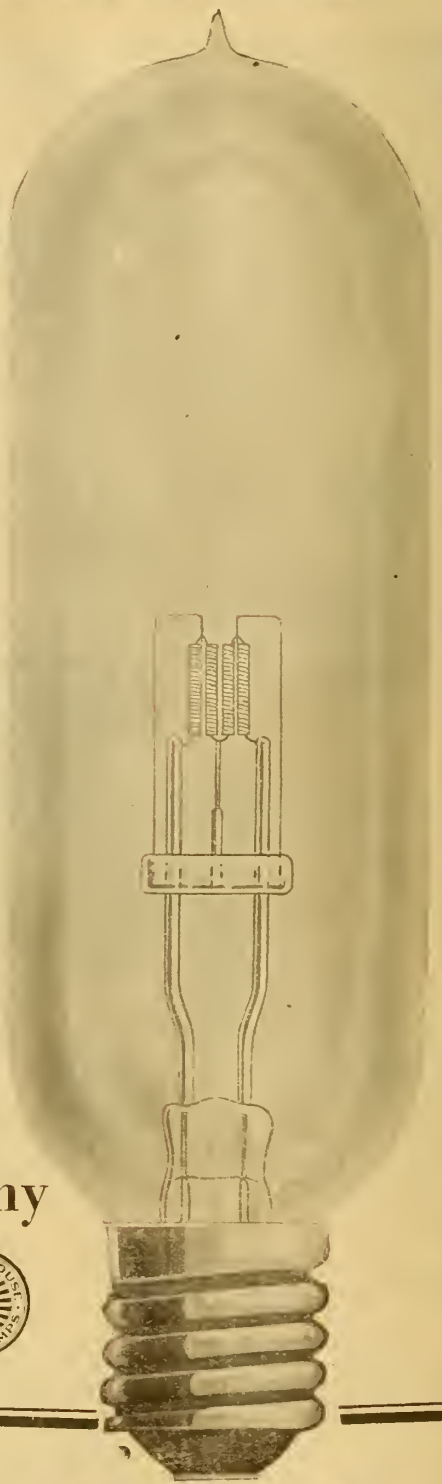
Better Pictures for Less Money



Perfect projection with alternating current as well as direct current can be obtained by using the WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP for motion picture projection.

The light is absolutely steady, and produces a clear, bright picture which is more pleasing to the eyes of the audience than the hard, chalky white glare of the arc light.

Furthermore, the WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP may be operated on one-quarter to one-half the current required by an arc for equivalent results.

This lamp is the ideal light source for motion picture machines in the small and average theatre, and also in churches, schools, clubs and auditoriums.

Write for descriptive matter showing the many advantages of these lamps and explaining how they can be applied to your present equipment.

"Power's faculty for getting there under all conditions, wins me every time.

"Look!

"Only a few weeks ago, one of the divisions of the Red Cross engaged in war work on the Pacific coast, wanted a projector that would give a 20 x 24 picture at a 172 foot throw. They were told Power's couldn't 'deliver'; but after getting some dope from the studios they DID buy a Power's and it DID come through in great shape.

"Do you know that out on the Pacific coast where the big studios are, a recent canvass of them was taken and it was found that out of 50 machines in use 40 OF THEM WERE POWER'S?

"These studios must have the best to demonstrate their pictures. They use Power's because

Another Great Zane Grey Picture

GOLDWYN announces its exclusive rights to the American and foreign distribution of another big "punch" drama by the tremendously popular author of "The Light of Western Stars," "Riders of the Purple Sage," "The Great U. P. Trail," a production which at its New York Strand pre-release was hailed as "the strongest action drama of the year."

We announce for release nationally on January 19, and ready now for booking in all Goldwyn offices from Zane Grey's famous novel that has had an American sale alone in excess of 700,000 copies.

"This is the best picture shown at the Strand for months," said the N. Y. Mail. "Has the so-called super-productions beaten a mile, said the N. Y. Review.

"Here is a picture with few screen equals," was the unusual comment of the N. Y. Sun. And the N. Y. Herald said: "Crowded houses at the Strand have thoroughly enjoyed this big and well-told story."

Western Dramas Win Patrons

Red blooded stories of the open spaces, God's Great Out-of-Doors, with its wonderful scenery; its rugged men, sometimes lawless, but always human; its women, free and untrammeled by the conventions of society; with the dramatic action of feudist battles, where men settle their disputes with rope or gun. These thrilling features make the heart throb with an answering call to the whisper of the wilds.

Louisa M. Alcott's Famous Story "WOMEN"

HOW MUCH INFLUENCE HAVE WOMEN UPON YOUR BOX OFFICE?

IF you don't please the women, young and old, you don't prosper. Right?

Louisa M. Alcott's novel, "Little Women," is the story that has been read by more women than any other book ever published.

When William A. Brady made it into a play it was a tremendous success. If it played in your city you know that.

Now it is a moving picture. Its appeal to women drew big business to the Strand Theatre in New York City in the midst of the influenza epidemic.

It has been tested and has made good, as a book, as a play and now as a moving picture.

Special exploitation—advertising and direct by mail circularization—is helping to build new patronage for the exhibitor who shows "Little Women."

WHAT THE CRITICS SAY!

Miss Kenyon certainly looked like a million in a very pleasing role.—Wid's.

Here is a photoplay to satisfy all concerned—the exhibitor because his patrons will be pleased, and theatregoers because they are given the type of smashing, dashing Western life that screens like red-blooded entertainment—and is just that.—W. K. HILL in Moving Picture World.

Replete with dramatic incidents, it is also a production of scenic splendor. Some of the "shots" remind one of Robert Bruce's scenic studies.—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

A picture that remains interesting from beginning to end. The story has a number of original twists which give the film a distinctive flavor.—PETER MILNE in Motion Picture News.

It is particularly gratifying to observe the care with which the picture has been made. It is far superior to the average photoplay.—HELEN POLLOCK in The Morning Telegraph.

One of the best pictures seen in some time; a feature above the ordinary.—Variety.

"The Adventure Shop"

Second CORINNE GRIFFITH Release of the VITAGRAPH STAR SERIES

NO screen artiste has achieved more fame as a delineator of the society girl type than Corinne Griffith. And in "The Adventure Shop" she is given the role of a girl bored with the humdrum social routine and eager to "start something"—which she does.

The very maximum of action is found in this whimsical comedy-drama, now causing ripples of laughter, now wavering on the very brink of what seems to be tragedy. All in all, it is one of the most unusual and different productions released in 1918.

Here is a photoplay that everyone will like; its subtleties will find response in the minds of the seasoned patrons, and even the littlest of children will find joy in its piled-up action and incident and suspense.

CAN you imagine popular Tom Moore playing the role of a soft, idle waster who is forced out of his home by his angry father? Can you picture him as a dishwasher in a Western saloon-restaurant; arriving in a "Bad Town" just as it is being "shot up" by Western bad men? Can you picture Tom Moore's surprise as well as your own at seeing him elected Sheriff to capture a noted outlaw, arresting his own father and winning the girl of his heart? THE test of success in any business is contract orders. Accustomed as Goldwyn is to volume of business with the best exhibitors of the nation, we confess our surprise not over the tremendous number of incoming contracts for The Ford Educational Weekly under Goldwyn distribution but at the rapidity with which exhibitors are being signed.

The adjacent reproductions of telegrams from several Goldwyn offices evidences the instant demand for the most powerful, vital, carefully-prepared and costly educational production in the entire motion picture industry.

Behind The Ford Educational Weekly are the vast physical and financial resources of Henry Ford; the imagination of Henry Ford; the same persistent, restless energies that have made Henry Ford the mightiest industrial leader of our generation.

As a preliminary announcement of bookings under contract, Goldwyn is pleased to announce the signing of contracts for The Ford Educational Weekly with every Marcus Loew theatre in Greater New York— representing the largest volume of public patronage annually and the greatest daily average of patronage done by any one amusement ownership in the entire industry. Have you signed a contract for your theatre.

"CLEAN"

THE VERDICT OF ALL CRITICS

A MESSAGE TO ALL HUMANITY

Presented in a story of youth and love wherein the exposition of a father's transgressions depicts the evils that threaten our future race unless we act now and quickly.

Read What the New York Critics Think Of It

N. Y. Times
"The producer has excluded anything that might be repulsive. The subject should be driven home with hammer blows of reality."

N. Y. Tribune
"The subject was brought before the public when 'Damaged Goods' was put on the screen."

N. Y. Telegraph
(Louella O. Parsons)
"'The Scarlet Trail' is a story founded on social hygiene, and much like 'Damaged Goods,' though it is very much better done than the picturization of Brieuz's play."

N. Y. Evg. Telegram
"It is a warning fashioned somewhat after 'Damaged Goods,' in that it advances the dangers of contamination and is propaganda for the leading of pure lives."

N. Y. American
"A very frank statement of fact with regard to the evils that follow unclean living.
"It can be seen to profit by old and young alike —its message is to all humanity."

N. Y. Evg. Journal
"They say children never listen to advice! 'The Scarlet Trail' shows to the brain through the eye that which the tongue is ashamed to tell."

N. Y. Herald
"Discloses the suffering incurred by youthful indiscretion, and aims at purity among young men and women for the welfare of the coming race."

M. P. News
"It's a pertinent message—the effects of indiscretion between the sexes. Its moral lesson is driven home without the slightest offensiveness. It has been produced clean."

Wid's Daily
"'The Scarlet Trail' is free from the nauseating details apt to accompany the presentation of a subject of the kind. It should be beneficial, in that it points a warning to youth and never by any inference makes vice attractive.

Democracy Abroad

When President Wilson went abroad Fox Pictures went with him on the George Washington.

Though an American President was a stranger in Paris, Fox Pictures were well known there.

They had preceded the Executive to Europe by three years--had long been favorites in London and the capitals of the Continent.

No steamship carrying express leaves the port of New York, whether bound for Africa, South America, Asia, or the remotest nooks and corners where men dwell, that does not bear a consignment of Fox Pictures.

The people of the whole wide world have placed the stamp of their approval on the Fox Idea.

Universal appeal is the predominating characteristic of Fox Pictures.

They are the great international pictures—the exponents of that universal democracy to which the hearts of men everywhere respond.

Gentlemen:

I screened the first Anita Stewart production a few days ago, and while I had heard from Mr. Saxe and others that this picture would be something better than the usual run of features, I got the surprise of my life. It is one of the best motion picture productions I have ever had the pleasure of screening, and I assure you that I am going to make a special effort to see that it properly exploited in Detroit as well as in the balance of the territory.

The First National Exhibitors' Circuit is to be congratulated in having secured the happy combination of Anita Stewart and Loane Tucker. If Mr. Mayer continues to supply her with vehicles such as "Virtuous Wives", there is no question but that she will stand among the foremost stars in the country in very short order.

Yours very truly,

UNDER FOUR FLAGS

Released January 6

A prominent exhibitor calls "Under Four Flags" "a Victory picture of America and the Allies."

According to this exhibitor, the people's attitude today is this: We are no longer combatants, but victors—and we want to see just how we won that war, anyway!

"Under Four Flags" shows the terrific battle scenes that brought the World War to an end at the "eleventh hour" on November 11th, last.

Put on this "fact" picture about the war and regard the public as victors, not combatants, in giving them information about the picture.

Place your order for "Under Four Flags" now. The rental has been figured on a basis that permits of showing at regular admission prices.

Taylor of Newburg Learns He Must Feature Specials in a New Way Every Time They're Shown

Illustrations by Brinkerhoff

LONG distance, please!" A wait of less than a minute, then —— "Long distance? This is Murray Hill 1628—Mr. Clark calling. I want to talk with F. M. Taylor, manager of the Academy of Music at Newburgh, New York. Will you hurry the call, please?"

And while the long distance operator "put up" the lines, one after the other, which could connect her party in New York with the theatre manager in Newburgh, that individual sat comfortably in a swivel chair at his office desk, discussing with a friendly competitor a typical exhibitor problem, unaware that the solution of the very question they were arguing was speeding northward on the wings of electricity.

"This special feature thing is all right," Taylor declared to his fellow exhibitor, "but it doesn't happen often enough. Here I am, in a city of twenty-seven thousand people, with a theatre seating fifteen hundred. The operating cost is high, all things considered, and I've either got to get top prices on admissions or play to almost twice the patronage necessary a year ago to make expenses and show a reasonable profit."

Willing to Pay for Real Specials.

"One special every ten days or two weeks is about the best a chap can hope for as a year's average," replied his visitor. "I've got nine hundred seats, and I'm up against pretty much the same problem that you have."

"Sure," continued the Academy executive. "When I play a real special I can fill the house about three times a day, at advanced prices. Almost always, on a special, I make enough profit over all expenses to give me a good balance on the week I play it. But other weeks I drop back. Wish there were more specials. People in Newburgh are willing to pay the advanced admissions if they can get their money's worth."

Just then the telephone on the desk rang sharply.

"Hello," called Taylor, wondering whether the advertising department of the Newburgh News was going to ask for the day's change of copy—something he had gone early to the office to prepare, only to be delayed by the visit from his competitor. "Yes, this is Mr. Taylor. Who's calling? Clark of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit exchange in New York. Oh, yes, hello, Clark. What's the matter?"

Silence in Taylor's office for fully a minute, while the visiting exhibitor wondered whether his show for the day had arrived. Suddenly Taylor spoke:

"That's impossible, Clark. You ought to know this town well enough not to make any foolish proposition like that. How the devil can I play one picture here for a total of ten days, at the price you ask, without mortgaging the house. You're wasting toll charges. What town? Mount Vernon? You say the Westchester of Mount Vernon is going to repeat three times? Feinblatt will starve to death. I don't care how good it is, no town the size of Mount Vernon or Newburgh can stand eight or ten days on any picture."

When Taylor Took a Chance.

There was another period of silence in Taylor's office, continuing for several minutes. Then he said: "All right, Clark. I'll take you up on that offer. I can't lose more than two days' business, and it'll answer the question we've just been discussing here. Mail up the contract. I'll sign it. Good-bye."

"Well, I'm a damned fool," Taylor explained to his visitor, as he swung about in his chair. "Clark of the New York First National office is going to book that second Chaplin comedy, 'Shoulder Arms,' to me for a total of ten days, with protection, I to select the first run and repeat dates, to be played within a certain time."

"You're going to play 'Shoulder Arms' to a total of ten days?" queried his competitor, astonishment written large on his face. "You'll lose money, Taylor. The town might stand four, or, at a stretch, six days on a good feature, but there are not enough people here to make it pay for ten days. Believe me, I wouldn't sign up on a proposition like that."

"Well, I have," snapped Taylor, somewhat irritated by a criticism he felt was justified. "We've just been chewing about the lack of specials. Clark said just now that other exhibitors in the territory are doing bigger business on repeats than they do on the original runs. Maybe that's the answer to the lack of a sufficient number of big specials to give us an average of one a week. In any event, I'm going to try it out."

Taylor neglected to add that he was to pay $75 a day for "Shoulder Arms" on the basis of a minimum of ten days, with protection.

Taylor No Ordinary Showman.

Now F. M. Taylor is much more than ordinarily capable as a showman. He knows human nature, and above all else, he is thoroughly acquainted with the Achilles' heel of his public, and rarely misses striking exactly the right spot to get a response. So, with a ten days' contract on the way to him, he steadfastly stuck to his purpose, and began to figure out a schedule for "Shoulder Arms" which would not conflict with other bookings previously made. He considers a cancellation a reflection on his good judgment.

His choice of dates for the first run fixed upon December 3 and 4, which would give him a Tuesday—just an average show day in Newburgh—and a Wednesday, when business usually is pretty good. He decided that the comedy would constitute the feature of his program for every one of the ten days he was to show it. So he consulted the Moving Picture World release schedules, and selected a two reel subject, an educational and a novelty release, giving him a total of seven reels.

Designs Five Campaigns.

Then he began to plan his local advertising and publicity campaign. If he was going to see this test case through to success it would require some unusual form of local appeal. The lobby display received first consideration. Two days later he received a press sheet, and with this as a guide to available materials, he started the actual work of "building his show." He had previously decided to play each return engagement for two days, making five repeats. To duplicate his advertising for the first run as the public appeal on the repeat showings he felt would be impractical and, to a certain extent, monotonous, so he sketched out five different styles of campaign, getting as much variation as possible into them. His experience as an exhibitor had long since taught him that no matter how big or how appealing a production may be, it has to be 'sold' to the public if the theatre owner is to receive a maximum return from it. And Taylor believes in advertising as sincerely as President Wilson believes in democracy.

His first campaign began on the Tuesday preceding December 3. It opened with nominal sized space in the newspapers, which was supported by a generous use of twenty-four-sheet and six-sheet stands throughout the town. A cut-out figure of Chaplin as a doughboy, plus a display of the four-colored lobby card cartoons, made up the "front" on "Shoulder Arms" for three days. Toward the end of the week Taylor increased the size of his newspaper ads; ordered special heralds distributed at every performance, and added one-sheets and three-sheets to the lobby. As a further effort to reach out he placed fifty-five window display cards in the stores of prominent merchants.

Figured on Making 'Em Talk.

"I felt certain," he said, "that the success of my repeat engagements would depend, to a certain extent, upon the number of people who patronized the Academy on the first two days I ran the picture. If I could produce a capacity business it would go a long way toward popularizing the production. These people would talk, and that meant more business."

The comedy opened on December 3, and when Taylor checked up the box office on Wednesday night and totaled the receipts for two days he found that at advances which brought his admission prices up to 15 and 25 cents he had taken in a total of $1,280. This would pay the service cost of $750 for the ten days' contract, leaving receipts for the remaining eight days free of rental charges. After deducting house overhead for two days, he had a net profit on the first run of approximately $180.

He was more interested, however, in the number of patrons for the two days than he was in the net profits.

The first repeat was booked for December 16 and 17, which would bring the opening day on a Monday—the poorest business day of the week, with Tuesday a close second. There was hard-headed common sense in this. Taylor felt certain that he would do at least 75 per cent. of the business on the first run, and he figured that in this particular case the day or days of the week would have little effect.

First Repeat Brings a Surprise.

"But my figuring was wrong," he explained. "The days seemed to have a lot to do with the business on December 16 and 17. Remember, my advertising for this first repeat had been less than it was on the opening run. I talked chiefly about the number of patrons who paid admissions to the Academy on December 3 and 4. I wrote ad copy describing the way they pounded the floor, the way they laughed and roared, how the orchestra music was absolutely inaudible for three and four minutes at a stretch because of the tumult. Of course, I used practically the same posters in the lobby, the same pictorial window cards, and the six-sheet and twenty-four sheet stands throughout the town. I am saving the stronger styles of advertising for the later repeat dates.

"I checked up on Tuesday night, December 17, and discovered that we had done fifteen per cent. more on the second showing that we had on the first. And I didn't see among the patrons but a few of those who had attended the first run showing. They will come back for the third run, though, I am pretty sure."

"What kind of advertising will you do on your third, fourth and fifth runs?" he was asked.

"I'll probably use quarter page space for the third run, backing it up with cut-out figures of Chaplin for window displays, to supplant the cards which I have now used twice. For the fourth run I am going to arrange, if I can, to give a special showing for the benefit of the discharged soldiers who have returned home, with as many veterans of the Civil War or Spanish-American War as I can get together to act as an escort of honor. I have been thinking, too, of building a lobby display in imitation of a trench. My newspaper advertising will be about equal with what I shall do on the third showing. For the fifth and last run, I am planning to use at least a dozen cut-out figures of Chaplin, embellished with real hardware. These I shall try to 'plant' in store windows, and at points where traffic is particularly heavy. If I can, I want to duplicate the lobby trench in at least one big store window."

Taylor to Profit by his Experience.

"And what about your opinion, based on your experience thus far with repeat engagements on what you call big special attractions, of the practicability of re-runs of pictures that win local popularity at their first showings?"

"The results of my second showing of

After the First Two Days' Run—Rental Earned for Remaining Eight Days and $180 to the Good.

the Chaplin comedy answers that. I am convinced now that I have played other big, successful productions in the past to big business for two or three day runs, and then have returned to the ordinary receipts for two or three weeks or longer, waiting for another big special to come along, when I could have played a repeat engagement, and made as much, if not more than I did on the first run.

"But there is this to remember about a return showing. As an exhibitor I am satisfied that it is profitable, and, in fact, necessary, to change the style and form of advertising on a second showing if I am to benefit to the limit of local possibilities. Just to rebook an attraction because it made money for me the first time is not enough. It has to be sold just as thoroughly and earnestly the second, third, fourth or fifth time as it is the first time.

"Any big special attraction has several angles of appeal and interest which permit a variation in the advertising on return dates.

"Predicated on my recent experience, it is my opinion that repeat dates on successful pictures is the solution to the lack of sufficient big specials for an average of one a week. But I am not forgetting that I have to 'sell' my public on the repeat dates instead of depending entirely upon the popularity created by the picture during its initial run."

Indianapolis Film Man Indicted for Manslaughter

AN echo of the disastrous Colfax building fire, at Indianapolis, on April 19, 1917, in which six persons lost their lives, will be heard on Dec. 30, when Louis Sereinsky, formerly head of the Oxon Chemical Company, a motion picture film renovating concern, which occupied the basement of the building, is placed on trial for manslaughter. The fire was said to have started among a quantity of motion picture films in the basement.

The first count of the indictment charges Sereinsky, as a tenant of the building, with using and assisting in its use for unlawful purposes, and the second count charges him with keeping and storing dangerous, inflammable and explosive materials in the building. The materials mentioned were celluloid and films for motion picture purposes.

At a recent hearing, at which a motion to quash the indictment against Sereinsky was overruled, Charles M. Wiltsie, his attorney, argued that the dangerous properties of celluloid and film as explosives never have been recognized in law and that the indictment did not state the charges against the defendant with sufficient certainty. It was the contention of Alvah J. Rucker, prosecuting attorney, that the dangerous character of the materials has become sufficiently well known in recent years to warrant the indictment.

It was as a result of the Colfax building fire that drastic legislation was passed by the Indianapolis city council governing the storage, handling and transportation of motion picture films.

GENUINE ECONOMY IS IN WASTE SAVING

But Not in Cheaper Pictures, Says Essanay Chief—Coming Year Will Bring Prosperity

WHILE the past year has proved more or less unsatisfactory to the motion picture industry, yet in no way has it been fatal, and I am convinced that the trade as a whole will quickly recover from any ill-effects suffered. In my estimation the coming year will bring with it a new prosperity.

The war and a national epidemic added their share of troubles to internal conditions that were in themselves in a transitory stage. But the motion picture industry was not the only one to suffer from the external causes, and I am sure that this was borne with a complete understanding and a patriotic zeal by all producers, distributors and exhibitors. It would not be seemly for us to complain at any slackening of business, with our boys fighting in France, and I believe that any sacrifices that were entailed by those in the motion picture business were cheerfully accepted.

Now that the war is over, however, I believe that the new year will open up with an excellent prospect for all concerns operating on a sound business basis. There has been no lessening in the demand of the public for good pictures, and I do not believe that there ever will be. The motion picture business is a real and distinct art, just as is that of the stage, and has come to stay for all time.

Not that I think that there will not be many changes in the system of producing and distributing pictures. These changes have been going on all the time and now are still more rapidly formulating. By changes I mean the getting away from the more or less lax system of former years and down to solid business principles. The motion picture business developed so rapidly that the conditions that surrounded it were in many ways unavoidable.

Now that competition has become so keen and public taste more critical, an economy in operation must eventualize. I do not mean economy in the sense of cheaper pictures; rather the opposite. Pictures must be better and fewer. The market has been flooded with mediocre or inferior pictures, and I do not believe there will be any place for these in the future. The cost of producing such pictures can be eliminated entirely.

Just as much will be spent in the making of good pictures as ever, and possibly more, but not wasted. Every manufacturer knows that there have been scores of little leakages in their studios, but these are gradually being wiped out.

This economy on broad lines will come through more carefully developed plans in all work of production, a concentration of distributing system, and a centralization of processing work.

The need for a centralized shipping point has long been recognized. Chicago is a terminal point for every railroad of importance in the country, and what is more natural than that the distribution of positive prints should be made from that city. This opens the possibility of doing away with much of the delay and excessive cost of shipping due to congested traffic and high express rates.

Also has there been a great need for uniform and equable processing of all parts of the film. Under the old methods of processing in short lengths various parts of a reel were developed unequally, the development being dependent on the judgment of the human eye of more than one person, which was bound to vary. Under the new method of developing film in one-thousand-foot lengths all variance is done away with.

And when the new method of developing not only produces a higher quality of positive prints, but at the same time actually reduces the cost by a very substantial amount, it is bound to be adopted.

But in all phases of the industry economy is setting in, although as I have stated it is an economy by eliminating waste and not at all through the cheapening of pictures.

Photographers Have Made Complete Record of War

LIEUT. LEON H. CAVERLY, formerly a star cameraman on the staff of Gaumont News Service, was one of the first motion picture photographers to volunteer his services. He was attached to the Signal Corps, and was the first American cinematographer to be sent to France. In an interesting letter to Pell Mitchell, editor of the Gaumont News and Graphic, Lieutenant Caverly, writing from Belgium, says:

"During my stay over here I have seen the photo unit grow from a few men to a department having nearly five hundred men engaged in the work of recording Uncle Sam's share in the world's war. It has all been a great experience to me, besides the satisfaction of having in a very small way done my bit, so I am not sorry I came over. During the drive at St. Mihiel I lost my assistant still photographer, he being the first to be killed within the photo unit. Since then one other was blown to atoms and several injured, so you see we can lay claim to being soldiers as far as danger is concerned.

"While with the Second Division, who were always used as shock troops, I covered every attack they were engaged in and, take it from one who knows, they were some battles. Tanks going into action, shells bursting, wounded, prisoners, shattered villages, captured German guns, celebrations by the natives to the American soldiers—have all been photographed time and time again.

"Recently I was promoted to corps photographer, and as such have charge of all photo units within the corps. I have been recommended for a captaincy, so hope to return wearing two bars instead of one. It is a great game, and I like it. Still, when I get back I will be in the market for an honest to goodness job."

Educational to Distribute Magazine.

The Educational Films Corporation of America has undertaken to distribute Photoplay's new magazine screen supplement. This will be a monthly contribution of one thousand feet portraying intimately world famous screen stars. A novel form of advertising will consist of sixty-foot trailers offered to exhibitors the week preceding the showings. The trailer will have a flash of at least one of the stars to be picturized reading a page of illustrations from Photoplay, which when touched by a fairy's wand will come to life and show the figures in motion.

Joseph L. Plunkett To Be Strand's Managing Director

JOSEPH L. PLUNKETT has been appointed managing director of New York's Strand Theatre, succeeding the late Harold Edel. Moe Mark, president of the Mitchell H. Mark Realty Corporation, owner of the house, makes the announcement.

Mr. Plunkett has had a wide experience in the theatrical and motion picture field. He was associated for a number of years with Liebler & Co. and George C. Tyler, handling most of their biggest productions, including "The Garden of Allah," "Joseph and His Brethren," and he was also the manager of the Century Theatre for two years. Mr. Plunkett also has been manager for Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Kyrle Bellew, Arnold Daly, Eleanor Robson, and other stars. He managed the Children's Theatre atop the Century Roof.

Mr. Plunkett entered the motion picture field three years ago, and has during that time produced numerous comedies and features, the last one being "The Cavell Case."

SECOND INFLUENZA WAVE RECEDING

Texans Fight Regulations That Close Theatres and Permit Crowds in Stores and Street Cars—Alternate Row Ordinance Becomes Tragic Joke When Omaha Fans Jump the Ropes of Restraint

GREATLY encouraging reports come from correspondents of the Moving Picture World from many sections of the country, indicating that the threatened "come-back" of the influenza epidemic has been halted by the health authorities or else is dying out of its own volition. The more prominent features in the news may be enumerated as follows:

In Texas exhibitors are putting up a valiant fight against regulations that discriminate against theatres while stores are allowed to assemble great crowds and street cars are packed to their usual capacity.

In Omaha the "fans" took matters into their own hands when they came in contact with the ropes designed to restrict patrons to the occupation of alternate rows. Our correspondent states that the "idea is a tragic joke."

A. H. Blank, a Des Moines exhibitor, jumped into the ring when regulations that threatened to close Iowa theatres were being discussed in open meeting. Mr. Blank, having "shied has caster," followed it up with vigorous demands for justice, and his threat to apply the might of injunction won the day and prevented the promulgation of drastic restrictions.

In Cincinnati the ban, which has for some time operated against children attending "the movies," has been abolished, and there is joy in the ranks of the showmen. In Kansas City and vicinity the epidemic is receding Many reopenings are reported from the South, and conditions on the west coast are more hopeful, although the danger is still there.

There will be found to be much encouragement in the reports that here follow:

San Antonio Theatres Open Under Court Order

UNDER a restraining order, granted by the District Court, which forbade health authorities from interfering with motion picture theatres, the theatres of San Antonio opened Saturday afternoon, December 21, after having been closed for several weeks under influenza quarantine rules.

San Antonio was the only city of importance in the southwestern territory which had been closed during the second outbreak of influenza.

Motion picture exhibitors of San Antonio circulated a petition among the residents of the city, asking them if they thought the theatres ought to be closed in view of the influenza situation. Some eight thousand people signed the petitions and by a majority of over three to one they asked that the theatres be opened.

The exhibitors then took the closing matter to the courts, arguing that civic authorities had no right to discriminate against their line of business by keeping the theatres under quarantine while department stores, street cars and other forms of business calculated to establish crowded conditions were not molested.

Their plea along this line brought the restraining order without delay. Theatres were crowded when they opened for the first time in weeks.

Oklahoma Theatres Fight Discrimination.

In Oklahoma City also the motion picture exhibitors went to the mat with the health authorities. The Health department demanded that seats in motion picture theatres be roped off so that only every other seat be occupied. Tom H. Boland, of the Empress and the Folly theatres, refused to obey the order, acting on the advice of his attorneys. Mr. Boland said that he would not rope off his shows even though complaint was formally filed against him in the city courts. He declared that such an order was clearly discriminatory. He won his point without a law suit and the theatres in Oklahoma City are now running as before.

Situation Improves.

The influenza situation through the states of Oklahoma, Arkansas and Texas is vastly better during the last week in December than it was earlier in the month. Not a single town of importance in the territory has its theatres closed, and re-openings at small towns are being reported every day. Dallas film men say that business is almost back to normal, and expect that by the first of the year they will handle a record-breaking rush.

Second Influenza Outbreak Is Receding in Seattle

THE second outbreak of influenza, which is now on the decline, has just begun to affect the attendance at the motion picture theatres in Seattle. At first people were inclined not to notice the statistics published daily, showing a second increase in the disease. They were too hungry for the amusement that had been denied them for the five weeks that the closing order was in effect. After the figures of the second outbreak approached the highest reached during the first, however, and health authorities began publishing warnings to the people to avoid public gatherings and doctors began to warn families under their care to stay away from the theatres, the majority of the public got "scared." This has been noticeable, however, only during the last week, the second before Christmas, and it is thought that just after the holidays business will be as big as ever. One or two theatres that have had unusually good shows report no decrease.

The situation in Montana and Idaho is still bad, there being only about six towns open in Montana. Health authorities are taking very rigid action in Idaho, so that some exhibitors think that conditions will not be back to normal before February. Most of Washington and Oregon are open, except the southwestern part of Oregon. Washington towns where the epidemic has reappeared have adopted the method of dealing with it that Seattle health authorities decided upon, i.e., that of quarantining the cases, except in Spokane and a few other towns, where the theatres have been required to operate on half capacity.

Rule Barring Children Applied to Stores, Too

THE Kansas City (Mo.) board of health extended its restrictions as to admitting children to the stores of Kansas City on December 18. The board had issued an order December 13, prohibiting admission of children under 16 years to theatres. The Government representative, who is assisting in the fight on the epidemic at Kansas City, had, however, invited conference of amusement interests. The latter suggested that it was not logical to bar children from theatres and allow them to crowd into stores. He felt the same way about it—and the stores were included. Notices had been sent to theatres, warning them against admitting children, and most of the managers observed the regulation. Only a few stores, however, made any active effort to keep children out, the extent of their denial being announcements that children should stay at home. Two or three merchants maintained special officers at their store entrances Saturday, December 21, suggesting to parents that they leave children in the lobbies. But before the day was over, even these merchants abandoned their effort, and allowed the children to enter.

Result of Action of the Stores.

The inability of the board of health to enforce its order respecting the stores, and the obvious absence of restrictions by the stores themselves, reacted upon the moving picture house situation. And the exhibitors began to be more lenient as to admitting children. Several exhibitors told officials of the board that the board was at liberty to send officers to keep children out of their houses, but that they did not wish to take the responsibility of rigidly refusing admission. Occasionally theatres ran slides announcing that children were not admitted; but scores of children under 16 years of age were in the theatres.

There was general co-operation in spirit with the order. But exhibitors could only take the word of the child asking admission, as to his or her age. Doubtless many who were several years under 16 were allowed to buy tickets.

The extension of the order concerning children to include stores had the effect of crystallizing the authority of the board, and eliciting the ideas of others than exhibitors on methods of meeting the situation. Some merchants did exactly as some exhibitors—they said nothing in their advertisements about children being excluded, they did nothing to keep children out—they waited for representatives of the board to enforce the order. Other merchants suggested in their advertisements, as exhibitors did on their bulletin boards, that parents keep children at home. A few merchants and exhibitors maintained police officers or house employes at the doors to tell small children to go away.

Cincinnati Removes Ban on Children.

The holiday season was rendered considerably more cheerful to the exhibitors in Cincinnati, after a period of business rather below what could be desired, by the action of the board of health in removing the ban against children, which had been in existence for some weeks. This restriction, which not only kept children out of the picture theatres, but prevented them from going on street cars, was removed in time for the youngsters to enjoy the fine programs offered for Christmas Day, and enabled many families which had been kept out of moving picture houses and other theatres for weeks to enjoy a performance for the first time in that period.

Grip Receding in Kansas City District.

The second wave of the influenza epidemic seemed, on December 23, to be passing away from the Kansas City territory. Many Kansas and Missouri theatres opened on that day, and the bans, which had oppressed the industry for several weeks, seemed in a fair way to be removed shortly. A majority of the towns, however, were going to maintain their restrictions at least until January 1, and in some cases it is possible that boards of health may not allow theatres to operate even in the new year.

Children Ban Not Generally Observed.

In Kansas City (Kan.) the "order" continued prohibiting the admission of children under 16 years. But exhibitors were not generally observing this order. They had received advice of counsel that the board of health could not enforce such a restriction which singled out the theatres; and that, in fact, exhibitors might run some risk in ejecting or denying admission to children. The publicity given the order, however, had its effect in limiting patronage.

Grip Peril Still Bad on West Coast.

The influenza situation in the territory served by San Francisco film exchanges is scarcely as satisfactory as it was early in December. There has been a flare-up of the epidemic in many places, and moving pictures in no less than forty-four towns are closed by order of local health boards. In some small communities theatres have been reopened and closed three and four times since last October, while at Hanford they have remained closed for more than two months. During the past week theatres have again been closed at Fresno, San Jose, Salinas, Healdsburg, Coalinga, Selma, Weed, Merced, Petaluma and Exeter. There are ten moving picture houses in Fresno and seven in San Jose, while several of the other places have more than one. More than one hundred theatres in this district are closed, or about one-third of the total number served by local exchanges.

There has been considerable agitation in San Francisco to resume the general wearing of gauze masks, but the board of supervisors has refused to make this compulsory. The city health officer has decided not to close the theatres unless conditions become worse.

Texas Theatre Managers to Fight Discrimination

THE Texas Amusement Managers' Association has started a campaign for the purpose of preventing any discrimination against motion picture exhibitors, which may be shown by city or state health officers, in ordering shows closed under quarantine rules.

Secretary Lew Remy was instrumental in keeping the theatres of Dallas open by his protest to city officials, that if the theatres closed all the department stores, thronged with holiday shoppers, should be closed also. The example set by Dallas in refusing to quarantine kept many other southwestern towns from closing, so film men declare.

When the quarantine matter arises in any town the Texas Amusement Managers' Association is getting on the job, interviewing officials and giving legal advice to the exhibitors who may be affected. Their efforts have kept many towns from establishing quarantine and have opened many theatres which otherwise would still have been dark.

Always Observe Official Orders.

"Motion picture exhibitors are taxpayers, property owners and conductors of business essential to the welfare and happiness of any community," Secretary Remy says. "They are law-abiding, and always do without demur just what officials may order or request. When the influenza first broke out, and it was thought that a quarantine might do some good, the theatres closed their doors willingly and without argument. There is not a motion picture exhibitor in Texas who would not willingly close up his show forever, if he thought that by doing so he could halt the progress of the epidemic or even save a solitary life. But the leading doctors of America gathered at Chicago say that quarantine rules are no good in stopping the spread of the disease. Therefore, there is no rhyme or reason in certain local health authorities showing their authority by closing up shows. If they close one line of business let them close all. Let them shut down the department stores. Let them rope off the seats in street cars, so that people can't get too near each other. That would be only just.

"The Texas Amusement Managers' Association is going to stand for no more discrimination. The amusement people, always the first called on for charity, to lend their theatres, give benefits, etc., seem to be the first to be made to suffer by various officials through their ignorance. They are entitled to some sort of consideration.

"We don't want policemen and city officials running in and out of our theatres without paying admission and ordering exhibitors around. These policemen could not walk into a dry goods store, show their badge and get a new shirt or a suit of clothes free. Yet they expect to be allowed anything they want from the theatrical man's stock in trade, gratis, and don't even thank him for it. We are going to get the same consideration from those in authority as do other lines of business or find out the reason why."

May Defer Semi-Annual Meeting.

Mr. Remy, in conclusion, announced that there was little likelihood of the Texas Amusement Managers' Association being able to hold their semi-annual convention in January in Dallas, as planned.

"Exhibitors had better arm themselves with a slippery elm club and stop at home and guard their theatres. Some of these officials would be apt to move the buildings if the managers left town for a few minutes in these days."

Omaha Picture Fans Violate the Alternate Row Ruling

MIDDLEWESTERN exhibitors are indignant over outrageous influenza restrictions that promise to go down in history as a tragical joke, so far as show interests are concerned. For weeks Omaha (Neb.) theatres were permitted to remain open only on their promise to seat patrons in alternate rows of seats.

On Christmas Day the lobbies of theatres were jammed with indignant patrons, angry because of the restriction. When they found an opportunity, they rushed the aisles, climbed over into the roped off rows, and found seats.

On the day before Christmas a committee of exhibitors, accompanied by their attorney and influential medical talent, called on the health commissioner, warned him of what might be expected from the holiday crowds, and pleaded with him to lift the ban for the special days. He said he would rather close the theatres entirely.

Numerous local health officials and city officers in smaller Nebraska towns followed the example of Omaha.

Des Moines Managers Show Fight.

In Des Moines, Iowa, A. H. Blank, proprietor of two big houses there, headed off what might have been an epidemic of foolish restrictions all over Iowa. He entered a meeting of the Des Moines city council just as the council had about decided to allow all business houses but theatres to remain open. Throwing his hat and coat on a table, Blank leaped into the center of the meeting, waved his fists and declared their intentions were an outrage. He threatened to apply for an injunction to close every business house in Des Moines if the theatres were closed. He said the theatres had willingly done their bit when they were closed for three weeks previously, while other businesses remained open until the closing order was proved to be a joke. He won his point and the restrictions were not made.

BEEMAN ANSWERS CANADIAN COMPLAINT

Film Division Official Tells Why British Battle Stuff Is Left Out of Our War Review

MARCUS A. BEEMAN, acting director of the Division of Films of the United States Government, has sent an official reply to T. W. McGarry, provincial treasurer of Ontario, in answer to the complaint of Mr. McGarry that American soldiers were appearing too frequently on the screens of Ontario. In his statement, Mr. Beeman described the arrangements which had been made for the release of the Official War Review of the United States in the Dominion, and pointed out that every possible step had been taken to prevent just such a situation as had been implied by Mr. McGarry. Mr. Beeman also asked the Ontario Government official for suggestions, so that he could co-operate with the British authorities in the matter—as he had always been most anxious to do.

The letter from Mr. Beeman is as follows:

"A copy of your letter has been forwarded to us by a Canadian exhibitor, the contents of which are very interesting to us. In this letter you protest against the elimination of Canadian and British fighting scenes in the films depicting the activities both here and abroad of the American Army.

"The Committee on Public Information last July made arrangements with C. F. Crandall, care of the Minister of Militia, Ottawa, who is the sole Canadian Government representative for war films in Canada, to handle our Official War Review, because we thought our review in his hands would get the fairest possible play, both to our citizens and the British and Canadian subjects.

"We thought it unfair to put our review in opposition to the Canadian Government. The arrangements were made with Mr. Crandall on a basis that barely covered our expenses. Before Mr. Crandall signed the contract with us he got full authority from the Bureaus of Information both in Canada and in London.

"We understand from Mr. Crandall that he received from four hundred to five hundred feet each week of British and Canadian film and was anxious that this should be released to Canadian exhibitors in its entirety, so, at his request, we eliminated all British and Canadian material from our review.

"Our review for Canada is made up on an average of one-third American, one-third French and one-third Italian scenes. Consequently, Mr. Crandall's British and Canadian film predominates about 200 per cent., as, no doubt, he released these two subjects together.

"The exhibitor has his own way of doing business. He may, for instance, take this reel to fill up his program and show British and Canadian film on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, and French, Italian and American film on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Have you, by any chance, dropped into a theatre at the end of the week when it was not being shown, or are you in error in assuming that you mean the Official War Review in your letter?

"You undoubtedly are also aware of the fact that there is no Canadian Weekly, but that three or four American weeklies are shipped into your country for exhibition, namely, the Pathe, Universal, Screen Telegraph and the Gaumont.

"All of these weeklies are made up of at least forty per cent. of war material, both here and abroad, so you will see that the only opposition you have to this flow of American stuff is the topical news sent to Mr. Crandall by the British Government.

"We would be only too glad if you would point out any way in which the committee could assist you, for we are now, and always have been, most anxious to co-operate with the British Government."

This letter has been read by Toronto and other exhibitors with a great deal of interest, particularly as it goes to show that the absence of Canadian military views from Ontario screens has been due to a considerable extent to laxity on the part of Canadian Militia Department officials. If the latter are not to blame, then where are the Canadian military films? The Canadian Government has just arranged for the presentation of pictures of various Canadian units in France and the first of these were only presented at Toronto theatres after Mr. McGarry registered his complaint.

An indication of "feeling" on the part of Montreal theatregoers was seen after the showing of the German Fleet surrender pictures in that city. A number of letters of protest were sent to Montreal newspapers because of the subtitles in these reels. The main objection was that the American fleet was named first when references were made to the fleets of the three Allies, Great Britain, France and the United States. It was again pointed out, however, that the pictures had been prepared for showing in the United States and that a number of prints had been rushed to Canada for presentation in Canadian theatres.

INDIVIDUAL DISCRIMINATION ADVOCATED

Members of the National Advisory Committee Would Judge Each Case Upon Its Own Merits

THE following comment on the indiscriminate picturizing of books and magazine stories has been submitted to us by W. D. McGuire, Jr., of the National Board of Review along with several interesting replies to a questionnaire on the subject sent out by the National Board of Review to the members of its National Advisory Committee. The contents of Mr. McGuire's contribution seem to us to contain food for serious thought, and should be read with interest by the public and without prejudice by the producer.

Some critics have argued that motion pictures change little. They see nothing but the same old plots, as they put it. Those, however, who observe closely the changing moods in production, will have observed that increasing numbers of books and magazine stories are being picturized. The question naturally arises in the cases of some of the books and stories, whether their literal presentation on the screen is desirable or not. The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, which endeavors to examine pictures from the point of view of public opinion, has been constantly faced with this question. In order that it might have a clear conception of the public's ideas on this increasingly important subject, it recently addressed a questionnaire to the members of its National Advisory Committee scattered throughout the country. This committee is made up of well known men and women representing the best phases of thought and social activities in the communities where they live. The results have been interesting. For instance, Dr. Talcott Williams, Director of the Pulitzer School of Journalism, connected with Columbia University, said:

"It is not possible to lay down general rules in regard to censoring any work of art.

"A picture based on a novel like 'Tom Jones' might be a canvas which could not be exhibited in any public gallery, while 'Tom Jones' circulates freely. It would be easy to make an illustration for Mrs. Gerould's 'A Vain Oblation' which could not be tolerated for sale anywhere, yet the story was printed in one of our foremost magazines without question or challenge. If one took 'Old Hundred' and quickened its time so that it made (as it would under these circumstances) effective dancing music, it would be perfectly easy to fit a dance to its measures which would not be allowed on the stage of any theatre longer than it took to suppress it. It is not possible, therefore, to assume that anything that has appeared in print and circulated can be turned into a photoplay without any necessity for censorship for altering the plot or situation. This is to forget that each field of art has its own canons and its own restrictions.

"The music in 'Tristan and Isolde' in a certain familiar passage, if it were turned into words as visional as in the medium of music, would be barred from the theatre.

"There are pictures in every gallery which are subjects on canvas which could not possibly be made the subject of similar display on the stage.

"A leading New York hotel has in its lobby a bronze of a familiar statue in Naples, which would not be tolerated anywhere in the hotel, not even in the barroom, if the same were to be painted.

"The range of the monthly is wider than that of the weekly, and the weekly prints matter that the daily could not receive, and the morning paper will print in one part of the issue what it will not tolerate in another part of the issue."

William Trufant Foster, President of Reed College, Portland, Ore., representing the far Western angle, stated:

"In answer to your questions I have only to say that, in my judgment, your standards should not be determined by those published novels, magazine stories or stage plays.

"In the first place, you cannot get the same effect with motion pictures, even if you wanted to. The story in the novel and the story on the screen are, and must be, different things and subject to different standards of judgment.

"In the second place, we cannot hope for even a gradual improvement in public taste and morals if various agencies are merely looking to each other for standards or to 'materials already accepted by the public.'"

The general consensus of opinion was that a motion picture should be judged upon its merits as a motion picture and not upon the accuracy of its interpretation of the tale upon which it is based. It was brought out that what may be good for the adult reader may not necessarily be good when presented in realistic form and action upon the screen.

Jacob H. Schiff, when asked on what ground The National Board of Review could assume the responsibility for requiring changes in condemning productions based upon books or magazine stories already accepted by the public, said: "Upon moral grounds, it being a fact that books and novels are much more limited in their effect than the publicly exhibited photo plays." Dan Beard said: "Same ground as Mr. Wilson uses in his measures. The public's own desire to be big-hearted, big-minded, patriotic Americans. Anything which tends to lower morals or to brutalize minds of public defeats our ambition to be a great people"; while the Rev. H. Pereira Mendes said, "On the ground of incompatibility with desired standard of public morals," and President Burton, of the University of Minnesota, argued that it was desirable "on the ground of changing standards." James Bronson Reynolds, former assistant district attorney, New York City, responded: "On the ground of changes in producing the film, the general differences between plays and films, and the differences between respective audiences." Hamilton Holt put it tersely, "Common sense"; while Miss Mary Gray Peck, formerly assistant professor of literature at the University of Minnesota, said, in respect to the picturization of plays, "On the ground that they unduly emphasize a subordinate incident"; to novels and stories already published, "on the ground that they are scenarios only and must be worked out according to the same standards as other scenarios. It would be inadmissible to either dramatize or picturize certain scenes in Tolstoi or the Bible."

In other words, the dramatic motion picture should stand on its own feet, be judged on its own merits, and be tested by the laws of its own being as a medium of expression.

Each "U. S. A. Series" Will Cover Single War Phase

THE new Government series of pictures, with the general title "U. S. A Series," each covering a single phase of the world war, with intimate details of how America handled the stupendous task of bearing its part of the burden in the conflict, gives promise of meeting with immediate success both with the exhibitors and the public. The facts, figures and interesting scenes given in the pictures are of a kind that meet the demand of the public at this time, giving information that has been withheld up to the present time on account of the exigencies of war. It was to meet this demand of the public, to give full pictured information on the marvelous achievements of the nation in the war that the Government prepared the series.

With the release of the first picture of the series "If Your Soldier's Hit," December 23, exhibitors immediately showed a keen interest. The picture illustrates the wonderful efficiency of the Medical Detachment and the Field Hospital Corps by showing how the first aid detail goes forward behind the fighting line, how wounded men are rescued and taken to advanced dressing stations by stretcher bearers, given first treatment, then passed on to the field hospital and finally to a place of safety. The picture is the first exposition of the work of the Field Hospital Corps that has been registered for the screen and will have a tremendous interest for those whose boys were at the front.

The second picture of the series "Wings of Victory" is for release January 6. It is the full story of the air program of the United States, how it was prepared and how it was carried out.

The two reelers of the U. S. A. Series will be released at the rate of one every two weeks, allowing exhibitors ample time to book them for a showing in rotation. The third picture of the series "Horses of War" shows how the horse still holds his place of honor on the field of battle.

A Regular Business Man.

Harry J. Naughton, former studio manager for Vim Films and later serving in a similar capacity for the King Bee Corporation, has been appointed assistant manager of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at Honolulu, and is already at his post of duty. When Mr. Naughton married Miss Mildred Burstein, niece of Louis J. Burstein, about a year ago, he decided that it was up to him as the head of a family to do some real work, and he went to San Francisco. He tried ranching for a time, but the dry spell drove him back to the city, and he made a connection with the steamship company, which resulted in his rapid promotion to this responsible position.

PRESENT STATUS OF REVENUE BILL

Two Months Will Be Required to Iron Out the Six Hundred Amendments Offered by the Senate to the House Measure—Varner Issues Warning to Exhibitors

IT is going to take fully two months to shape up the revenue bill and iron out the differences that have come with the more than six hundred amendments offered by the Senate to the measure as originally adopted by the House. This prediction is made by Claude W. Kitchin, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, who also declares that once the bill is put in acceptable shape it will not take the House more than one day to pass it finally.

There are very few sections of this highly important measure that do not have a bearing, direct or indirect, upon the motion picture industry. Passing by the general provisions of the bill having to do with income, excess profits, inheritance taxes, etc., the big item of interest to the exhibitor and the exchange man is the tax on admissions and dues under Title VIII.

In this section there are a number of changes from the bill as adopted by the House; it advances the date upon which the section will become effective, cuts the rate in half, but doubles the rate on "scalpers." The full text of this section is as follows:

Title VIII.—Tax on Admission and Dues.

Sec. 800. (a) That from and after April 1, 1919, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 700 of the Revenue Act of 1917—

(1) A tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place on or after such date, including admission by season ticket or subscription, to be paid by the person paying for such admission;

(2) In the case of persons (except bona fide employes, municipal officers on official business, persons in the military or naval forces of the United States when in uniform, and children under twelve years of age) admitted free or at reduced rates to any place at a time when and under circumstances under which an admission charge is made to other persons, a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the price so charged to such other persons for the same or similar accommodations, to be paid by the person so admitted;

(3) Upon tickets or cards of admission to theatres, operas, and other places of amusement, sold at news stands, hotels, and places other than the ticket offices of such theatres, operas, or other places of amusement, at not to exceed 50 cents in excess of the sum of the established price therefor at such ticket office plus the amount of any tax imposed under paragraph (1), a tax equivalent to 10 per centum of the amount of such excess; and if sold for more than 50 cents in excess of the sum of such established price plus the amount of any tax imposed under paragraph (1), a tax equivalent to 50 per centum of the whole amount of such excess, such taxes to be returned and paid, in the manner provided in section 903, by the person selling such tickets;

(4) A tax equivalent to 50 per centum of the amount for which the proprietors, managers, or employes of any opera house, theatre, or other place of amusement sell or dispose of tickets or cards of admission in excess of the regular or established price or charge therefor, such tax to be returned and paid, in the manner provided in section 903, by the person selling such tickets;

(5) In the case of persons having the permanent use of boxes or seats in an opera house or any place of amusement or a lease for the use of such box or seat in such opera house or place of amusement (in lieu of the tax imposed by paragraph (1), a tax equivalent to 10 per centum of the amount for which a similar box or seat is sold for each performance or exhibition at which the box or seat is used or reserved by or for the lessee or holder, such tax to be paid by the lessee or holder; and

(6) A tax of 1 cent for each ten cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any public performance for profit at any roof garden, cabaret, or similar entertainment, to which the charge for admission is wholly or in part included in the price paid for refreshment, service, or merchandise; the amount paid for such admission to be deemed to be 20 per centum of the amount paid for refreshment, service, and merchandise; such tax to be paid by the person paying for such refreshment, service, or merchandise.

(b) No tax shall be levied under this title in respect to any admissions all the proceeds of which inure exclusively to the benefit of religious, educational, or charitable institutions, societies, or organizations, societies for the prevention of cruelty to children and animals, or organizations conducted for the sole purpose of maintaining symphony orchestras and receiving substantial support from voluntary contributions, or exclusively to the benefit of persons in the military forces of the United States, or admissions to agricultural fairs none of the profits of which are distributed to stockholders or members of the associations conducting the same.

(c) The term "admission" as used in this title includes seats and tables, reserved or otherwise, and other similar accommodations, and the charges made therefor.

(d) The price (exclusive of the tax to be paid by the person paying for admission) at which every admission ticket or card is sold shall be conspicuously and indelibly printed, stamped, or written on the face or back thereof, together with the name of the vendor if sold other than at the ticket office of the theatre, opera, or other place of amusement. Whoever sells an admission ticket or card on which the name of the vendor and price is not so printed, stamped, or written, or at a price in excess of the price so printed, stamped, or written thereon, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $100.

Must Make Monthly Returns.

Section 903, referred to above, provides that the persons subject to the payment of the taxes in question shall make monthly returns under oath in duplicate and pay the taxes imposed by such section to the collector of the district in which is located the principal place of business. Such returns are to contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulations prescribe.

A new section, adopted by the Senate and sent to the House for ratification, provides that "The tax shall, without assessment by the Commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per centum, together with interest at the rate of 1 per centum for each full month, from the time the tax became due."

Section 901 provides "That if any person * * * leases or licenses for exhibition any positive motion picture film containing a picture ready for projection, and whether through any agreement, arrangement, or understanding, or otherwise, sells, leases or licenses such article at less than the fair market price obtainable therefor, either (a) in such manner as directly or indirectly to benefit such person or any person directly or indirectly interested in the business of such person, or (b) with intent to cause such benefit, the amount for which such article is sold, leased or licensed shall be taken to be the amount which would have been received from the sale, lease or license of such article if sold, leased or licensed at the fair market price."

As to Who Shall Pay Rental Tax.

Section 906 is intended to replace the present footage taxes on films and provides "That on and after the 1st day of May, 1919, any person engaged in the business of leasing or licensing for exhibition positive motion picture films containing pictures ready for projection shall pay monthly an excise tax in respect to carrying on such business equal to 5 per centum of the total rentals earned from each such lease or license during the preceding month. If a person owning such a film exhibits it for profit he shall pay a tax equivalent to 5 per centum of the fair rental or license value of such film at the time and place where and for the period during which exhibited. If any such person has, prior to December 6, 1918, made a bona fide contract with any person for the lease or licensing, after the tax imposed by this section takes effect, of such a film for exhibition for profit, and if such contract does not permit the adding of the whole of the tax imposed by this section to the amount to be paid under such contract, then the lessee or licensee shall, in lieu of the lesser or licenser pay so much of such tax as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price. The tax imposed by this section shall be in lieu of the tax imposed by subdivisions (c) and (d) of section 600 of the Revenue Act of 1917."

Seating Provision Re-enacted.

The old special tax provision covering the seating capacity of the houses is re-enacted in this bill, so that on and after July 1, 1918 (and they mean last July all right), "Proprietors of theatres, museums and concert halls, where a charge for admission is made, having a seating capacity of not more than 250 shall pay $50; having a seating capacity of more than 250 and not exceeding 500, shall pay $100; having a seating capacity exceeding 500 and not exceeding 800, shall pay $150; having a seating capacity of more than 800, shall pay $200. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls or armories rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, and not including edifices owned by religious, educational, or charitable institutions, societies or organizations where all the proceeds for admissions inure exclusively to the benefit of such institutions, societies, or organizations or exclusively to the benefit of persons in the military or naval forces of the United States, shall be regarded as a theatre: Provided, That in cities, towns, or villages of 500 inhabitants or less the amount of such payment shall be one-half of that above stated; Provided further, that whenever such edifice is under lease at the time the tax is due, the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to the lease."

Varner Issues Warning.

Henry B. Varner, who has been very active in the North Carolina Exhibitors' League, and who has been closely watching both State and National legislation, warns exhibitors against believing that all is now plain sailing.

"The exhibitors," said Mr. Varner to the World's Capital correspondent, "should not go to sleep, feeling safe that the victory that has been won in the Senate for the motion picture industry is going to stick fast. You know the bill goes to conference and all sorts of things can happen when the representatives of the Senate and the House of Representatives begin swapping ideas as to what should hold and what should go.

"Representatives of the industry should be on the job to watch developments. Heavy taxes on the industry now with conditions in the shape they are will do lots of damage. The exhibitors have lost heavily because of having to close up during the influenza epidemic; some have been very hard hit by the removal of men from the training camps; we are all going to feel it when the boys come back from Over There, and have to look around a bit before adjusting themselves to their old life. Money for picture shows is likely to be scarce.

"Of course, we all of us are willing to do our share and we will be able to if we are not hampered by heavy taxes just when we too must enter the readjustment period." LINZ.

"LET'S FINISH THE JOB," SAYS GLASS

New Secretary of the Treasury Tells Why the Fifth Liberty Loan Must Be a Great Success

UNCLE SAM, who has furnished material for more movie thrillers than any other ten individuals on this or any other planet, is at work on still another one, the motif of which will be "Keeping Faith with the Boys Over There." The scenario for Uncle's latest is going to be all about our Yankee heroes in France, Germany and Siberia—and there are still more than 1,000,000 of them on duty overseas. It is going to carry a message to the American people that, although the war is over, our army of occupation must be maintained—clothed, fed, housed and paid—and then, after its services are no longer needed in Europe, the brave men comprising it must be transported home and demobilized. And that is going to take a heap of money.

To let you in on the inside facts regarding the scenario and everything we are going to ask Secretary of the Treasury Carter Glass to step to the front and tell you all about the instrument that Uncle Sam will employ to make his so-called "thriller" a possibility—the Fifth Liberty Loan, which is scheduled for spring release. Ladies and gentlemen, Secretary Glass:

Secretary Glass speaking:

"It may surprise you somewhat, my friends, to learn that the proceeds from the Fourth Liberty Loan have been exhausted and that my department is now borrowing money to finance the Government in the initial stages of peace at the rate of more than $600,000,000 semi-monthly. Our expenses must go on just the same, even though an armistice has been declared and world peace seems near, and the only way that Uncle Sam has to pay for all this is through the means of money raised by the sale of Liberty Bonds. Therefore, the absolute necessity of at least one more popular war loan.

Must Keep Faith With Fighters.

"Thus far the people of America have kept faith with their fighters over there. They must not fail them now that the goal is in sight. You all must remember that our boys took a contract to fight in France for humanity and democracy—for you and me and all of us—while we who remained at home contracted to pay the bills. That these brave Yankees have more than fulfilled their part of the contract no one will deny, but we will not have made good our promise to them until every bill contracted during the war and since the armistice was signed shall have been paid to the last farthing. By the time the Fifth Liberty Loan campaign is here nearly all of the money that must be raised by it will have been spent. The need of the Treasury Department should be apparent to every man, woman and child in the United States.

"We sent our fighters over; now we must bring the victors home. Let's finish the job."

Universalites Moving West.

New Year's Day found a Western movement among Universal players and executives. After a three-week stay in New York Dorothy Phillips, featured in "The Heart of Humanity," returned to Universal City accompanied by her husband, Allen Holubar, who directed the big drama; Frank Lawrence, film editor, and Viola Mallory, film cutter. The first day of 1919 found James J. Corbett, new serial star en route to the Pacific Coast studios, and Eddie Polo, another serial star, at Denver with only one more city to visit before reaching the Coast.

Even Universal executives have acquired the "Go West" habit, for January 2 saw Joe Brandt on his way to California on the first leg of a long trip all the way around the country.

Pat Kearney Goes to Hollywood.

Pat Kearney, formerly editor of Progress-Advance, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's house organ, has been transferred to the West Coast studios in Hollywood. Mr. Kearney entered the film business several years ago as reviewer for the Motion Picture Mail, since which time he has been connected with publicity departments of several big companies. His work on Progress-Advance attracted attention and he goes West with the best wishes of all his friends

Manitoba Partially Refunds Theatre Employes' Flu Loss

THE Manitoba Government has announced that 35 per cent. of wages lost by employes of moving picture theatres in the Province of Manitoba will be given by the Government to help reimburse them for the setback sustained through the closing of theatres for seven weeks on account of the epidemic.

The method adopted by the Government is to rebate 25 per cent. of the amusement tax to exhibitors "for collecting it" and the exhibitors are to guarantee that the money will be distributed among employes. Under the Workmen's Compensation act, the theatre employes would have been entitled to 55 per cent. of their wages if they had suffered loss of pay through accident or sickness as a result of their work. Such not being the case, however, the Governmcnt has decided to make a rebate of the amusement tax under a special plan, the money being charged up as a commission for the collecting of the levy.

Winnipeg Considers Relief Plans.

The City of Winnipeg also has been considering various plans to help the exhibitors and theatre employes. The operators', musicians,' and stage hands' unions presented a bill to the city for $23,651.10 as the loss sustained by members of the trade organizations through the closing of the theatres.

A definite ruling against compensation by the city to exhibitors and employes was made by City Solicitor Hunt of Winnipeg, but the other civic officials are planning to take action. It is understood that awards by the city will not be made, however, until moving picture license fees are renewable next spring.

The city does not want to make a special grant for the purpose because of claims which would be made by many other citizens, but it is felt that the municipality may cut theatre licenses next spring with safety. City Solicitor Hunt reported that the city has no authority, in fact, to make a special relief grant.

Jacques Promoted to be Manager.

S. C. Jacques has been appointed manager of the Pathe Cincinnati exchange, succeeding the late F. B. Chase, whose death from influenza has caused the deepest regret through the whole Pathe organization.

Mr. Jacques is promoted from the ranks. He has been city salesman in the Cincinnati exchange. He has made an excellent record and has earned his promotion.

His appointment as manager is in line with Mr. Brunet's policy of advancement for the deserving, and, so far as possible, to give the branch managerships to those men in the organization who have proved by their success in the field their ability in marketing the Pathe productions.

Tessier Back with Pathe.

Paul H. Tessier, who started in the Pathe organization as a salesman with the Cincinnati branch, and was afterward manager of the Pathe Albany office, is back with Pathe after several months with another company. He is in the Cleveland exchange.

BABY MARIE WATCHES HERSELF ACT

Little Miss Osborne, Star of Diando-Pathe Pictures, While in New York, Enjoys the Good Points in Her Latest Release, "Dolly's Vacation," and Applauds Ernest

By Edward Weitzel

IT isn't every day a reviewer sits next to a star and watches the young lady watch herself act. Neither is it a common experience to hear this same star laugh at and applaud her own work and announce in a tone of supreme satisfaction:

"Now you're going to see something awful funny!"

Such an occurrence took place last week when Baby Marie Osborne, star of the Diando-Pathe Pictures, was in New York, and her press agent sent out word that she would be ready and waiting to be interviewed at the Pathe projection room on Friday afternoon any time between 3 and 5. Such an assignment promised something unusual. Interviewing a young lady who had just turned six appeared rather difficult, to say the least. It proved just the reverse. Little Miss Osborne made the task an extremely easy one and vastly entertaining as well.

Just Like a Regular Actress.

"Pleased to meet you," was her greeting as she held out her hand.

This sounded a bit formal from one so young, but the next moment she climbed into the adjoining opera chair and smiled in the friendliest way possible.

"Have you come to see my picture?" she asked. "They're going to show it pretty soon; you wait and you'll see it. You'll like it."

"I'm sure I shall. What is the name of the picture you are working on now?"

"'The Little Diplomat.'"

"Anything funny in it?"

Giving Ernest a New Complexion.

At this question Marie's eyes began to dance and she assumed a most confidential tone:

"Well, I should think so," she half whispered. "I whitewash Ernest. You know. He's the little colored boy who plays in my pictures. He goes down to the pond to go in swimming and only has on trunks and I see him and get the whitewash and make him white."

"How does Ernest like that?"

"He don't mind. His name is Sambo in this picture and he's awful funny."

"What sort of a part do you play?"

"Oh, I'm a Belgium orphan and some rich folks adopt me and I have a doll named Fifi and she gets lost and Jack Connolly is my leading man—you can put that in for publicity, if you want to."

This last remark was said in a most matter-of-fact tone of voice. It was evident that the young lady understood the value of a good press agent in the exploiting of a star. And right here it is in order to explain that there is nothing at all forward or self-conscious about Marie. She sat quietly in the chair and talked in a natural and engaging manner, the same as any other bright, well brought up child. Her features are much more delicate than the screen indicates; and she made no attempt to show off during the interview. When "Dolly's Vacation" was being shown she revealed the secret of her success as an actress.

A Ranch Owner at Six.

Up to this time the Moving Picture World had not had any rival for the star's attention. The entrance of a little girl of Marie's age, accompanied by her father, was followed by a woman who came to inspect "Dolly's Vacation" with a view to using it at an entertainment for children. Marie acknowledged the introductions without the slightest embarrassment and autographed a picture for the little girl, who spoke only French, and courtsied gravely when she shook hands.

A remark about dogs brought out the information that Marie has had several for pets.

"I like big dogs best," she explained. "Wait and you'll see mine in the picture. He's handsome."

"Where is he now?" she was asked.

"On my ranch twenty miles from Denver."

"So, you own a ranch?"

"Oh, yes. My father bought it for me and there's chickens on it—and—"

"Shall I start the picture now?" called the operator from the booth.

The little star sat up straight and clapped her hands:

"Oh, gooddy!" she exclaimed; "they're going to show my picture!"

Watching "Dolly's Vacation" with Marie.

The opening scene of Marie's latest release shows the youthful heroine looking at her colored nurse and performing a feat of contortion at the same time. Her position is somewhat startling, and the impersonator of Dolly gave a little chuckle and then burst into a hearty laugh.

"Guess you didn't 'spect anything like that!" she announced with pride.

As the story progressed and the pranks of Dolly with her nurse, who is big and fat but determined to maintain her dignity, grew more uproarious, the real cause of the trouble gave a practical illustration of how to enjoy the movies. She followed every movement with the keenest interest and unconsciously acted over again the scene before her. Marie Osborne's talent is inborn. The child lives the part she is playing and has inherited a personality that is a perfect instrument for the expression of her emotions.

Marie Tips Off Her "Audience."

When a comedy scene was over and the dramatic portion of the story was being carried on without her aid, Marie explained what was going to happen in a dramatic whisper that was very impressive.

"There's going to be a strike at my father's mill, so he sends me and mammy and Ernest into the country. Wait till you see what Ernest does now—he's fine—here he comes.'"

The little colored boy who has played in so many of Marie's pictures and helped her so often to land a big laugh, was seen crawling up behind the leader of the strikers. Reaching between the man's legs, Ernest seized an incriminating note dropped by the conspirator, and backed quickly away on all fours.

Once more Marie gave a squeal of delight and clapped her hands:

"Wasn't Ernest splendid?" she asked.

A moment later her laughter and applause were heard again:

"That's Tiny! He used to be my dog, but I gave him to Ernest. And here's my big dog. Wait till I take hold of his rope and you see how he pulls me along! Now, there's going to be some more about the strikers."

"I'd rather watch you."

"So would I. Wait till Ernest and I get lost in the woods hunting for Tiny. We have lots of fun at the farm. We nail Pete's shoes to the doorstep and make a swing down in the cellar and the tap comes out of the barrel and Ernest steals a jar of soft soap because he thinks it's preserves, but the funniest thing he does is when he locks his mammy in the chicken coop."

And so it went, all through the picture. For every good word for her own work Marie had three for her brother artist. Professional jealousy has no place in the nature of little Miss Osborne.

Matthews to Travel in Kentucky.

The Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville has found business so heavy that it has had to put another traveling representative in the field. H. A. PRIZMA TO USE STANDARD PROJECTORS

Through Invention of William Kelley Color Film no Longer Requires Special Apparatus

THE name of Prizma, Inc., is not new to most of us. Nevertheless, we have heard little of this natural color concern in the past few months, and it is all of two years since it first ventured a private showing of films photographed and projected by means of the Prizma natural color method. At this time the color in the film as we saw it was due to synchronized revolutions of color screens through which the light was filtered (four colors being used, based on green, blue, red and orange) on to the screen. It will be remembered by those who witnessed the first exhibition that while the colors were beautifully blended with the softness of pastels, there remained with the spectator a sensation of wanting to get nearer to the pictured objects that reminded one of the desire to penetrate a veil or mist which seemed to separate the spectator from the picture.

Prizma, Inc., instead of forcing on the market something which the officials of the company themselves felt was incomplete, set at work to locate the faults of the method, and if possible to correct them. In addition to the filminess of vision occasioned by the filter system, it was found that the necessity for rapidity of projection caused the sprocket holes to break with an alarming frequency which interfered with the perfect synchronization necessary between the color screens and the scenes of the picture, to the extent of destroying the illusion.

Kelley Puts Over the Big Thing.

Finally after much discussion and experimenting scientifically and otherwise a savior appeared on the scene in the shape of William V. D. Kelley, who discovered a method by means of which Prizma films could be placed on the market as a finished product, capable of being run by any standard projector and still supplying the charm of color which has been attributed to Prizma.

The secret of this method of course belongs to Prizma. A piece of positive film shown to the writer contained actual color. Both sides of the film are sensitized, providing a protection against inflammability. Also the treatment to which the film has been subjected has made it much less subject to scratching. Last but not least the necessity for a color screen has been entirely eliminated, allowing the picture when projected to possess the same clearness which characterizes the black and white, plus the depth of substance supplied by the color.

The members of the company are H. W. Saulsbury, president; Carroll H. Dunning, vice president, and William V. D. Kelley, technical adviser.

As a tribute to the success of the Prizma method the Rivoli Theatre has chosen as its educational feature for the week of December 29 its color spectacle "Kilauea", one of the most remarkable portrayals of the Hawaiian volcano that has ever been shown. The developing of the Prizma method to a point of commercial practicability marks a significant advance in the art of motion picture photoplay. Plans for the release of these films as weekly one-reel educational releases are under way.

PATHE NEWS HAS HAD LONG HISTORY

Big Organization All Set Duly to Record Large Happenings at Home and Abroad

SOME of the most momentous chapters in the history of nations will be written in Europe during the coming year, and to accurately and adequately record it Pathe has completed and has now in operation a cinematic plan which will leave no important detail unrecorded by the cameras in the services of the Pathe News, announces Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager. "Similarly, the field organization in the Orient has been strongly augmented, some of the most distinguished captains of the service having recently been detailed there to perfect the general plan. South America, which, all authorities agree, will figure largely in the world's affairs after the war, has been covered, so to speak, from the Isthmus of Panama to the Straits of Magellan. And with the exclusively organized Pathe service in the United States and Canada there is no portion of the habitable globe, no place where the adventuring spirit of man takes him to unusual achievement that the eyes of the Pathe News cameras will not see.

"When the Pathe Journal, the progenitor of the Pathe News, was started in France twelve years ago, though many persons regarded it as an entertaining novelty, wide visioned men saw at once that here was a vital, recording and disseminating medium that must have a tremendous influence on the future.

"Some of the journals referred to it as a 'newsyaper in pictures,' which was a misnomer; but news cinema becames the accepted term with serious commentators.

"France has the Pathe Journal, England has the Gazette, Italy the Journal and the United States and Canada the Pathe News, which started August 1, 1911, as the Pathe Weekly. When four years ago it was changed to a daily, it became the Pathe News. It appears all over the world under various titles, and, it is especially popular in Japan.

"The first issue of the news cinema as a regular, fixed service was the Pathe Gazette in England in 1908. The Pathe Weekly, later the News, was the first organized news cinema in America and was started on August 1, 1911. As a matter of historical record, interest attaches to the advertisement in the Moving Picture World of July 29, 1911, that announces the venture:

"'Pathe Freres Films. Announcement Extraordinary!

"'The greatest news ever published for the motion picture exhibitors. Pathe's News Weekly. A film issued every Thursday, made up of short scenes of great international events of unusual interest from all over the world. An illustrated magazine on a film. The news of the world in pictures. Book it. Invest in it. It means bigger business.'

"No one who has talked with exhibitors in all parts of the country can fail to recognize the prestige the Pathe News has and the general recognition of its interest and high quality. The prestige that has impressed the entire business steadily has increased since the very beginning of the Pathe news cinema."

BUTTE EXHIBITORS FIGHT QUARANTINE

Picture Men in Montana Protest Against the Closing of the Theatres and Not the Cabarets

WHEN the municipal authorities of Butte, Mont., closed the theatres for a second time on account of the influenza epidemic the exhibitors decided that it was about time something was done. They could see no reason why the theatres should be closed and the stores and cabarets be permitted to keep open. They had already mildly protested against the same ruling during the earlier quarantine, but like so many other towns the exhibitors have no organization and are not in friendly accord.

But this second closing was too much for Ralph Ruffner, who runs the Rialto for Jensen and Von Herberg. He got into immediate touch with the other exhibitors and persuaded them to round up all their employes for a demonstration. They all showed up, even to the lady of color who presides over the retiring room at the Rialto, and they marched in a body on the City Hall, where the Board of Health was in session.

The delegation demanded to know why such a discrimination was made against the theatres. They pointed out that for a second time all of the persons represented had been temporarily thrown out of work while other places of public congregation were open. They argued that if the quarantine required that churches, schools and theatres be closed it was also requisite that cabaret shows and saloons be closed as well. Several times the officials ordered the room cleared, but the police hesitated to enforce the order and with a local clergyman for spokesman the delegation drove home its arguments.

They did not carry their point, for the saloon element was too strong for them and the local board got a ruling from the state board to the effect that only the latter could open the quarantine, but it is probable that the period of closing was materially shortened.

This did some good, but if the exhibitors of Butte or of any other town would only unite for common cause and make the city fathers realize what a potent weapon they wield around election time in the shape of their screen and slides there would be less tendency throughout the country to pick on the theatres for public demonstrations. It has been shown in the Liberty and other patriotic drives what the screens can do. Let exhibitors show the politicians what the screens can do against crooked work, and many abuses would be abolished.

Rothacker Goes West to Get Association Members

WATERSON R. ROTHACKER, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago and chairman of the membership committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has started work on an intensive campaign for new members on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Rothacker leaves for the Coast immediately after New Year's and expects to interest every company that is not now identified with the Association in the work that it is doing for the industry as a whole. Plans are under way for calling a large meeting of the executive heads of the producing companies located in Los Angeles soon after his arrival in that city.

Chairman Rothacker will be aided by Adolph Zukor, Samuel Goldwyn, David Wark Griffith, Jesse L. Lasky, Frank W. Garbutt, Winfield R. Sheehan, William Sistrom, Joseph W. Engel and others who are active in the councils of the organization. Walter J. Reynolds, secretary of the Producers' Association of Los Angeles, is expected to lend a hand.

It is expected that this campaign for new members will be highly successful owing to the prominence of the men who are now on the Coast and directly interested in the success of the National Association. They are not only prominent in the industry, but are active in the affairs of the organization.

Kansas City Exhibitors Offer Screen in Epidemic Fight

THE amusement interests of Kansas City, Mo., have been actively demonstrating the manner in which they can help situations of public concern by co-operating with each other and with official bodies. A representative committee from the new amusement association held a session with the board of health last week and made concrete suggestions. George W. Curtis, proprietor of the Doric, showed the board how the screen could be employed to assist in spreading the suggestions of the board for combating the epidemic. He offered, for the industry, the complete capacity for slide exhibition of the theatres of the city, and pointed out definitely various things that might be done with this immense means of publicity.

Sam Harding, of the Liberty, one of the largest downtown theatres, explained to the board the effect on suburban houses of the order against admitting children—his remarks being received all the more cordially since he was not a suburban exhibitor. There were expressions of desire for fullest compliance with any orders from representatives of the speaking stage houses.

The new association has not yet got into perfect working order, but the fact that its executive committee is taking full advantage of the present opportunities to help the industry is materially assisting in demonstrating its possible usefulness.

Clinton Exhibitors Expect Big Sunday Closing Battle

THE exhibitors at Clinton, Ind., are expecting a bitter fight with the members of the ministerial association as a result of the effort that is to be made by the latter in forcing the former to close their theatres on Sunday. The proposed fight is scheduled for about the first Sunday in January.

While some of the ministers, in fact most of them, are in favor of each minister looking after his own congregation and making his services so as to detract from the shows, there are a few who are in favor of "taking the bull by the horns" and forcing the exhibitors to close.

The present indications are that a big majority of the population are in sympathy with the shows, and should the ministerial association start the crusade the exhibitors say they will fight it to the highest court. However, the storm is slowly gathering and the "cloudburst" is expected shortly to take definite form.

Legislators Would Regulate Saskatchewan Film Business

LEGISLATORS of various provinces in Canada are once more giving exhibitors and exchange managers cause for worry. Each year the provincial legislatures invariably juggle with measures which affect the moving picture business. The perennial excitement started this winter with the introduction of a bill before the Saskatchewan legislature to amend the Theatres and Cinematograph act of Saskatchewan.

This bill, if passed, will give the lieutenant-governor-in-council power to make regulations "for licensing in the use and operation of cinematographs, defining film exchanges, regulating the exhibition of pictures, providing for the seizure of films not sanctioned by the censors and for prescribing the terms and conditions under which machines shall be operated and films sold, leased or exchanged."

This is "a mouthful" and it is anticipated that liberal use will be made of the wide scope of this measure providing it passes in its present form. The exhibitors of the province see a lively time ahead.

Sunday Closing Question Ohio Exhibitors' Big Item

THAT Sunday closing will be the big item to occupy the attention of exhibitors in Ohio this winter is indicated by the actions of certain agitators and the fight on them by the Ohio State Screen League, which is now just developing.

These agitators, according to an Ohio newspaper, are former anti-saloon workers, who are now out of a job because the state recently voted dry.

The Ohio State Screen League was formed for combating unjust legislation against moving pictures, and this is its first battle. Already a large percentage of the exhibitors have joined—in fact, the percentage is a revelation to the officers of the league.

The plans of the league have been made and it hopes to legalize Sunday opening before next spring. The officers are working quietly and with considerable success.

Calgary Show Interests Form New Organization

MOVING picture theatre interests of Calgary have organized a federation which is known as the Calgary Theatrical Association, and it is aimed to perfect an organization, the scope of which will eventually cover the whole of Western Canada.

The Calgary association was organized on December 19 at a meeting attended by exhibitors, managers, exchange representatives, operators, musicians and stage employes.

Steps were taken at the meeting to encourage the formation of similar local associations in other cities of the western provinces and, if active co-operation can be secured, the scope of the association will be extended, under a broader name, to take in all moving picture interests west of the Great Lakes. It is also hoped that a Dominion wide organization may eventually be formed.

One of the first moves taken by the Calgary association was to deal with the great number of appeals from patriotic and charitable organizations. Calgary exhibitors are constantly being asked to loan the use of their screens and their theatres for these purposes. A considerable amount of these appeals will be given the "cold shoulder" in future, it is promised. The exhibitors present decided to take a united stand in the matter.

Rosenblum Organizing Quebec Exhibitors.

A. Rosenblum, an exhibitor of Lachine, Quebec, has undertaken the organization of an exhibitors' association in the Province of Quebec to succeed the defunct Exhibitors' Association of Montreal. Rosenblum's move makes the third real attempt in Quebec to establish an organization for moving picture theatres. He urges that the exhibitors should prepare to discuss legislative matters at the forthcoming session of the Quebec legislature. A number of changes in laws affecting the theatres of the province are contemplated, it has been intimated.

Kane Chosen President of the Kansas Society

A COMPLIMENT has been paid to that popular Kansan, Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures Corporation. The distinction received has been conferred by the Kansas Society of New York, of which body until recently Arthur S. Kane was not a member. It was, therefore, peculiarly pleasing and gratifying to him to have a committee from the society officially inform him of its desire to number him among its members and of its intention, contingent upon his willingness, to create him its president.

There had arisen in the Kansas Society a vacancy in the president's chair due to the death of its incumbent. It was necessary to elect a president for the unexpired term, ending January 20, 1919, with an eye also to the presidency incumbent during 1919 and ending January 29, 1920. To Mr. Kane was given a choice of the two terms. It must be explained that January 29 is the calendar date upon which the territory of Kansas was admitted into the Union as a state, and, therefore, the annual dinder of the Kansas Society is always celebrated upon this date. Over this dinner presides the president, whose term expires with that function. Having in mind the wonderful possibilities of a dinner in this present January, when two-thirds of the world is feeling its happiest over the consummation of a peace long desired, Mr. Kane chose the unexpired term rather than the forthcoming year of presidency. He has, therefore, been elected president of the Kansas Society, and will preside over its annual banquet on January 29.

The banquet will be held at the Hotel McAlpin and will number among its more than one hundred guests many persons of distinction in social, business and political circles.

Arthur S. Kane.

Mrs. Miller Reappointed on Ohio Censorship Board

MRS. MAUDE MURRAY MILLER, Columbus, chairman of the Ohio board of censors, has just been reappointed a member of that board for three years by the Industrial Commission with the approval and consent of Governor James M. Cox.

When the censorship bill became a law in May, 1913, Mrs. Miller was the first member appointed by Governor Cox on that board. She served through that administration and through the administration of Governor Willis. When Governor Cox was elected the second time he again appointed Mrs. Miller to this board. For the third time he has just appointed her for a term of three years.

When Judson Harmon was Governor he appointed Mrs. Miller a member of the Ohio board of women visitors to all the state benevolent and correctional institutions. Having been on the editorial staff of Governor Cox's paper in Springfield for five years he knew her qualifications, and although at the time of her first appointment as a member of the board of censors she was on the staff of the Columbus Dispatch, Governor Cox selected her as the first censor of the Ohio board.

Judson on the "Bounding Main."

Hanford C. Judson, a former member of the editorial staff of the Moving Picture World, writing from some American port, says that by the time his letter is delivered he expects to be on his way to the other side on the good ship Tivives, loaded with good things to eat for American soldiers still in France. Judson is the highest of the non-commissioned sailor electricians in charge of the installation of the Tivives, which consists of three generators and ten motors used to cool a cargo of sirloin and tenderloin steaks, lamb and pork chops, munitions for the goulosh guns, etc. His job is to watch the motors and keep the cool air circulating in the refrigerators. He does not expect to return until sometime in February or March.

FINDS BUSINESS GOOD IN JERSEY

World Man on His Travels Also Fails to Discover Evidence of Lessening Attendance by Reason of "Flu" Epidemic—Drops In at Hall and Blumenthal Houses

By Sam Spedon

TO investigate a few of the many communities of eastern New Jersey would give us only a limited angle of the situation and conditions. The same can be said of any part of the country, if we hit only the high spots. Therefore we carried our investigations a little further than those already published, with the following conclusions:

Every section has its own problem, but notwithstanding we are more than ever convinced that this part and all of New Jersey is doing a good business generally. We made particular inquiry about the effects of the "flu" upon the attendances at the theatres. The reply was always the same; no material or noticeable effect.

In some places there are many cases, but they are far from being epidemic, newspaper reports to the contrary notwithstanding. We gave particular attention to the several audiences during the performances and did not hear any noticeable coughing or sneezing to indicate that the theatres were mediums of contagion; quite the contrary. In one theatre we remained for two hours and did not hear a single cough or sneeze. All of which proves that motion pictures are easy marks, while the nervous guardians of hygiene are blind to all other places of public assembly.

Hoboken's Palace Is on Old Order.

At Hoboken we visited the Palace, 116 Washington street, seating 250. It is very much on the order of the old-time Nickelodeum with a very small lobby. Its location is good and it is neatly fitted up and well kept, but lacks facilities of great display necessary to attract passing notice. J. C. Le Strange is the manager, an affable man, who shows a program of the better class of pictures, all for the price of a dime. There was one thing that was not in accord with his pictures. The piano accompaniment did not jibe with the silence of the pictures, creating more jar than harmony. Mr. Le Strange informed us that business had not been good, but was picking up.

Two or three blocks beyond, on Washington street, is the U. S. Theatre, owned by the Frank H. Hall interests and managed by George J. Reister. The U. S. is one of the finest theatres in New Jersey, seating 1,300 and showing first run pictures, with every possible facility and finest equipment and management. This theatre plays to big business at 15 to 25 cents admission. It has been doing a steady business for four years without much variation. It is a big theatre with a big business. We found Mr. Reister to be an old acquaintance and a regular reader of the Moving Picture World. Although it was during the afternoon performance, the place was two-thirds full. We promised Mr. Reister to make another visit to his theatre.

Blumenthal's House Thoroughly Equipped.

We have heard a great deal about the National Theatre, under the personal direction of our friend Louis F. Blumenthal. We had often promised ourselves a visit to this theatre. We took the trolley up the incline to the Hill—Central avenue and Bleecker street, Jersey City. We were repaid for our time and trouble. We found a thoroughly equipped theatre, containing an orchestra and balcony, a fine orchestra and loge boxes. It was a matinee performance and very nearly filled to capacity—1,800. One of the exhibitors told us that the National has a clean-up, and it does look that way. The music, comprising a large organ and an eight-piece orchestra, is no small part of the show.

We asked a pedestrian if there was another moving picture theatre in the neighborhood and he pointed out the Hippodrome. Wending our way a block or two below on Central avenue we reached our objective point and found our old friend Dr. Charles Hespe, the owner and manager, standing outside. Immediately we were inducted to a somewhat unfinished but comfortable auditorium and were amazed to see a projection on the screen that was almost perfect. While this theatre only seats 295 it has a steady patronage that provides a good income. Dr. Hespe bought this property originally as an investment and built his home and place of business, where he conducts a dental office and underneath a store, which he has rented.

The lot is about 50 by 150, and just back of his theatre he has an airdome seating 500. By throwing open the back of the theatre he can project his pictures from the theatre booth to the screen in the back of the airdome with a throw of 143 feet. It is Dr. Hespe's intention to erect, as soon as the period of reconstruction advances, a large and up-to-date motion picture house upon this property.

The Princess, just below the Hippodrome, is a house of 300 seats, owned by J. J. Dunbar, who owns a theatre in Greenville. Mr. Sieboldt, the manager, seems to be a general utility man and also courteous. The Princess has its own patrons and a steady business. It is a neat little place and maintains a pianist and cashier. It is built on the lines of a Nickelodeum.

Summit Not Strong for Pictures.

Our next point of investigation was Summit, N. J., and there we visited the Lyric—800—under the management of H. C. Brown, who also owns theatres in Ridgefield Park and Jersey City. Mr. Brown, who books for his three theatres, was in New York, but we found Mrs. Brown, an able and charming substitute. The Lyric is a large and modern motion picture place and all that it implies. Summit is a place of about 10,000 inhabitants and yet business is far from good. The residents are of the wealthier class and do not patronize moving pictures with that eagerness they do in average communities and in manufacturing centers. They are too comfortable in their own homes, go to New York for their amusement, or are too busy with their numerous social attractions.

Holiday week was very good, and the children, home from school and colleges, made matinee performances better attended than usual. Mr. Brown has conducted a moving picture theatre for six and a-half years in Summit, and judging from his investment and overhead attached to such a modern and well conducted house he would have done better to have put his money in a more democratic community. Sunday opening is taboo in this town.

From Summit we went to South Orange, where they run two shows weekly in the schoolhouse, sometimes under the auspices of the Red Cross and sometimes under some school society.

Orange's Strand Has 900 Seats.

Our next step was Orange and East Orange, which are practically the one and the same place. The first moving picture theatre we saw was the Strand, now closed since it has been purchased by the Y. M. C. A., to be remodeled for that organization. The Bijou next caught our eye, and after climbing up a broad flight of stairs we met Walter M. Hoffman, the manager, who gave us most courteous attention and invited us to see part of the evening performance. This house is one of the Feshar and Shea interests, which own houses in New Brunswick and Bayonne.

While the entrance is not bad at the Bijou, the fact that the auditorium occupies the second floor is an objection to some persons. Even with this drawback it has a good patronage, and business for the year has been satisfactory. The holiday week has been very good on account of schools closing. On Saturday evening Mr. Hoffman runs vaudeville and pictures. This theatre is well kept, clean and orderly and contains 900 seats in orchestra and balcony.

Cuff & Shepherd Have Three Houses.

There are three other theatres in Orange and East Orange—the Colonial, the Palace and the Lyceum. The first is under the management of G. W. Cuff, the second of D. J. Shepherd, and the third of Richard A. Reilly. The Colonial and Palace are modern in every respect —about 1,300 capacity, beautiful organs and every convenience. The Lyceum is smaller. All are leased and owned by Cuff & Shepherd and all are doing splendid business.

If we can judge from the calibre of the managers the success of these theatres is not to be wondered at. We found all three managers to be gentlemen, and deserving of even greater prosperity.

We knew Mr. Shepherd from our Vitagraph days and we renewed our old acquaintance. The time was well spent in seeing the exhibition at the Palace and listening to the organ playing of William Y. Webbe. We spent an hour before train time with Mr. Reilly of the Lyceum.

Mr. Reilly has been in charge of the Lyceum only a few months—since its purchase by Cuff & Shepherd. It was somewhat neglected when he took hold of it and with the many improvements he has made and is still making he is building up a splendid clientele. He is an ingenious advertiser and considerable of a poet.

Mr. Reilly informed us that the Lyceum is the highest building in the Oranges. He has invented a signal code of different colored lights, which will announce the appearance at his theatre of the different stars. By this signal people far and near can tell what star is playing at the Lyceum.

Orange, on account of its nearness to Newark, where a great many go on Sunday, is in favor of Sunday opening.

Charles Manfre Killed In France By Germans

BELIEVED to have been the only American film exchange manager to meet death in the service of his country, Charles Manfre, former Fox Film Corporation exchange manager at

The Late Charles Manfre.

Omaha, was killed in action October 26, according to official notification from the War Department received this week by relatives in Kansas City. No details regarding the circumstances of his death have been received.

Mr. Manfre, who was one of the youngest exchange managers in the business, enlisted shortly after America's entrance into the war. After the usual period in cantonment in this country he was sent to France as a member of the Eighty-ninth Division.

Letters received from him while he was in the American training area on the western front expressed eagerness to get into action and do his share toward bringing an end to the misery which had held the world in its grip for years. That a bullet found him a few days before that misery was ended by the armistice is an especially poignant feature of his death.

In a letter written a short time before his death, Mr. Manfre expressed his eagerness to get at the Hun.

"I expect to go over the top very soon," said Manfre. "In fact, almost any day. You remember what I used to tell you in a joking way—what I was going to do to the Germans if I ever got the opportunity? Now I am going to get that chance, and, believe me, I feel much more determined in reality than I ever did when I just talked about it. We American boys over here realize that it is up to us to end this misery, and, if they all feel like myself, it will be Hell, Heaven or Home by Christmas."

The World makes a special effort to bring to small town managers the ideas on showmanship that are created by the inventive minds of progressive showmanship. The "small time" manager needs these helps and hints on advertising and picture promotion that The World brings to him. That's why The World is so strong "out in the sticks" where film salesmen seldom travel.

"The Great Romance" Will Be a Metro January Release

"THE GREAT ROMANCE," one of the four big Screen Classics, Inc. super-features made by the late Harold Lockwood just before his death, will be distributed by Metro in January.

The first of the four, "Pals First," which was recently released has enjoyed a great success throughout the country, and proved to the producers that the death of a great star in no way interferes with the popularity of his pictures but rather has a tendency to increase it.

"Pals First," which is a photo-version of Lee Wilson Dodd's dramatization of Francis Perry Elliott's novel of the same name, published by Harper and Brothers, and which ran for two years on Broadway as a stage play with William Courtney and Thomas A. Wise as the stars, at first had a peculiar psychology on audiences. Conscious of the fact that they were seeing one who had died at the height of his career, spectators experienced strange emotions for the first few feet of the story and then, made forgetful of all this by the ingratiating personality and ability of the star and the story he was interpreting, they found themselves taking more than an ordinary interest in the scenes being unfolded before their eyes.

Because of this and the demand of exhibitors and the public to see the other pictures Screen Classics Inc., and Mr. Rowland have not only decided to release all the star's productions completed before his untimely death but to also finish the as yet unnamed picture he was working on when he was taken sick.

Ending Will Be Kept as Surprise.

Three-fourths of it had been taken when Mr. Lockwood was ordered to his bed by his doctor. The story of the picture is both spectacular and dramatic. It was being directed by Edwin Carewe, who will also finish the production, the ending of which will be kept as a surprise for audiences.

"The Great Romance" is a romantic drama in which President Wilson's resolve to "make the world safe for democracy" forms the basis of the plot. Mr. Lockwood as the principal figure in the story, plays Rupert Enilo, a democratic young man who believes himself an American until he is told that he owes allegiance to a foreign crown and that his return to his native land is demanded by force of developing circumstances.

In Rugaria, his birthplace, Danilo becomes the center of a series of exploits.

A large cast supports Mr. Lockwood. Prominent in it are Ruby De Remer, Joseph Granby, Frank Currier, Helen Lindroth, Claire Granville, Louis Stern, Franklyn Hanna and J. P. Laffey. Henry Otto directed "The Great Romance," which was written by Finis Fox.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By A. H. GIEBLER

CALIFORNIA'S OPENING IS BRILLIANT

Gathering Representative of Los Angeles' Best Greets Messrs. Miller and Leonhardt December 24

THE opening of the California Theatre, Fred A. Miller and Harry Leonhardt's important contribution to the world's amusement enterprises, which occurred on the night of December 24, was an event of more than usual moment.

The California as a theatre may not be described here and now for lack of space, and because to speak understandingly of the embellishments, the upholstery, the mural decorations, the seating arrangements, the lighting and heating and ventilating—to dilate on the details of the foyer, the two grand staircases, the softly carpeted inclines that lead to the mezzanine floors, the bold and original architectural conception that does away with the old-time stage and proscenium, the thirty-four piece orchestra, the great organ, would require consultation with an architect, an expert on interior decorations, an electrician, a sanitary engineer, a musician and a sybarite.

It may be said, however, that the house is a bit more modern, a bit more luxurious, a bit more original, and a bit more beautiful than any other theatre in the country because it was built at a later date than any other house of its size and type in the country.

The California, to be brief, is a fine example of the upward trend in theatre construction and will stand as a monument to the power and permanency of the screen as an educating and entertaining factor of the first rank, as well as a monument to the enterprise of its promoters and builders.

Program of Real Variety.

The opening program, which was of great variety and great beauty, was arranged in a series of nine units. There were pictures, songs and musical numbers rendered by noted artists, and a number of beautiful and inspiring tableaux of a symbolical character.

The orchestra was under the direction of Nicola Donatelli, and a mixed quartette sang "California," a song composed and dedicated to the theatre by Arthur Kay.

The picture part of the program had Douglas Fairbanks' new picture, "Arizona," for a feature, selected Pathe News views, and a Billy Parsons comedy.

A list of those attending would read like a Who's Who of the social, artistic, financial and professional world. Every star from every studio was there, as well as local society, from representatives of the old Spanish families to the younger set, lawyers, doctors, bankers, soldiers, sailors, and a great number of writers, artists, singers, and musicians of world-wide reputation who spend their winters in the city. In fact everybody that was anybody at all went down to the California and congratulated Harry Leonhardt and Fred Miller on their achievement.

A wonderful and beautiful assortment of flowers and set pieces almost filled the lower lobby, and among them was a pair of ferocious man eating cacti ten feet in height, labeled "A bouquet from Doug."

The program was scheduled to start at 8.30, but because the house needed so much inspection from the audience, and because filmdom held little receptions here and there in the lobbies and foyers and parlors the show did not get under way until long after nine. Many who had intended to just look in for a few minutes and then hurry away to their Xmas Eve festivities succumbed to the allurements of the program and the ravishing strains of the music and stayed until the last flicker on the screen.

"Mystery Girl" Feature Finished.

The feature which Charles A. Taylor has been making with the "Mystery Girl" has been completed and is now being edited and titled at the Edendale studio. While no definite arrangements have been made for the picture's release it will probably be distributed on the state rights plan.

Two Years More of Pictures.

Carmel Myers will not forsake the screen for the stage when her present contract with Universal expires. She has decided upon two years more of studio work, during which time she will finish certain educational courses under private tutors that have been mapped out for her by her parents.

Doug Leads Savings Stamps Parade.

A War Savings Stamps drive to bring Los Angeles sales up to the quota set for the city was inaugurated last Saturday by Douglas Fairbanks, who rode on the head of an elephant at the head of the parade composed of more than five hundred volunteer Baby Bond salesmen. The parade marched through the down town streets, breaking up near the Alexandria Hotel, where Fairbanks made a stirring patriotic address to a large crowd of prospective "limit" buyers and others.

Grauman Organ Formally Introduced.

The new $50,000 Hope-Jones pipe organ that has recently been installed in the Grauman Theatre was formally introduced to the patrons of that house on December 23 by Jesse Crawford, organist, with a specially attractive holiday program. The organ is the last word in modern symphonic instruments, possessing a full complement of reeds, brass, diapasons, flutes and strings. By means of a late discovery of the organ makers, Doug Welcomes Rothapfel to California.

a modern piano can also be played from the organ console.

Theatre Safe Blasted.

A large safe on the balcony of the Palace Theatre at 318 West Seventh street was blown open some time during the night of Sunday, December 22, and $700 in cash and Liberty Bonds taken by burglars, who entered by a side door, blew the safe open with dynamite, using the hangings and draperies of the house to deaden the sound of the explosion. A number of burglars' tools, brace and bit were found near the safe.

H. B. Breckwedgel, manager of the theatre, reported the robbery to the police early next morning, but at this writing the thieves have not been caught. The method of the burglary is similar to a robbery of the safe at the Colonial Theatre on South Hill street just a few days ago.

Plans to Build Photoplay Palace.

D. J. Grauman, owner of Grauman's Theatre, is planning to build another theatre in the heart of the downtown district of Los Angeles. According to an announcement made by Mr. Grauman, plans are being drawn for the structure, which will be the largest of its kind west of Chicago. The house will seat 3,500 persons, and will be so constructed that it may be used for dramatic and musical stage productions in the event that motion pictures lose their attraction for the public. Deals are now under way to procure a suitable site for the theatre, which must be easily accessible to all the main street car lines of the city.

London Wants Outlaw Film.

Al Jennings is leaving for New York soon with his biographical film, "The Lady of the Dugout," which is booked for an engagement at a Broadway playhouse. Jennings may take his film to London before he returns West, as he has received an offer by cable from an English firm who want to show the picture in Philharmonic Hall.

Art Director Dies.

G. Harold Percival, art director at the Thomas H. Ince studios, died of influenza on December 14. Mr. Percival has designed the settings for a great number of recent Ince productions, his first work being the sets for "The Flame of the Yukon."

Studio Shorts

FRANK LLOYD, who directed William Farnum in a number of his recent pictures, is now in charge of a Gladys Brockwell feature; and Lynn Reynolds, who has been working with Miss Brockwell, is directing a Peggy Hyland picture.

Jack Gilbert is playing the part of a hunchback in Maurice Tourneur's picture, "Drury Lane," now being produced at Culver City.

Tom Santschi is taking the heavy role in the new Henry Walthall picture for National.

Princess Pat is the name that was bestowed upon Patricia, daughter of Lee Moran, upon her first visit to Universal City, the day she was a month old.

Frank Condon is now special scenario writer for Doug. Fairbanks, and is at work on an original play with a hero that is just the right type for Doug.

Ed. Durling, publicity representative for a number of film players before he enlisted in the army, has been mustered out and is back in Los Angeles.

With the news that Olive Thomas had signed up with Select Pictures, came the sadder news to her husband, Jack Pickford, that Olive had to be taken to a New York hospital on account of a severe case of influenza.

Niles Welch is leading man for Enid Bennett in the new play written for her by John Lynch.

Forrest Stanley is working opposite Shirley Mason in a picture being filmed at the Morosco studio.

Allan Watt, until recently a captain in the army, and husband of the late Myrtle Gonzales, is assisting Douglas Gerrard in directing a new Fritzi Brunette picture at Universal City.

Frank Keenan has a new personal representative in Mrs. Harriette Higbee, a prominent clubwoman of Los Angeles, who was formerly an actress.

Jerome Storm, who was eulogized recently in the Los Angeles press for his fine direction of a certain picture, wrote and thanked the editor warmly for his nice notice—then admitted that Irvin Willat had directed that particular picture, not he.

Alma Rubens has begun on her first production for the Robertson-Cole organization. The picture will be a film version of Leona Dalrymple's prize novel, "Diane of the Green Van."

Clara Horton, who played with Jack Pickford in the "Tom Swayer" pictures, is again cast opposite Jack in his first picture for the First National Exhibitors.

Vic. Potel and Kate Lester, of "Calamity Ann" fame, each have a good comedy role in Harry Carey's new picture, "The Outcasts of Poker Flat."

Bert Lytell began work at the Metro studio in Hollywood last Monday on "The Blind Man's Eyes," under direction of John Ince.

F. W. Thring, managing director of the J. C. Williamson films of Australia, visited the Goldwyn plant at Culver City as the guest of Samuel Goldfish during the holidays.

Frances Marion, former scenarioist for Mary Pickford, writes that she was the first American woman to reach the Rhine.

Ben Wilson has gone to New York on the business of placing an independent production made by him recently at Universal City.

Owen Moore is once more a member of the Los Angeles film colony. Owen has just returned from a six months' stay in New York.

The new Ince Studios at Culver City were ready for occupancy on January 1st.

Madlaine Traverse has purchased a twenty-acre orange ranch near Redlands, Cal., which she intends to use as a resting place between film productions.

Wallace Reid drove one of the fastest racing automobiles in town on the Ascot speedway early in the morning of December 23, for scenes in a coming picture. Director James Cruze invited the public to witness the race and incidently play the part of spectators in the film.

Kathleen Kirkham is playing an important role in the Billie Rhodes picture now on the fire at National.

D. W. Griffith personally invited the Great Lakes football team to see "The Greatest Thing in Life" at Clune's Auditorium, while they were in Los Angeles for the New Year's game with the San Pedro Marines.

George Beban was one of the volunteer War Savings Stamps salesmen during the recent drive to put Los Angeles over the top in its 1918 sales.

Bessie Barriscale has just had her life insured for half a million dollars.

Will M. Ritchey, writer for Famous Players-Lasky, had an active mind during his recent spell of flu. He claims that while he was laid up he doped out one of the best screen stories he has ever written.

Eddie Sutherland has been discharged from the Royal Canadian Flyers and has returned to town to resume work in motion pictures.

Claire Du Brey has been supporting Tom Moore in a new Goldwyn feature.

Mutual Salesmen Present Kirkpatrick with Watch

TO mark his second anniversary as a member of the executive office force of the Mutual, members of field force and home office staff presented A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager, with a beautiful white-gold, diamond-studded watch on December 23. The watch was a full jeweled Howard movement, double thin and beautifully cased. On the back of the case is a diamond studded "K."

The presentation was made at Mr. Kirkpatrick's home in Chicago, where he was ill, by S. J. Rollo, sales manager; S. T. Stephens, general superviser, and O. R. Hanson, exchange supervisor of Exhibitors Mutual. With it was presented a signed testimonial of confidence from every branch in the organization.

Mr. Kirkpatrick entered the home office on December 23, 1916, as a member of the sales organization and became respectively assistant sales manager, sales manager and assistant general manager.

He went to the home office from the Portland branch, where he had been manager. He entered the company's employ in September, 1915, as district salesman for the Seattle, Portland and Spokane territories. He went to Metro for a few months as branch manager at Portland, whence he returned to the Mutual organization as Portland branch manager.

Mr. Kirkpatrick is a native Chicagoan and an engineer by profession. He is a University of Illinois man and attained the post of chief civil engineer for the Illinois Steel Company when his family's health compelled him to go West. He was consulting engineer for the city of Denver and for the city of Portland, and entered the motion picture business in the West through the studio, where he became a producer after a period as a director. He left the production for the distribution field as a state right dealer in the Northwest.

His appointment as assistant general manager of the Mutual was made July 15, 1918, and upon the reorganization into Exhibitors Mutual he was retained in the same capacity in general charge of the exchange system.

Universal Offers to Aid Uncle Sam.

The Department of Commerce of the United States Government has just written and thanked Harry Levey, manager of the industrial department of the Universal, for his offer of co-operation contained in the following wire which he sent B. S. Cutler, chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce: "We will turn our entire organization over to you to help in your work of acquainting other countries with American-made goods and manufacturing methods through motion pictures." The Universal already has an arrangement with the Government whereby many of its activities are depicted in the Screen Magazine.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

IT'S Merry Christmas time in Movieland. Wassail bowls are overflowing; true, our wassail is not what it was before the Gandier liquor amendment restricted the influence of Al K. Hall in the manufacture and concoction of our liquid refreshments.

Proprietors of wassailterias have much explaining to do in order to satisfy some of the recent arrivals from the East who ask:

"Why is a punch bowl without a punch in it?"

However, it is Christmas just the same. Yulecalyptus logs are blazing in the bungalow grates. This is not a poetic flight. Many people have long suspected that conflagrations of a mild nature might be kindled in bungalow fireplaces, and this Christmas, H. Herbert Van Loan, who is a daring empiricist as well as one of our best little scenario writers, decided to try the experiment.

After filling the grate to the gunwales with three sticks of wood measuring two inches in diameter and fourteen inches in length, and stuffing a number of unsold scenarios between the interstices, Herbie notified the Hollywood Fire Department and bravely touched a match to the pyre.

Such Is Influence of Bad Example.

Now everybody is doing it. Smoke is seen pouring in dense volumes from many roofs. This has added much to the Christmas spirit. To have a fire right in the house, and not to be compelled to go outside to get warm is indeed a pleasure that is appreciated by any one who has spent a winter in Southern California.

I feared that Christmas and her various demands would curtail activities at the studios, but no—things were humming along with the usual hum.

I found Donald Crisp with a big company out on the Lasky lot, making a play called "The Poor Boob," with Bryant Washburn as the Boob.

Donald is still limping a little from the broken ankle he got from boxing with Kid McCoy in a recent Griffith film, but proud as Punch of the fact that he is the only non-professional that ever knocked the redoubtable Kid off his pins.

Just how a boxer can break his ankle by hitting a pugilist on the bean is not quite clear, but that is the way it happened.

Surely "Wash" Is a Nice Clean Name.

Wanda Hawley was playing opposite "Wash," as they used to call Bryant around the Essanay studio in Chicago. I don't know whether the coast colony has adopted the nickname or not, but it's a nice clean name.

Miss Hawley was dreadfully afraid she was going to have the flu or something; and to tell the truth and at the same time perpetrate an example of what Thomas Hood said was the lowest form of wit, Wanda was looking rather wan.

Mary Thurman plays a comedy part in "The Poor Boob," and poor Mary! In the earlier action of the story she is her own svelte self, 125 pounds or thereabouts—and then along about reel three she has to tip the stillyards at 200 pounds.

Of course in the story she has six months and lots of butter and eggs to help along, but Donald Crisp says he can's wait that long to shoot the picture; in fact Mary has got just about three days, and if anybody has a reliable anti-lean recipe, please send it to Mary.

Of course there must be a reliable antidote to go with the anti-lean prescription, as Mary says she does not want to stay in the hefty class any longer than necessary.

How Raymond Makes Up His Pants.

Raymond Hatton was there, and I had to be introduced to him all over again because I didn't recognize him in a rube make-up.

Since Mr. Hatton is a recognized master of make-up, I thought it would be a good thing to interview him on the subject of his art, but he was modest and reticent, as are all great artists, and I was forced to be satisfied with some data furnished by Clarence Geldart, who was a listener to our conversation. The information is very valuable, and I pass it on for the benefit of others.

Mr. Geldart says that when Hatton wants to appear in a pair of trousers that have seen better days, and knowing as he does that nothing imparts the air of age and decrepitude to a pair of pants so much as large worn spots on their rear elevation, he proceeds to fix them in the following manner.

He first spreads the trousers out on the floor; then he inveigles a boy from the prop room, and persuades him to sit on the broad part of the trousers by promising him a nice ride. After the boy is duly ensconced on the pants Mr. Hatton grasps the legs of the garments, draws them up over his shoulders and dashes around the room at such a mad rate of speed that the boy is unable to get off. After twenty-five revolutions the pants look like the Kaiser's reputation.

As this process has not been patented, all are free to use it. It might also be of interest to add that because of the splintery character of the floor of Mr. Hatton's dressing room, he has never been able to get the services of the same boy twice.

Feeling all "het up" with a glow of pleasure that always warms up my system when I know that I have collected some valuable information for the good of the industry, I left Lasky and proceeded to the Metro plant.

Joe Engel Promises a Miracle.

I had been to Metro but a short time before this, on which occasion Joseph Engel and A. S. Le Vino had directed my attention to a large plot of ground covered with lumber, bricks, lime, laths and plaster, that looked about as much like a section of Olathe, Kansas, after the annual cyclone, as anything else.

This was referred to in prideful tones as "Our new studio."

"Over there," declaimed Mr. Engel, "will be the administration buildings and executive offices. Then comes fifty dressing rooms for stars and other players. To the left are the stages, three of them, big enough to work ten companies at the same time. Beyond that the electrical generating department, carpenters' shops, restaurant, four projection rooms, film vaults, cutting rooms, scenic department, everything that goes with a modern plant of the most approved type."

"What time next spring," I asked, "do you expect the plant to be finished?"

Mr. Engel pondered a moment.

"We ought to be shooting inside of two weeks," he said.

I gave him one of my best sharp and penetrating glances to see if he was kidding me. No, he was earnest and called studio manager Butler and Ralph Godfrey, who is by way of being the technical director at the plant, from where they were brooding over a set of blue prints, to confirm his seemingly rash statement.

Somebody Was Being Kidded.

I have seen so many structures that gave great promise of going up in a hurry, hesitate and linger along in a heartbreaking manner; and while I was satisfied that these Metroites were not trying to kid me, I went away from there with the conviction that they were kidding themselves.

On the day of which I write, however, they were shooting in the new studio, and I hereby offer apologies to Mr. Engel for having grievously wronged him, and I also wish to hand a bouquet to his able assistants, Godfrey and Butler, for their act in imitating the late Aladdin in the building line.

I found three companies working in the new Metro studio. George D. Baker was directing May Allison, Robert Ellis and Frank Currier in "Peggy Does Her Darndest."

Nazimova Making "The Red Lantern."

Hale Hamilton was making "Johnny on the Spot," and one-half of the immense closed stage was turned into a Chinese setting for the big Nazimova production, "The Red Lantern."

There was a complete Chinese home, a chapel with a real organ, a Chinese mission school filled with thirty-five or forty pupils, ranging in age from little Chinks of three to a woman who looked old enough to have been Confucius' grandmother.

Albert Capellani was directing the scene in the school room with the assistance of an interpreter. Noah Beery, who plays the part of Sam Wang, a villainous Eurasian, with the best make-up I have ever seen, was doing the heavy stuff.

They rehearsed the scene once; then Capellani told the interpreter what he thought of the Chinese actors, and the interpreter related it to them with great detail.

Then a Chinese woman came out of the scene and stood to one side. I looked at her and beheld what may be termed a phenomenon of art, the woman in the set had been one thing, and while I looked at her she became something else.

Before the camera she was Mahlee, a half-cast girl and a teacher of Chinese children in a mission school—absolutely and completely that. Now, she laid aside the character as one puts aside a cloak, and became, of course, Nazimova.

CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL AT THE EUREKA

Community Singing by Choir of 250 Voices and Marine Band of 30 Pieces Held in Philadelphia House

ON the northern outskirts of Philadelphia, far removed from the beaten path of travel and seldom visited by film men, is a neighborhood picture theatre. In appearance it differs little from the other first class picture houses, possessing modern appointments and showing good pictures, accompanied by good music. Occasionally, however, something happens at the Eureka Community Theatre that sets the entire neighborhood agog and penetrates to the downtown film district. Such an event was the Community Christmas Festival held on Christmas morning after midnight which was attended by over 1,200 persons, who sang Christmas carols led by a massed choir of 250 voices and a marine band of 30 pieces.

Under the auspices of the Eureka Community Theatre in co-operation with the Emergency Aid, a monster community Christmas festival had been planned for Christmas Eve at midnight in Hunting Park, the large public pleasure ground on which the theatre borders. Hundreds of placards had been posted and displayed in the downtown shopping district and in the municipal buildings. Announcement of the affair had been read from the pulpits of many churches and in the schools. The police officials had prepared to handle a crowd of 15,000 from all parts of the city. Then came the miserable weather of the day before Christmas, with its continuous downpour of rain throughout the day and night, and it was decided to hold the festival inside the theatre, everyone to be admitted free.

Place Crowded by Midnight.

At 10:30 in the evening the people began to gather and by midnight the place was crowded. An address was delivered by Dr. Lauer, a prominent war worker, who kept the crowd in continued good humor by his clever narration of funny stories. This was followed by several appropriate selections on the theatre organ. No sooner had the organ playing ceased when the beautiful strains of the Adeste Fidelis were heard and a procession composed of a band of Jackies from the Philadelphia Navy Yard and led by Lieut. Albert Hoxie, the city's most noted community song leader, swept into view of the theatre. Pursuing the time-honored custom, the procession stopped at every house in the neighborhood that had displayed a lighted candle in the window. Reaching the theatre they stopped just long enough to be "shot" by the newsaper photographers and filed into the theatre.

Crowd Sings Christmas Carols.

As the band and choir marched down the aisle to the stage a mighty roar went up from the throats of the assembled crowd, the cheering continuing for some time. More photographs were taken, and then, following several selections by the band, the audience was asked to join in the singing of Christmas carols, printed copies of which had been previously distributed. It was after two o'clock in the morning when the audience streamed out of the theatre and repaired to their homes, leaving the members of the band and the choir to partake of refreshments served by the Emergency Aid.

Manager Barrist, of the Eureka Community Theatre, when interviewed the following day intimated that he expected shortly to stage several other community affairs similar to the Christmas festival. One of these is an elaborate production of the Passion Play which will enlist the services of a picked choir of 100 voices and some of the city's most noted soloists. Mr. Barrist has some decidedly original views on the relation of the motion picture theatre to its patrons.

"To assume that the neighborhood theatre which enters so largely into the life of the community is a business enterprise only is a mistaken idea," he declared. "The picture theatre should be the social and intellectual centre of the community just as the church is the spiritual centre. Each has its sphere, which is entirely distinct, and does not conflict with the other. I do not mean by that that I shall try, at my theatre, to remould in a day tastes that have been years in the making, but I can create among my patrons a demand for the really worth-while pictures and music by acquainting them with the merits of such entertainment. In our community, the Eureka is the leader in the encouragement and development of every worth-while endeavor."

James Bryson Returns As Universal Manager

AFTER an absence of several years James V. Bryson has returned to the Minneapolis Universal exchange as manager. Mr. Bryson was Universal's first Minneapolis executive, and it is doubtful if there is another film man in the Northwest territory better acquainted with exhibitors and conditions as is Mr. Bryson. Leaving the Minneapolis Universal exchange a little over three years ago Mr. Bryson became Universal manager at Los Angeles. A year later he returned to Minneapolis to manage a theatre equipment company in which he had a financial interest. After a year he disposed of these interests to the United Theatre Equipment Company and entered the state rights film field with "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and "Come Through." He assumed charge of the Minneapolis Universal office, December 23.

Sydney Cohen Resigns from Affiliated Distributors

SYDNEY S. COHEN, president of the New York State League of Exhibitors, and one of the organizers of the original Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, this week announced that he had tendered his resignation as chairman of the board of directors of the units associated with that organization to the directors associated with him in the original formation of the corporation.

Differences over matters of policy and changes in the manner of the formation of the organization are given by Mr. Cohen as the reasons for his withdrawal. While expressing his faith in the ultimate development of co-operative booking, Mr. Cohen declares that the movement at the present time has been so altered from the original purposes of its sponsors that he can no longer risk the embarressment which he might suffer through the failure of exhibitors to understand his true position with any existing booking enterprise.

Mr. Cohen, when questioned regarding his resignation, said he had nothing to add to his letter of resignation. "I have nothing to add to it," he declared, "save that I am still deeply interested in the idea of co-operative booking. It is the biggest thought which has come into the industry within the past year, if carried out for the purpose of helping the exhibitor." Mr. Cohen will busy himself with his theatre interests.

Western P. A.'s Try Broadway Brands.

Western press agents of filmdom had a "good showing" on Broadway last week. No less than four publicity men from Hollywood disported about the once-again white way and viewed the tall buildings in wonderment. They were Harry Carr, who puts pieces in the papers about Mack Sennett and his Paramount comedies—and who takes the stills of those bathing girls; W. E. Keefe, who is not an out-and-out press agent, his title being production manager for D. W. Griffith, but who supervises the publicity work of that organization; Carl Robinson, formerly publicity man for Charles Chaplin and now an ex-lieutenant, and Ken O'Hara, who used to send out stories about well known film players; and every one who has handled them knows there were none better.

Carr and Keefe came on from California together. Robinson has just been honorably discharged from the army, as has O'Hara. All four expect to go back to California within a few weeks.

No exhibitor has a lobby so small that he cannot make it attractive, and at small cost. Paint costs little as compared with results, and you can at least have the place look clean. Then go a step further and fix up a little. It costs more thought than cash, but it pays cash in return.

ASSOCIATES GIVE CROMELIN A WATCH

In Responding Inter-Ocean President Tells How He Shifted from Phonographs to Films

PAUL H. CROMELIN of Inter-Ocean revealed this week why he resigned the vice presidency of the Columbia Phonograph Company to become a motion picture exporter. The occasion was the presentation of a gold watch by the employes of the Inter-Ocean to their president on Tuesday, December 24, in commemoration of his second Christmas in that office. Gus Schlesinger, of the sales department, made the presentation speech and Mr. Cromelin replied.

"This reminds me of another occasion fourteen years ago, when, following the St. Louis Exposition, the staff of the Columbia Phonograph Company presented me with a watch," said Mr. Cromelin. "It was by way of recognition of our success in St. Louis, where we had taken more awards for the Columbia Phonograph than our chief competitors received. We were very happy about this outcome, and I am sure that all of us were convinced that of all modern devices for the entertainment of the masses the invention we were exploiting was the greatest and none had greater faith in the phonograph that day than myself.

"If someone would have told me then that a decade later I would be enlisted with another invention for public entertainment, and that I would consider it a more wonderful invention, and with greater educational possibilities, I would have told the speaker that he was making a foolish prediction.

"Still, hardly three years after that gathering in the Columbia office so similar to this, I was interested in the screen and the pictures that flickered forth upon it. And with the years this interest grew until I finally found myself voyaging to London as the Edison motion picture manager there and my return with its consequent enlistment with the late Henry J. Brock at Inter-Ocean followed."

The presentation of the gold watch took place in the main business office on the third floor of Inter-Ocean Building, 218 West Forty-second street.

Inter-Ocean Dines Employes.

On Saturday night, December 28, Mr. Cromelin and the officers of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation gave a dinner and vaudeville performance to the employes at the jungle room, Healy's. It was a semi-private affair and none but Inter-Oceanites or members of their families were on hand. The list of attendants included President and Mrs. Paul H. Cromelin, George W. Newgass, vice president; Frederic Neuman, secretary and treasurer; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Herzog, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Neuman, Millard Ellison, Mr. and Mrs. M. S. Epstein, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Lowens, George Curtis, Mr. and Mrs. Brookes, Henry Gladstone, Mayer Schlesinger, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene H. Kaufman, J. L. Kempner, Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Foster, Gus. Schlesinger, Louis Brock, Mr. and Mrs. Bert Adler, Mr. and Mrs. Al. Hartlieb, Mr. and Mrs. Martin G. Cohn, G. Loulo, Mr. and Mrs. Penzer, Mr. Eisenberg, Miss E. Hart, Miss I. Schulhof, Miss L. Schulhof, Miss I. Epstein, Miss V. Benson, Miss P. Cohn, Miss C. Quirk, Miss M. Brodsky, Miss M. Bornstein, Miss M. Bonwit, Miss P. Scherer, Miss May, Miss H. Miller, Miss S. Rosenblum, Miss Hahn, M. Moran, Mr. O'Brien and Mr. and Mrs. Blumberg.

Speeches were barred, but M. S. Epstein gave a burlesque account of the rise of Inter-Ocean, and a song was delivered by the diners to the following words:

"Pack Up Your Films in Your Old Tin Can; or, Don't Talk Business To-Night." By Quirk and Adler. Stolen from "Pack Up Your Troubles in Your Old Kit Bag." The theft suggested by Eugene Heavins! Kaufman.

Pack up your films in your old tin can,
You're one of Inter-Ocean's happy crowd; smile, boys, that's the style;
What's the use of worrying? "P. H. C."
says 't'aint worth while.
Pack up your films in your old tin can,

EXHIBITORS' MUTUAL MOVES TO NEW YORK

Establishes Headquarters at 1600 Broadway Change Is a Geographical One, Says Official

GENERAL offices of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation are now on Broadway. Forty hours after desks were closed at the old Mutual headquarters, 220 South State street, Chicago, they were reopened and business resumed without interruption at 1600 Broadway, New York. It was Saturday noon, December 28, that business stopped at the Chicago headquarters and at 9 o'clock Monday morning, December 30, the offices were reopened and in operation in New York.

Quarters had been arranged in advance on the fourth floor of the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway. The Broadway side of the floor will henceforth be the executive offices. The New York exchange is on the tenth floor of the same building.

Moved to Chicago in 1916.

Decision to remove the headquarters of the company from Chicago to New York was reached by the new officers of the corporation soon after the reorganization of the Mutual Film Corporation under the name of Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation. The moving of the various departments to New York was effected under the direction of A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager of the company.

It was in August of 1916 that the Mutual Film Corporation moved from New York to Chicago. The company was organized in New York and, practically from its inception, had been quartered at 71 West 23d street.

"There has been a very practical advantage in the Chicago location," said William J. Clark, president of the company, in discussing the removal, "but the nature of the motion picture business and our news plans for expansion made it advisable that our headquarters be in New York.

"Chicago is, geographically, a logical point of distribution, but New York is, beyond question, the capital of the motion picture industry and the advantages of being in the very center of the business outweighted the advantage of Chicago as a central point of distribution.

Change a Geographical One.

"The removal of our executive offices to New York is one of the initial steps in our plans for expansion on a large scale. It brings our executive office force in much more intimate touch with the industry and closer to our producing affiliations."

"We are on Broadway because Broadway is the place for the headquarters of a national film distributing organization," commented Mr. Kirkpatrick. "The change is purely geographical. Our Chicago exchange remains at 220 South State street. The personnel of the home office force has come with us almost intact. The change was made without a hitch and without a day's delay in business."

The heads of departments who came to New York with Mr. Kirkpatrick are: Howard F. Turrill, film and accessories; S. J. Rollo, sales manager; H. F. Juergens, auditor; Joe Merrick, who becomes a member of the sales directing force, and Joseph O'Sullivan, in charge of music service. Colvin W. Brown, director of publicity, has had his headquarters in New York for some time.

Controlling interest in the Mutual Film Corporation was acquired in October by a group of exhibitors headed by W. J. Clark, H. A. Brink, and H. F. Cornelius, who reorganized the company as Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation and effected new arrangements for productions.

Gold Coin Company to Produce.

The Gold Coin Motion Picture Company, Inc., a New York corporation, with $100,000 capital, has been formed. The officers are: M. Resnicoff, president and treasurer; Sidney M. Goldin, vice president and director general; M. May, secretary; board of directors, Frank M. Wandell of Wandell & Wandell, 261 Broadway; James A. Farrell of James A. Farrell Real Estate Company, 826 Nostrand avenue, Brooklyn.

The company will produce features ranging from five reels up, under the personal direction and supervision of Sidney M. Goldin, one of the pioneers of the motion picture industry. Mr. Goldin has produced features for the Universal, even as far back as 1913, when three reelers were in vogue.

In the first production for the Gold Coin Company, Mr. Goldin will produce a seven part drama of psychological and timely interest. Two prominent Broadway stars have been engaged and Mr. Goldin will be surrounded by the best of technical talent.

A studio has been leased for a term of three years in the vicinity of New York, where Mr. Goldin will commence work on his first production about the first of February, 1919.

SELECT MOVES HICKS TO CINCINNATI

Former Seattle Manager Will Be Succeeded by Albert W. Eden—Both Have Made Records

TWO important changes in its sales force are announced by Select in the transfer of Harry H. Hicks, until recently branch executive in the Seattle territory, to be manager of Select's Cincinnati branch, and the concurrent announcement that Albert W. Eden has become Select's branch manager at Seattle.

Mr. Hicks' assumption of the management of the Cincinnati territory marks one more advance in the rapid progress which has been made by this branch executive since he cast his lot with Select at the organization of that corporation. Mr. Hicks started, at the beginning, as manager of Select's Los Angeles branch. A few months later we find him in control of the more important San Francisco exchange. Last October he took another step forward and another trip northward on the Pacific coast and established headquarters in Seattle, with control of the large Seattle territory.

Now Mr. Hicks has advanced again, and has been given the administration of the large and rich territory of which Cincinnati is the administrative center. Select's business in Cincinnati is in a most promising condition, and the nomination of Mr. Hicks to be Select's manager at that post is in the nature of another promotion for the man who in scarcely eighteen months has earned these several promotion with Select.

Pending his arrival at Cincinnati shortly after the new year, Mr. Hicks is making a brief visit to the home office, having arrived in New York Monday for a series of conferences with General Manager Arthur S. Kane. Select officials feel that Harry Hicks will make as brilliant a success of the Cincinnati territory as he has of the three Pacific Coast branches over which he has previously had charge.

Eden Valuable Acquisition.

In Albert W. Eden, who has assumed management of the Seattle office, Select feels that it has obtained a most valuable man, one who has ever specialized in Pacific coast salesmanship. For the past four years, and up to the time of his joining the Select forces, Mr. Eden has been with Fox Film Corporation, and latterly has rolled up a splendid record as their branch manager for the Pacific northwest.

Mr. Eden, who is only twenty-nine years old, can be recorded as being personally known to every exhibitor in the northwestern states. His four years' consecutive services on the sales force of one corporation speaks eloquently of those qualities which have caused Select to choose him as the executive for its highly important Seattle territory. Mr. Eden is a clean-cut business man of that modern school which writes its creed in results rather than in promises. Previous to entering the film business he studied law in Chicago, afterward engaging in the business of selling bonds and mortgages—which no doubt gave him his schooling in salesmanship. At Seattle Mr. Eden succeeds Harry H. Hicks, Select's newly-appointed Cincinnati branch manager.

Standard Slide Corporation Holds Enjoyable Banquet

THE holiday dinner tendered by the Standard Slide Corporation to its employes and a few invited guests at the Cafe Boulevard, New York City, on Saturday evening, December 28, was a most enjoyable affair. Previous to the dinner, the new quarters of the corporation at 209 W. 48th Street, were opened for inspection. The plant occupies two spacious floors and contains reception room, executive offices, stenographic department, two photographic or dark rooms, four developing rooms, a stock room, a distributing room and a shipping department, also an art department of considerable size with an unlimited capacity. Some idea of the size of the institution can be gained from the following list of officers and employes who attended the dinner:

H. T. Edwards, President; H. A. Rosenberg, Vice-president; J. H. Hallberg, Vice-president; Nat Cherin, Treasurer; Joseph F. Coufal, Secretary and General Manager; J. Robert Rubin, Attorney; Gertrude Album, Anna L. Bailey, Agnes Bauer, Theresa Bauer, Anna V. Beck, Helen Bogumil, Helen Cashman, Gertrude Cashman, Rose Coufal, Beatrice De John, Fay Engel, Stella Engel, Madeline Foxall, Katherine Frawley, Clara B. Gatch, Loretta Grimes, Marcella Grimes, May Hopkins, Ester Koffler, Elizabeth G. Levins, Florence R. Ludder, Sarah Oberlander, Jennie Pine, Mary Pomillio, Katherine Raboni, Elizabeth Rowell, Anna Schwartz, Grace Walsh, Gretchen Weitze, George Appel, Charles Buettner, Irving Beerman, Joseph Beerman, Louis Bernstein, Joseph F. Coufal, Emilio Diaz, Nat Cherin, Arthur Feinberg, Sidney Fader, Samuel Freeman, Sam Golden, David H. Harris, Louis Horowitz, Samuel Leon, Richard Leggett, Thomas Martino, Morris Miller, Alfred Reiss, Leon Rose, Herman A. Rosenberg, Ambrose Ryan, Winsor H. Scofield, Harry R. Sheehan, Henry Steigelman, Charles Stern, A. Romero Valenzuela, Thomas G. Wiley, David Zablodowsky.

During the serving of the excellent meal a musical program regaled the guests.

The volunteer artists who contributed to the entertainment are members of the corporation and were very little short of professional. In addition to the music illustrated slides with the words of the songs were thrown upon a screen, enabling the guests to join in the chorus, which they did with a vim.

Joseph F. Coufal, who acted as master of ceremonies, introduced the following speakers: H. T. Edwards, Nat Cherin, J. H. Hallberg, A. K. Greenland, J. Robert Rubin, David H. Harris, H. A. Rosenberg, Thomas G. Wiley, Joseph F. Coufal, Sam Spedon, Mrs. Mitchell Harris.

After the addresses and stories the floor was cleared for dancing, which continued until a late hour.

The Standard Slide Corporation is the outgrowth of the old Novelty Slide Company, established by Joseph F. Coufal, originally located at 57th Street near Sixth Avenue, removed to 20 E. 14th Street, occupying a back hall room. Afterwards it went to 71 W. 23rd Street and is now located on 48th Street.

WHERE IS SHOWMANSHIP'S REAL TEST?

President of Hiller & Wilk Says It Is in State Rights Exploitation—Scarcity of Quality Pictures

WITH the air filled with rumors of amalgamations and combines, the real test of showmanship of the industry lies in the state rights market. This is the opinion of L. L. Hiller, president of Hiller & Wilk, Inc.

"It is our aim," explained Mr. Hiller, "to supply a demand, not to foist on the market a picture that the producer happens to think is good. To do this we like to begin our supervision of the picture, not when it is ready for the market, but even before it is produced. That is to say we consult with the director on the choice of his play or scenario and on the general outline of the production. By doing this we are able to advertise a picture before it is made, while it is being made and after it is completed. And as a result, the picture is 80 per cent. sold before it leaves the studio. In fact by watching the public demand for certain big stories and stage successes, the word of a reliable broker will sell the picture upon the mere announcement of its title and director.

"The only reason that our business is not twice as large as it is at present is that we cannot find enough pictures of quality—pictures to which we are willing to give our full indorsement.

"It is physically impossible for a director to make more than four to six good big special features a year. Motion pictures are an artistic and not a mercantile product. You cannot order them turned out by the wholesale.

"Because we are in close touch with the marketing conditions all over the country, we are in a position to say what the public wants. When we undertook to handle the serial 'The Silent Mystery we did not set out to create a demand for a serial. We saw the opening for serials and then supplied the right picture.

"The big special production finds its best market in the state right field. Placed on a program, it is lost. It never receives proper exploitation. But to win recognition it must be advertised and presented in a showmanship way. It must receive special publicity, not to bunco the public into believing that it is good, but to draw full attention to its merits and points of interest. In other words, it must be handled pretty much the way a stage play is presented.

Independent Market Has Been Abused.

"The state right market has had a lot of abuse. It has been used as a 'quick clean-up' field for mediocre pictures, put out by persons who simply want to make a little money quickly and easily, without regard for their future standing in the industry. A dearth of worthwhile productions and over advertising of the poor ones are the two evils of the market.

"Too many pictures represent what the producers want. Too few represent what the public want. Too many directors feel called upon to film stories that any motion picture patron could tell them are not salable. We hear a lot of talk about applying business principles to the motion picture industry. The fundamental business principle is to give the public what it wants.

"There can be no 'trust' in the industry. The exhibitor cannot be forced to take pictures he doesn't want. As for competition, there is going to be plenty of it. Any attempt at monopoly will fail. There are too many people who want to keep the field independent.

"We are satisfied with the progress of our business. In order to meet the demands of theatres of all types we cannot restrict our efforts to the pictures of any one producer. We believe that the pictures we have sold have been among the foremost productions of the year. And we know that they are successful and the principles by which they were marketed are successful, because we have repeated requests from exhibitors and exchangemen all over the country for more like them."

Pathe Salesmen Give Dinner.

In celebration of the fact that they had broken all records for advance sales on the new Pearl White serial, "The Lightning Raider," Manager W. E. Raynor and his salesmen of Pathe's New York office were the hosts recently to a number of the home office force. Dinner was served at 7 and the many courses were enlivened by jazz music. Mr. Raynor acted as toastmaster and short talks were given by all of the men from the home office and a number of the New York branch salesmen. The home office men present were Sales Manager Fred C. Quimby, Controller W. C. Smith, Tom North, P. A. Parsons and Frank V. Bruner. The hosts included Mr. Raynor, Cashier William Marsh, A. S. Abeles, representing the Hodkinson Features; John Dacey, Leo Braun, R. W. Horn, Harry Lyons, J. W. Weinberg, Max Westebbe, William Westfeldt, Bert Sanford, Milton Kronacher, Jack Sokoloff and B. F. Johnson of the Pathe sales force, and William Hollander and Mark Nathan of the American.

Approve Proposed Winnipeg By-law.

The discussion over the proposed by-law in Winnipeg, Manitoba, which would compel local exchange offices to move to one-story fireproof structures and to observe stringent fire regulations, has bobbed up again through the presentation of a report from the Western Canada Fire Underwriters' Association in which the proposed law was supported. A. H. Stead, secretary-treasurer of the association, wrote that the members are in accord with the regulations governing the storage of films as proposed in the city draft by-law.

Alexander Inch, deputy fire commissioner, has also written to the effect that the regulations outlined "are not too drastic considering the dangerous character of the material used in this class of business."

These comments are interesting to the exchange managers in view of the fact that local film offices have never had a fire.

The matter continues in abeyance, however.

Many Reopenings in the South.

The exchange managers of Washington, D. C., are beginning to feel better now that they have been informed that practically all of the towns in which theatres have been closed because of the prevalence of Spanish influenza are about to lift the ban and permit the resumption of business.

Nearly a score of towns were affected by the return of the epidemic in North Carolina and Virginia, but after January 1, from what is now known of the situation, there will be only two or three places in which the theatres will be closed. Fortunately, this second phase of the plague has not been so disastrous as the first.

FILM HANDS COAL "THE KEY TO POWER"

Fuel Production Feature Has Love Plot as Keynote with Political Issues for a Basis

OUT of the mass of photoplays that come from the many plants of the industry within a twelve-month there are occasional products that are conspicuous for their worth beyond the immediate demands of entertainment. Sometimes a great sociological issue is involved; often a race problem is pictorially solved, and not infrequently have great issues of public import been visioned. It is photoplays of this nature that endure as much because of their utility in helping to solve great issues as through their immediate purpose of entertainment.

At the moment when the question of coal for heat and power is being considered, because of a shortage in some sections and because nowhere is there a superabundance of black diamonds for public consumption, there is a six-reel feature that deserves special mention because of its timeliness as well as its usefulness as entertainment. "The Key to Power," property of the Educational Film Corporation, sheds light upon a political issue—Government ownership of essential commodities—that is likely to keep it prominent for some time to come."

"The Key to Power" is not an "educational" release in the accepted meaning of the trade term. But it is informative, and that's one of its particular values as a screen feature. The picture harks back to the time, just a year ago, when industry was paralyzed and households shivered for want of coal to keep forges aglow and "the home fires burning." Coupled with its plot is a bit of German propaganda and spy-craft that makes mighty good material for public view—"lest we forget."

How Bernstoff engineered, as part of his service to his ilk, a scheme to deny cars to coal roads is indicated in the early scenes. The German agent connives with a profiteering railroad president to divert cars from the coal fields with a view to fomenting labor unrest, hampering production, lessening the value of coal and railroad properties and finally to serve the direct purpose of limiting shipments of coal to the Allies. There is this counter-plot to parallel the "heart interest" story forming the main purpose of screen entertainment in "The Key to Power."

Thousands who shivered over their own firesides and thousands who were forced into idleness last winter through the paucity of coal will be interested in the doings in West Virginia pictured in this screen feature. The question of Government ownership of railroads will long hold attention of the public and representatives in Congress—President Wilson has given warning that something must be done. There are those who believe that coal mines should come under Government supervision—and those advocates of public control don't stop at coal.

It would be difficult to imagine a more prolific subject for the exercise of good showmanship than will be involved in exploiting "The Key to Power." Possibilities for publicity are almost limitless when one dissects the subject and sets its several phases and to aid exhibitors in making the most of their opportunity the Moving Picture World has taken pains to thus consider its value as a possible moneymaker for showmen.

The love story is better than those plotted in most program releases. Claire Adams, the leading woman, is a pretty and talented player and her support includes several actors of abundant capacity for dramatic expression—J. H. Gilmour, the veteran actor; Hugh Scene from "The Key to Power" (Educational).

Thompson, Frazier Nounnan, a lad of splendid talents; Tom Burroughs, Fred Radcliffe, George Pauncefort, Stephen Grattan, L. F. Kennedy and J. J. Dunn carrying the principal roles.

The scenes are laid and pictured in the coal fields of West Virginia and are in themselves informative and interesting to those who know nothing of the manner and method of coal production. There are several military scenes that are inspiring, taken on Government reservations during the preparations for victory. There are thrills for those who like melodramatic encounters; with mob scenes that are realistic to a degree. Therefore, in acting, plot and dramatic details the entertaining value of "The Key to Power" measures to a more satisfactory standard than most program numbers.

MacManus Organizes Promotion Company.

Announcement of the incorporation of the MacManus Corporation was made by Edward A. MacManus from his new offices at 2 West Forty-seventh street, New York, on December 28. Mr. MacManus is president of the new company and explains that it is his purpose to do on his own hook some or any of the things that he has been doing during the past five years for the promotion of pictures. "I will not produce pictures, nor will I distribute pictures," he explained, "but if I can get hold of any 'Cabirias' or 'Four Years in Germanys' I think I ought to know how to make some big money with them."

It will be remembered that Mr. MacManus began his motion picture career with the exploitation of the Edison serial "What Happened to Mary." Later he was associated with Pathe and then with the International Film Service. His promotion methods were usually effective.

Greene Puts Up 161-Reel Show for Seagoing Gobs

WALTER E. GREENE, vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of distribution, prepared the biggest single "booking" for one evening last week, when he arranged a "show" of 161 reels of film for the "gobs" aboard the battleships in the Hudson River, who were unable to come ashore on New Year's Eve. Each of the twenty-three ships in the Hudson River carrying projection machines and facilities for showing motion pictures was given a complete screen entertainment, including a five or six reel feature production and a two-reel comedy.

The idea of giving the entire fleet a motion picture show on New Year's Eve was originated by Mr. Greene, who offered to supply the films to the fleet free of charge. Arrangements for the "big show" were made by Mr. Greene, who called upon Lieut. Horace D. Clark, on board the flagship Pennsylvania, the officer in charge of the entertainment of the fleet, while it is here. Lieut. Clark accepted the offer with thanks and expressed enthusiasm at the opportunity of seeing American stars in American pictures.

Only the latest Paramount and Artcraft pictures were booked, presenting the work of the following stars and producers: Douglas Fairbanks, Thomas H. Ince, William S. Hart, D. W. Griffith, "Fatty" Arbuckle and Mack Sennett. The battleships that were supplied with the pictures are: Flagship Pennsylvania, Missouri, Wisconsin, Kearsarge, Maine, Illinois, Alabama, Iowa, Wyoming, Arkansas, Texas, New York, Utah, Nevada, Oklahoma, Arizona, New Mexico, Mississippi, Florida, Solace, Vestal and Bridge.

Majestic Takes Over Lyric.

The Majestic Amusement Company of Memphis, which has taken over the Lyric Theatre, formerly the Klaw & Erlanger Theatre, in the Tennessee City, wanted a special attraction to mark the Christmas Day opening of the house under its new management system. Accordingly, R. C. Tarlton, the president, and C. F. Bridges, the secretary and treasurer of the company, called up the Big Feature Rights Corporation in Louisville, Ky., over the long distance telephone and booked "The Romance of Tarzan" for five days beginning Christmas Day. This company controls the six leading picture houses of Memphis and the success they had with "Tarzan of the Apes" caused them to feel certain of the results they will get from "The Romance of Tarzan."

At the Lyric, Messrs. Bridges and Tarlton will run pictures and stock alternately, showing only the big special productions.

KINOGRAMS WILL GO TO PUBLIC FEB. 1

Ray Hall and Terry Ramsaye Will Edit Twice a Week News Reel—Urban Organization Aiding

KINOGRAMS, a twice-a-week news reel, will begin publication February 1. This screen publication will be produced by the newly-organized Kinogram Publishing Corporation, and will be distributed through the exchange system of the World Film Corporation.

"Kinograms" is announced by its publishers as a screen publication to carry news and feature subjects of international scope and interest, built upon a policy of quality production, aimed at service to the higher class motion picture theatres.

Important foreign connections of established trade significance are already available to Kinograms through Charles Urban, internationally famous in the film world, who is a director of the Kinogram Publishing Corporation. Mr. Urban has put at the disposal of the company his entire foreign organization, which is of twenty-three years' standing and reaching to every corner of the globe. The distributor is represented in the official list of the new concern by Ricord Gradwell, one of the directors.

The editorial staff of Kinograms is headed by Ray L. Hall. Terry Ramsaye is associate editor. Mr. Urban will, of course, contribute his skill and craftsmanship and will work in close association with Mr. Hall and Mr. Ramsaye. Mr. Urban has to his record many achievements in film production and is responsible for numerous betterments in cinema methods and processes. Mr. Hall has for a number of years been actively engaged in picture editing and production, largely in connection with news reel subjects, beginning with the Hearst-Selig and including all of the Hearst news reel projects down to the present date. He also had a responsible share in the production of American war pictures while production manager for the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information.

Mr. Hall left the Government's film service to join the staff of the Screen Telegram, which was subsequently sold to Hearst. Mr. Hall thereupon resigned to take up the preliminaries pertaining to Kinograms. Prior to his film connections he had long and varied experience in the newspaper field. After some years in Indianapolis, where he was connected with the Indianapolis News and other papers, he joined the staff of the United Press. Later he was general Western news editor for the International News Service. With these press associations he managed news bureaus in Chicago, St. Louis, Denver, Los Angeles and San Francisco. He has also served both organizations in New York.

Mr. Ramsaye, associate editor, who incidentally will continue his present connection also as director of publicity for the Rothapfel theatres, is known in the film industry through his activities for the Freuler group of interests, including the Mutual Film Corporation, the Lone Star Chaplins, and significantly in this connection for his creation of the Screen Telegram, which succeeded to the Mutual Weekly in the news reel field. Mr. Ramsaye has been intimately connected with many major film projects, coming into the field from the Chicago Tribune, the last of a long series of newspaper connections.

The camera staff of Kinograms has representatives in all important centers and a number of special men on roving commissions in various parts of the United States, seeking out screen material of exclusive character.

"Kinograms begins with a remarkable array of film sources and an editorial staff which seems to us to be a guaranty of superior quality and consistent sustained merit," observed Mr. Gradwell, vice-president, who is especially concerned with the work of distribution and relations with the theatre customers of the new release. "Kinograms will be sold entirely on the quality idea. There are, and will probably continue to be, a number of news reel competitors on the market that can be had for less rental. We do not aspire to a volume of business which would require any reduction of pictorial and editorial quality. We shall be content to issue two high-class reels a week, and to endeavor to put into them at all times the best material from the entertainment and box office point of view."

Kinograms will be released in New York on Sunday and Wednesday of each week and upon receipt at the exchange centers elsewhere throughout the United States.

The laboratory work will be done by the Kineto Company, at 71 West Twenty-third street, New York. Kinograms' office will be at the same address.

December 29 Attractions At New York Theatres

STRAND.—"Virtuous Wives," adapted from Owen Johnson's story of the same title, was the feature picture at the Strand the week of December 29. Anita Stewart was the star, the picture being her initial First National release. The production is an elaborate one and the cast contains the names of Edwin, Arden, Conway Tearle and Mrs. De Wolf Hopper. A colored scenic of Versailles, a new comedy, the Strand Topical Review and a cartoon comedy were also on the program. The soloists were Alys Michot and Yon Collignon.

RIVOLI.—Cecil De Mille's production of "The Squaw Man" made from Edwin Milton Royle's stage success, headed the screen numbers at the Rivoli. Elliott Dexter and Ann Little have the leading roles. Prizma's color pictures of the lava lakes of Kilauea, "Washington's Sky Patrol" and a Mutt and Jeff cartoon completed the picture program. The sextette from Lucia and the "March of the Toys" were the special musical numbers.

RIALTO.—Charles Ray in "String Beans," an Ince-Paramount production, was the screen star at the Rialto. The scenario was written by Julien Josephson. A scenic number entitled "The Storm," the animated magazine and a new Mack Sennett comedy were also shown. Gladys Rice and Colin Moore were the soloists.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET.—First half, Dustin Farnum in "The Light of the Western Stars." Latter half, Grace Cunard in "After the War."

BROADWAY.—Second week of "The Heart of Humanity."

North Carolina Men to Combat Censorship Move

ATTENDED by a large number of the most prominent exhibitors of the State, the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of North Carolina held a special meeting at the Hotel Selwyn, Charlotte, opening on the evening of December 26 and continuing throughout the 27th with morning, afternoon and night sessions. The meeting was called to consider means of combating the threatened censorship move started by the Ministerial Association of Wilmington, which recently adopted resolutions favoring a censorship board and which has succeeded in getting the co-operation of other cities in the state.

Each theatre manager was assessed an amount equaling one dollar for each thousand of population in his town, with a minimum of $5 in the smaller towns, in order to secure a fund for making the fight and paying for necessary publicity on the subject wherever demanded by the exigencies of the occasion.

The committee appointed to have active change of the fight over the state is composed of H. B. Varner, Lexington; Percy W. Wells, Wilmington; A. F. Sams, Winston-Salem; R. C. Craver and E. F. Dardine, Charlotte. These committeemen will meet again before the opening of the legislature to canvass results and lay concrete plans for presenting the opposition to the introduction of the proposed measure before the legislature, which meets at Raleigh on January 8.

A set of resolutions officially denouncing the censorship move was adopted.

Abrams and Schulberg Leave.

Hiram Abrams and B. P. Schulberg, whose plan to establish their own organization was recently announced, left New York January 1 for California to adopt the first physical steps toward that end. It was at first planned for Mr. Schulberg to remain in New York while Mr. Abrams was in California, but this course was changed due to exceptionally rapid telegraphic progress of the preliminary measures which they have already undertaken. They will remain in California for about three weeks, then returning to New York, they will make a definite announcement.

Although several important film executives will leave for California on the same train, they have disclaimed any association with them or any concerted plan of mutual interest, stating that the unusual number of men leaving for the Coast the same day was due merely to coincidence.

Ray Smallwood in California.

Ray Smallwood, chief of Metro's photographic department, has arrived in California from New York, and has assumed charge of all the camera and laboratory work at the company's new plant in Hollywood. Smallwood found five companies at work on the new stages. He is using the old laboratories for the present, as the new ones are not yet completed.

New York Exhibitors to Elect.

The New York Motion Picture Exhibitors League will hold an election of officers at its rooms on Tuesday, January 7, at 2 o'clock.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

THERE are evidences of activity along lines affecting the operation of motion picture shows on Sunday. Appeals have been sent out by a professional and reverend lobbyist at Albany for money to defeat the efforts of the "motion picture trust" to make Sunday picture shows legal in New York State. Disturbances in other states threaten the right of the picture theatre to give motion picture exhibitions on the Sabbath day. Reports say that the exhibitors are organizing to fight the menace. Here again is an instance in which the necessity of organization is imperative. With even as much as a seventy-five per cent. organization sufficient influence could be brought to bear upon the forces that form or influence public opinion.

In matters of this sort the invoking of political interests is more likely to work against than for the desired effect. It is also more expensive. Civic interest and influence will carry farther and is more substantial in the support of a just and reasonable cause. The motion picture requires no apologist, but there may be and doubtless are instances where the conduct of a motion picture theatre has become objectionable to the community in which it is located. Such cases are isolated and do not represent the business as a whole. At large the business of exhibiting motion pictures is a legitimate one and is entitled to every right and protection. It has been proved so, and the fact that motion picture theatres are demanded by most communities as a mild form of Sunday amusement is sufficient proof of their usefulness. The opposition to the Sunday picture show is narrow and fanatical and is supported by a minority of no considerable number and without a sufficient reason beyond imposing upon the public a religious dogma of ancient origin the purpose of which has no place in the economy of modern society.

To the average man or woman that dogma means nothing nor do its advocates have their confidence and support. We believe that a careful canvass of almost every community would quickly reveal a large majority in favor of the Sunday picture show. But what do we have? An organization of extremists whose purpose is to enforce the observance of so-called "blue laws" which would prevent any sort of human endeavor on the Sabbath day influencing legislators to prevent by law every form of public amusement and means of recreation on Sunday. That they succeed is because liberal minded people have not yet organized against them. Now is the time to arouse the opposition. Once the motion picture men start an intelligent campaign much of the strength of the forces opposing Sunday shows will disappear for the reason that it depends largely upon the lack of effort on the part of those in favor of the Sunday show. Though much time has been lost to the picture men through failure to organize there is still time to accomplish considerable if a beginning is made now.

MANY thanks to our many friends who have remembered us when they were sending out their Christmas and New Year cards. All the good wishes and compliments of the season that we could imagine or desire have reached us and are gratefully appreciated. To these senders of kind regards we would return the compliments multiplied many fold, hoping that this Christmas has, to them, been a bountiful one and that their prospects for the New Year are at least equal to their most sanguine expectations. The war is over, and it is now up to us to reap the harvest of victory.

WITH the wonderful acclaim that is now being given to America and everything American the motion picture "Made in America" should be just about the most popular bit of merchandise that is exported from these shores. How to get to this great new market that has opened its doors to American products, especially motion pictures, is fully told in the export section of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, published once a month, and in Cine-Mundial, the Spanish edition of the WORLD. Every foreign market is reached by these publications. Film buyers all over the world are regular readers thereof and depend upon the information disseminated by them in making their selections of pictures. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD has spent many thousands of dollars in its efforts to popularize American pictures in foreign lands and its publications are well known wherever pictures are bought and sold. Naturally the best mediums for reaching foreign business are those distributed by the World. Intelligent advertisers use no others.

A BIG HOUR APPROACHES

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

WE are approaching an hour of colossal opportunity in moving picture production, during which it will be limited only by our ability to do things rightly, and the entire industry will be worked to that limit. The immense possibilities in our near future will call forth ambition and backbone, quite as well as American brains and inventive genius.

There is chance coming for American "pep" at home.

The moment peace is formally declared, whether it comes this year or next, this nation will be aroused to supply its own demands and those of war-torn devastated Europe. The demand will be one largely of material reconstruction, but there is another kind of reconstruction now going on, and it is one bound to powerfully affect our social structure.

What has become of our parasite class?

Where is the gilded youth with only amusement for a career?

Where is the fashionable girl of self-indulgent life?

Where are the palaces of moral degeneration for extravagant wealth?

The young Wall Street millionaire, so much in vogue with repeaters and studio hacks, is either in field service, getting up at the hour he used to go to bed, or in training camp, drilling muscle and manliness into his makeup, or he is laboring hard and long hours in home work for the common good. He is now thinking in terms of work, life and death.

The complacent society dame who stares through a lorgnette at the poor working girl, according to directors and producers who never look issues of the day squarely in the face, is no longer among us. She is no longer ashamed to give expression to her kindly impulses; to the contrary, she is releasing them as never before. Her limousine is devoted to Red Cross work, and she is yielding to those splendid humanitarian ideals which have stirred the nation and put it on its mettle.

Let us not lie about these people in the pictures.

Let us portray the real stuff our heroes are made of.

Let us show what all our splendid women are doing.

Most of our people, according to Theodore Roosevelt, have in them that splendid quality of intelligence which enables them to get the greatest joy out of living, "but those who achieve it do not seek it as an end in itself, but as a seized and prized incident of hard work well done, of risk and danger never wantonly courted but never shirked when duty commands that they be faced."

Where else on earth can greater intelligence be found?

That high intelligence has in no class here yielded to "sterile selfishness."

Moving pictures must be made to address that intelligence.

Who is there capable of shooting over such people's heads?

Name him. Point him out.

You cannot expect an audience to understand and enjoy what is presented without intelligence. Don't worry about putting high ideals before people who believe in high ideals, who are fighting for them, who sacrifice their wealth and life blood for them. Let our ideals be as high as those of the President and as convincingly put as he has voiced them, and you will have no trouble about shooting over people's heads.

Countless millions are inspired by President Wilson's ideals.

Why not make moving pictures as clear, forceful and convincing?

Why should we drag along at the heels of ancient literature and drama?

Why not assume our place in leadership?

To do that we must broaden the scope of moving pictures to where they please most of the people most of the time, and most of the people of this country are manifestly of lofty ideals, intelligent and in search of that joy of living which comes from still greater intelligence. This is the actual public, not the theoretical public of years ago. Look at the circulation of high class magazines, greater than that of the rest of the world combined; get a right valuation of what our people think and feel from what they are doing and what they are going to do in the near future, for these are precious hours, hours that count in the motion picture industry, during which we can prepare for our splendid opportunities and almost limitless possibilities of the future.

THE "WRONGED GIRL" STORY

By Robert C. McElravy.

NOT long since an ingenious advertising writer, in praising one of his own films, said explosively: "This is not a wronged gal story!"

The line lingers in the memory. It strikes one at first as having a rather heartless sound. It carries the unmistakable impression that the advertising writer in question was somewhat lacking in sympathy, or was at any rate quite impatient with the girl who "loved not wisely but too well."

But, after all, isn't there something back of this ad writer's little outburst that it is well for the film industry as a whole to consider carefully? Doesn't the expression convey to an extent the feeling of the public as a whole?

Let us, with such chaste austerity as we can summon to so delicate (or is it indelicate?) a task, inquire into the drab little story of the wronged girl. She has her place in fiction and the drama, assuredly, or some very excellent writers and dramatists have badly overrated her. We may say she is weak and immoral and hence not entitled to sympathy, but this will not serve to exclude her from the concern of those interested in life as it is lived. Granted that she is weak and immoral, for the sake of argument, there can certainly be nothing to lose and perhaps much to gain by learning her story. Suppression in matters of sex has served the world poorly enough, and however lurid and inartistic many screen stories have been in the past, the fact remains that since the moving picture came into vogue there has been a general clean-up of the questionable quarters of almost every city in the country. The inference is obvious.

There can be no question about the wronged girl having her place in fiction and the drama. She has always had it and perhaps always will. But the question as to just how much of a place she is entitled is something not so easy to answer.

It would seem to the present writer that it is never quite the thing to make this frail creature the leading character of a lengthy story. This conclusion is reached with the simple standard of interest, or entertainment, as the sole consideration. For, whatever the extenuating circumstances may be, there inevitably comes a time in the course of such a story when the interest flags and impatience takes hold of the observer. The girl may have suffered unjustly and life may have dealt her small cards from the bottom of the deck, but after all we have tired of her before the evening is over.

Is it not expecting entirely too much of the wronged girl to make her the chief character of the story? It all gets back to the proposition that what the observer craves to some extent in a story is heroism, and when the author or director centers his whole tale about a weak character, the story itself becomes weak. It is almost certain to lack the vital spark that makes for successful entertainment.

What of Flaubert's Madame Bovary, you ask, and the more recent successful vampire stories of the screen? That is quite a different type and not under consideration here. Those alluring ladies, if such they may be called, created a certain element of strength out of their own weakness; they defied fate heroically enough in their way, and hence were able to hold the interest to the very end of their tragic stories.

But the "wronged gal" the advertising writer evidently meant was the girl who sinned to better her condition, to go to the city and wear fine clothes, to "see life" and satisfy her vanity generally. Her sufferings are worthy of sympathy up to a certain point, and she gets it in full measure, but after about three reels of her story we become impatient to see the latest slap-stick comedy.

There was a wronged girl in George Eliot's story of "Adam Bede." You will find occasional allusions to her throughout the length of that novel. Then there was the girl Steerforth ruined in "David Copperfield"; her story was but delicately intrusive and always commanded interest, because it never overtaxed our sympathies. So it may be found in "The Vicar of Wakefield" and other notable fiction.

It would seem that the secret of dealing with this character is in giving her a secondary place in the story, rather than the first. To try making a heroine of her necessitates some sort of an attempt to justify her weakness. This is seldom done convincingly, for just as the "wronged gal's" own father usually closes the front door upon her, so will the public close its mind upon her pitiful story. Where forgiveness in real life would perhaps be possible and even commendable, it will not be found so easy in fiction. A story or a play is expected by the public to adhere to some guiding standards of life and conduct, and where the author or director tries to bolster up a weak case by a false appeal to the sympathies the public usually views the results with its tongue in its cheek.

HOW ARE YOUR LONG LINES?

By Edward Weitzel.

IN Arthur Hopkins' Book, "How's Your Second Act?" he speaks of his theory of dramatic art as "unconscious projection" and defines it thus:

"Complete illusion has to do entirely with the unconscious mind. Except in the case of certain intellectual plays the theatre is wholly concerned with the unconscious mind of the audience. The conscious mind should play no part. The theatre is always seeking unanimous reaction. It is palpably evident that unanimous reaction from conscious minds is practically impossible."

This sounds a bit highbrow, but it is only plain common sense and applies with equal force to the screen. The fiction of the silent stage must be so presented that nothing occurs to break a unanimous effect or to destroy the illusion that the men and women shown on the screen are acting as they would in real life. The instant a spectator starts to question the conduct of the characters before him or his interest is side-tracked by unskillful treatment in the construction of the story his conscious mind is brought into play and the spell of illusion is broken. He is like a man gazing through a telescope—something has come between him and his line of vision.

Getting the Right Start.

Only an experienced stage or screen dramatist has any conception of the number of different obstacles, large and small, that are continually springing up in the path of a plot, to remind the spectator that he is only looking at a clumsy bit of make-believe. Very often this obstacle assumes the proportions of a stone wall, and the wise dramatist either demolishes it or abandons his story altogether. He never attempts to tunnel underneath or to climb over the top. He insists on an unobstructed right-of-way.

One of the best methods of defeating these plot wreckers and illusion destroyers is to start with the long lines of construction of the right length. Each one should carry through to the end. There may be a wide choice of the incidents with which they are bound together, but the theme is built upon the long lines of construction that run through from end to end like the warp of a carpet. The threads of some motives run out before getting to the middle of the plot, and the dramatist is forced to quit or make a fresh start—and the conscious mind of the spectator at once detects the break.

Adapting the Novel to the Screen.

Every skilled dramatist tells his story with the fewest characters possible and introduces them to the spectator at the first opportunity consistent with good construction. Within the last two months a picture was released that followed the novel form of story telling and dragged in characters and situations any time when the author found it convenient to give his hero a bit of strenuous business. A young girl was brought into the last reel of the story for no purpose except that the villain might attempt an assault and be beaten up by the hero. There was material enough used to make two pictures—if proper long lines had been selected for both stories.

In selecting a printed novel as a foundation for a moving picture the first thing to consider is whether or not the theme will carry through to the end. More than one director can recall his troubles with the scenario of a best-seller that started off in fine style, but lost its interest completely when the long lines stopped short in the middle of the story and the adaptor tried to carry on the plot with a new motive. "Fake" endings to supply the "punch" lacking in the original story is another device that helps to multiply the gray hairs in the heads of the men who shoulder the largest share of responsibility in the making of screen fiction.

Motion Picture Educator

Wording of Subtitles Matter of Import; Standards Lowered Through Lack of Care

THERE is a slight tendency evident in the subtitling of some of the newer series of educational and semi-educational films, to make use of slang phrases and a careless type of English in an apparent effort to convert educational material into entertainment for the masses. This is a grave mistake.

Not only does it lower the standard which the more serious in the industry have striven to set and maintain, but it almost entirely destroys the educational value of the pictures, and to the more refined element of the average audience, the entertainment value as well.

To the producer we would say, have an eye on your title writer. After your photographer has finished and the film has had the best of attention in the laboratory, the next man of importance, and, in fact, the man who has the power to make or break the career of the individual film, is the writer of subtitles.

The successful writer of subtitles should be a man of education—a man versed in the proper use of the English language. He should also be a man with a proper sense of the eternal fitness of things. He should have a hand in the assembling of the picture, and should be able to sense its salient educational features. At the same time he should be able to handle ingeniously a possible point of humor. And to meet all comers on neutral ground he should study simplicity of expression and adhere when possible to the human interest side of his subject. Keep uppermost the idealistic side of your subject without making it obtrusive, and keep the high spots of beauty always under your professional limelight. It might be well to remember that we are all more or less creatures of environment—we vibrate according to what we come in contact with. Few of us are so gross that we are unable to appreciate beauty of expression, provided that it is couched in the simple language that all can understand, while many will resent the grosser form of expression which is entirely out of keeping with anything which has to do with education or art.

This little reproof which may be taken to heart where the cap fits is penned with the best of intentions, with the desire to help rather than to censure.

MARGARET I. MACDONALD.

Perret Predicts Future for Educationals.

THE well-known moving picture director, Leonce Perret, a Frenchman of ability and artistic conception has predicted great things for the educational film. While he has merely voiced what many of us have thought, his manner of explaining why the future of the educational film should be exceptionally bright is remarkably interesting. It is like a voice in the darkness; it comes to us from a corner of the industry from which we were not expecting it, and is therefore of unusual significance. Mr. Perret says as follows:

"The motion picture industry will in 1919 turn from the propaganda picture to the educational film. I feel sure that the motion picture industry, anxious to conquer new territories will to a certain extent devote its energies to educational films. The motion picture will prove to be a great educational factor in times to come. I believe that the day is not far distant when every school house throughout this country, and for that matter all over Europe will have its own projection room, its own little theatre, and pictures dealing with history, geography, botany, science, etc. As a matter of fact practically every branch of education can be helped by the pictorial presentation of the subjects taught. Through visual aids children will learn much more quickly and educational standards will advance more rapidly. I should not be at all surprised if the Government took up the idea of the educational motion picture in the schools very seriously in the coming year. And when I go over to Paris I hope to place such a suggestion before the French Government."

Mr. Perret's name has most recently been before the public in connection with the patriotic production "Lafayette, We Come!" His latest picture entitled "Stars of Glory" is a victory film based on the gratitude "France will forever show to America for having aided her to a speedy victory and peace."

The Dead City of the Caribbean.

Pictograph No. 6097 has some views of St. Pierre, Island of Martinique, which was destroyed by an eruption of Mount Pele. It will be remembered by many of our readers that 40,000 people perished in St. Pierre some few years ago during one of this volcano's most violent eruptions. Desolate scenes in the uncovered ruins show us what is left of the market place, what were once magnificent boulevards, monuments and other ruins. A statue of "Anguish" chiseled by a French sculptor who was in the vicinity at the time of the eruption is also shown. Here also are regenerated homes of a few islanders who have ventured to remain near to the murderous monster.

Pathe Shows Americans at Vladivostok.

Scenes with the American troops at Vladivostok were included in the Strand Topical for the week of Dec. 22. These scenes were contributed by Pathe and were of unusual interest, showing a panoramic view of the town. The barracks where the soldiers are quartered were shown, German prisoners going to work guarded by American soldiers, the British steamer Empress of Japan pulling into the harbor, and other scenes of interest in and about Vladivostok. These scenes belong to the Official War Review No. 27, which possesses a lot of new information for the average person. Close-ups are shown of Major-Gen. Graves and many other officers of the American Expeditionary forces in Russia, as well as officers from Great Britain, Italy, Japan and other nations. It is full of vital interest for the student of Russian affairs.

Turning Kansas Upside Down.

No. 6097 of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph reveals to the spectator just how the great fields of surface coal in the State of Kentucky are being mined. Closeups of the steam shovels at work scooping up the coal are shown as well as views taken at short range of the placing of the charges of dynamite which are used in loosening the coal. Nothing stronger than an auger bit is required in making the holes to receive these charges.

Short Items of Interest.

The Universal Screen Magazine for Jan. 4, 1919, contains the following subjects, "Fashions from Khaki Uniforms to Co-Ed Frocks," "Painting America's Most Representative Picture," "Feeble Minded Help Uncle Sam Carry On," and a lesson to housewives in the conservation of soap.

An item in a recent issue of the New York World states that moving pictures are to be tried in an effort to place Russia on its feet. At the request of the Primorskoye Provincial Zemstvo the Department of Agriculture is preparing to send to Russia films depicting agricultural production, highway construction and forestry.

The annual series of Burton Holmes Travelogues begin in a few days under the comprehensive title of "With the Yanks Over There." Burton Holmes spent nearly six months with our Allies in Europe last summer and his motion pictures and colored still views will show the many phases of the life of Uncle Sam's fighting men from the time they left New York, through England, France and Italy, in the principal cities, in the small villages and countryside and in camp and at the front. His first Travelogue is called "With the Yanks in England," the other four subjects being "With the Yanks in Paris," "With the Yanks in France," "With the Yanks at the Front" and "With the Yanks in Italy." Mr. Holmes' double series of Travelogues in New York will be given at Carnegie Hall on five successive Sunday evenings and Monday afternoons, beginning January 12.

Watch the Pendulum.

REMEMBER that a pendulum swings both ways from its centre. Don't run war stories after the public tires of them. After the long stretch of tension the public taste is going to swing back and there will be a demand for stories that are about anything but the war and the eventual destination of the Kaiser. Be the first to cater to the new demand. Make a special effort to get stories that will be cheerful and amusing. Book the farces and the comedy dramas and the heart-interest stories. If you cannot get just what you want, book the short comedies and bill them above the feature. Rebook the best of those you have had, if necessary, but get them somehow. Keep your house as light as good projection will permit. Decorate it to the best of your ability. Tell your leader or pianist to pick out cheerful music for overtures and interludes. If you have girl ushers, put them into light dresses with a dash of color. Get just as far away from gloom and the suggestion of gloom as you can. It will pay directly in dollars and cents, and it will pay even more in the impression you will create. The impression will have a lasting effect. Be so glad over nothing in particular that you make Pollyanna look like a misanthrope. Don't be glad the war is over. Just be glad. Don't talk too much about the war. Swing to the opposite end of the pendulum's arc. It will pay.

For the "Flaming Front."

Clifford H. Carroll, of Utica, sends in his campaign for Italy's "Flaming Front" at the Park. Apparently he had little cut material, or perhaps he prefers type. At any rate he did not avail himself of the striking cut matter available, and stuck to a portrait of the lecturer and used one head of an Alpini in one display—two fifteens. Utica, if we are not mistaken, is not very generous in the matter of space rates, so it may have been too costly to use large spaces and more cuts, but we think that we would have wedged a couple of cuts in, even at the expense of some type matter. The first example shown is a coming running four sevens. It is what counts with the average patron. He wants to be told just what he is going to see. He wants a bill of particulars. One single item alone may bring him into the house. "Fierce trench and naval fighting" means a lot more than, "A marvelous exposition of the daring feats performed by Italy's sons, who helped make the World safe for Democracy." The little two sixes is about the only big pull in the entire suit of stuff. A three and a four elevens used for the opening day use press clippings to back up the statement that the film is good, but neither the trade nor the daily press will carry the weight of an itemized list of sensations nor replace the more vivid suggestion of a cut. It would pay, we think, to use fewer advertisements, if necessary, in order to get cuts in. They help more than is realized, if they are the right sort of cuts, as these cuts are.

Still Going Strong.

The Revue, published weekly by the Empire, Tientsin and the Pavilion, Pekin, is still going strong. The last number to hand is 58, dated in October, and it is a big improvement on the early issues, though even the early Revues were far from bad. It offers twenty pages and colored cover with two printings, and is more a film and social weekly than it is plain program. The actual program is only half a page, and there is more foreign than film advertising. There are special departments of local gossip and film talk, interviews, articles and editorial matter, and it makes a sheet that would startle American exhibitors were they to tackle a similar proposition, for the pages are 9 by 12 inches, and carry a lot of type. It is the finest form of advertising, and must pull even better in China, where there are fewer publications in English.

Sameness.

Here is part of a page from a Detroit newspaper showing the Sunday display. It goes to show the deadly effect of sameness. Of twelve spaces, eleven have the same reverse cut signature. The style of lettering is different, and the Liberty uses the bells on either side, while the Majestic has a heart initial, but they all look too much alike, and are too formal. The Majestic has the advantage of size, and this permits a better display, but this is due to the space, which gains for it a preferred position. The double row in the lower right hand corner might well be a part of the same syndicate, they are so much alike. Nothing stands out above the rest, and no one, apparently, has made any effort to beat the others to a display through the use of a special border, white space, type display or any other trick. Perhaps in that very sameness lies the salvation of all, for they get an even break, because they are all badly done. Any one of those two threes could have broken out of the procession with some simple trick and have run away from the field, but none of them did, and all of them are so filled with type that they lose even this chance for display. Suppose, for example, that the Washington had taken the same space and had cut away from the electro signature, setting an all-type announcement in reader style, with an inch border of white space. Don't you think that in spite of the fact that no line rose above an eight point everyone would have known what it was merely because it was so different from the rest? In a display like this shown it would be better if the managers got together and each agreed to take a couple of inches, setting exactly alike. They would get precisely the same effect at one-third the cost, for all they do is announce their programs. They do not advertise them, for not one of the announcements offers any real drawing argument. "The Song of Songs," for instance, is "A girl, penniless and alone, gifted with unusual beauty, struggles for a livelihood amid the temptations strewn in her path." That might be kept standing on the galley and used for about a fifth of the plays released. It is not peculiar to "The Song of Songs." An advertisement should not merely announce the title. It should tell about the play in a manner calculated to make the reader desire to see it. This entire layout is no more than a recitation of the offerings. You must sell yourself. The advertisements seem to make no effort to sell you. You look the list over, and if you are going to a show you pick out the one you think you'll be apt to like. It is no wonder that so many managers prefer the star system, since stars constitute their entire stock in trade. The best line on the sheet is in the signature of the Broadway-Strand. It reads, "The best pictures—and first." That is to say, it reads that way if the legend does not get lost in the poor press work on the cut. It does not take a lot of thought to get out a selling adverisement, but it does take some effort, and the first Detroit house to try the scheme is apt to clean up. We say "Detroit," but this means many other towns. Too many papers show no selling talk whatever.

Clean Cuts.

This reproduction does not represent a new departure on the part of Paramount-Artcraft in the line of silhouette cuts. It is one of their standard cuts picked up from a country paper. Either too much ink was used, or the cut was old and dirty. Since some of the trade mark cuts used in the four corners came out well and others did not, we presume that this cut has been overworked and permitted to get all gummed up. Even the best cuts will wear out, and when they get really old they should be junked and new ones obtained. If the paper cannot print them, leave them out altogether. But before you get new cuts look at the old ones and see if a benzine bath will not help. Even a moving picture star needs to have his face washed now and then, and poor cuts suggest, though they do not necessarily indicate, a poor offering.

Know What You Want.

Don't let your printer tell you what you want. Know what you want, and then see that you get it. Lately we sent to a printer an advertisement, specifying the border we wanted. He thought we wanted a 60-point instead of a 24-point border, so he sent up the stuff with both a 60 and a 24-point border, thinking that he would show us how little we knew, and three practical men all declared in favor of the smaller border, not knowing the circumstances. If you know nothing about printing, be willing to be guided by the printer, but learn as much as you can, and then form your own ideas and insist that these be carried out. You are apt to know better than a printer just what will work for you.

Lack of Co-ordination.

A visitor put it very neatly the other day when he said that if the exchanges would only do what the New York offices said they would do he would not have a kick. The trouble is that the exchanges do not make any effort to deliver the advertising aids so carefully prepared, and some companies might as well have no "service" departments at all, for all the good they are able to do. But if you keep kicking to the New York office, you will give the press men the material with which to back their own kicks to the chief executives.

Specially Drawn.

Here are two displays for a Chicago house in which art work is made to take the place of space. One is four and the other 2½ inches, both single column. Space is costly in the city papers, and the Casino aims to get a big display with a small cut through striking designs. We think that the drawing will get more attention than two or three times the space using type alone, and they manage to say a lot in a small space. The larger of the two designs has the house name badly coupled with the design. It looks as though a standing electro was worked in with a fresh drawing. It would be better to paste the proof of the electro down and draw it into the design, getting a better connection, yet the house signature stands up better than in the smaller example, where the house runs into the actual drawing. Both examples are above the ordinary, and both achieve their object.

Paramount Stuff.

Here is most of a full page from a San Francisco paper, in which Paramount gets all of the space and the Imperial pays for some of it. We do not know whether the Imperial is hooking up with the Paramount Exchange or vice versa, but it work both ways, for each strengthens the other. The chief spaces are fifteens, four columns wide each. That on the left advertises a specific play showing at the Imperial, and the one on the right is an exchange space advertising the star. The house display is the better done of the two, for the informal greeting, followed by a brisk, "It all started in the rain," gets the interest, and people will read on down to find out what was started. But in using this style care must be exercised to differentiate between informality and impertinence. The bottom strip lists the local houses at which Paramounts may be seen. It uses a capital line in "Any Paramount or Artcraft picture that you haven't seen is just like any good story that you haven't read or heard." That is a line to be set aside to be used some time. It is good argument. The combination of the three spaces gives practically a full page effect without costing a full page price.

There and Coming.

The Strand, Freeport, Ill., uses a special space for the coming attraction directly alongside the regular space, but wholly cut off from it by rule border. In some ways this is a better make-up than a combination advertisement. It gives a complete advertisement for the current attraction without detracting from it by running into the underline, and yet it plays the underline up just as strongly. The current advertisement is a two sevens and the coming a single. It gives a better make-up than would a single display of 21 inches. Some hold that it is a mistake to advertise other than the current attraction, but this holds good only when proper space cannot be given to both. The time has passed when amusement was peddled from day to day. We are coming to the advance sale of seats. Last night we stood outside the Rialto waiting for friends who had lingered in the lobby, and we were surprised at the number of people in evening dress who were waiting in line. It is coming soon for the big houses, not here and there, but as a regular thing, and even without an advance sale it pays to tell the bill well in advance. Certainly it no longer pays to hold back announcements until the day of showing. That is a relic of the times when moving pictures and not the plays or players were the sole attractions. When people merely went to see pictures and not a particular star or some favored play.

More than ever this year the warm theatre is going to attract the patronage of those whose coal supply is low. Make your heating system a star attraction. It will pay.

Dayton Doings.

Mark Gates, managing director of the Dayton Theatre Co., is putting the cash register town on the advertising map with his work for the Dayton Theatre. He shows a leaning toward frames for his displays, not unlike those used by McCormick at the Circle, for Mr. Gates comes from the Circle. The effect is good where the press work shows up the cuts properly, but sometimes the pressman betrays Mr. Gates' confidence, and the house signature does not stand up as it should. This shows in the three fifteens for "Tarzan," a white streak between the first two letters of the house name cutting into the display. We think that it might work to draw a very fine line just inside the white to define the letters. In a town the size of Dayton this does not matter so much, for the very size of the space identifies it as a display of the Dayton institution. The Dayton not only takes larger space than the other houses, but makes better use of it. In the case of "Tarzan" a type heading was employed at the top for greater definiteness. There is less hand lettering in these displays, and this is a distinct gain, for no hand lettering can possibly be as legible as the clean-cut type faces. The Nazimova display pulls up two big moments for selling talk, but the moments are too much alike. A smaller point would have been better for the second paragraph even had it been less dramatic. For the run of "Tarzan" a two fours was used, which stood out well and kept the interest up. The silhouette effect used at the bottom works better in a small space than the sketches used in the larger displays. They get the same effect in smaller compass. The Mabel Normand space is a three twelves. The type line for this feature is above the average. It runs, "She was the worst paper hanger the town ever saw—but in a bathing suit—well—you'll have to see her." The smaller space, a three elevens, turns to type for the "Tarzan" underline possibly because this was an afterthought. At that it might have been premeditated, for it gives a distinct change to the announcement, and sets "Tarzan" apart from the current show. A three fives for Mabel Normand is prettier than if it were set in type, but it is not as easily read. No doubt this was read, but it would have done better in that it would have been easier to read. The argument is good, but if you have to puzzle, even slightly, over the letters some of the force of the selling talk is lost. Outside the excessive use of hand lettering, the Dayton keeps coming strong.

Poorly Done.

Here is an excellent example of how not to advertise. It is a two two-and-a-halfs taken from an Indianapolis paper. "Full of thrills and realistic spectacles" is not going to sell many seats, and only the most expert fan will recognize this as the Vitagraph production in which Harry Morey is starred. Most of them will suppose it to be some wildcat production. In these days of following the stars it is worth some extra trouble to get the names right, and in a five-inch space it should be possible to tell something about the play. It would probably pay to tell what that "good comedy" is instead of keeping the line running, but the whole advertisement suggests that the management knows little and cares less about the show that is coming in. "The biggest thing in a screen production in many a day" is the sort of line a man writes when he does not know what he is talking about. If he knows, then he tells why it is the biggest thing instead of making the general statement. Taking only three and a quarter inches, single, the Keystone manages to get in the street address, three stars and six lines on the story in addition to announcing the underline—and it does it just as legibly. Good advertising is not a matter of column inches, but of what use is made of the space. Set in the same page, the Keystone stands out just as well and has several times the pulling power of the other display.

Try This.

Charles H. Ryan, of the Garfield, Chicago, used a good line recently on his program front. It was a large "hang me," with a smaller "up in your home for ready reference as to what is playing at your theatre this week." Used on a calendar or hang-up it would be even better, for the Garfield program has no means of suspension. If your audience is largely composed of fans, it pays to have the announcements punched that they may be hung up and consulted, and the "hang me," if set in large type, will help to fix the habit.

NOTICE!

Questions relating to the writing of photoplays and photoplay synopses will be replied to by mail where a return envelope, properly stamped, accompanies the inquiry. No attention will be paid to questions relating to the market, nor can manuscripts or parts of manuscripts be criticized.

It's a Business.

EVIDENTLY the idea that the writing of picture plays is a get-rich-quick scheme still persists, though the advertising of the schools has dropped to a minimum. Only lately a beginner wrote in to know where he could send his play without danger of having it stolen. He had written a five-reeler in twenty-seven scenes, and he wanted to sell it, but he did not want to have it stolen, and he sat down and wrote in for information. It is a pity that there cannot be framed some scheme to prevent would-be writers from inflicting themselves upon editors until they are properly licensed after having proven their qualifications, as the mass of junk coming in from the hopelessly unfit is what contributes, more than any other single factor, to the belief that it is useless to look to the free lance for stories. A man who knows no more about the business than to suppose that twenty-seven scenes constitutes a play, does positive harm. He evidently does not even know pictures, for if he had ever seen any five-reel features, he would know that plays today do not run long scenes, and that twenty-seven scenes would not make even one reel, let alone five. A man who is not willing to study his subject has no business butting in and spoiling the chances of others, but it is just this type of ass who is persistent. They cannot even be sued for trying to obtain money under the false pretense that they are authors. You can at least do this much to help, if you live in a small town—persuade the editor of the local paper to advise beginners to study. That will help a little, though it is apparent that many of these pests apparently do not read the papers.

How They Get Them.

Sometimes writers have asked how the schools and publishers get the names which comprise what is inelegantly known as the "sucker list." Usually they buy them. The Colossus Publishing Co. has been writing the editors to this effect:

> We will be willing to pay you one cent a name for names of amateur photoplaywrights. No names thus sold to us will leave our files, and will be strictly confidential. We wish to circularize the above names.

And the letter is signed "Expectantly and co-operatively." An indication of the literary value of the prospective book may be gained from the fact they announce that "This book will learn your aspiring amateur contributors," ignoring the fact that the pupil learns while the master teaches. They cannot write correct English, yet they presume to teach the art of writing it to others.

One-Reelers.

Lately the photoplay editors of the photoplay departments of the daily papers have been taking up the question of one-reel stories. They agree with everyone else that the one-reeler is wanted, and they point to a recent bill at the Rialto, in New York, using only one and two-reel features. The experiment was a success, but it cannot be continued because there is not a sufficient supply of one-reelers to supply a one-change-a-week program. In point of fact there are practically no one-reel drama stories made and the two-reel offerings are either series or serial stories. It is evident that the public would welcome a return to the one-reel stuff, but manufacturers are waiting for someone to lead the way, and the exhibitors are content to keep on with the multiple reel stories, which are more easily advertised, never realizing that with a diversified program they can appeal to more widely diversified tastes and at the same time give their houses the benefit of full advertising instead of making them merely the places where the advertised features are to be seen. Some time there will come a change to the one-reel story again, and it will be a complete reversal of demand. Let us hope that this change comes soon, for the short picture is particularly well suited to the present state of the public mind.

Looking Backward.

Here is an extract from this department run some time ago. It refers to the then novelty of book adaptations put in use instead of the original story, and most of these were then made in one and two reels. It runs:

> The fiction writers are taking the bread of honest toil out of our mouths, perhaps, but they hand it back thickly spread with butter and jam. Something was needed to loosen the makers of film from the tradition that $25 was enough to pay for a story. The man who paid $1,000 for the story that made good on the bill board and in the advertising pages rather than on the screen got a wider perspective of the whole business and became willing to pay $50 to the little feliow who made good on the screen.

That was written June 27, 1914. To-day the prices range from $125 a reel upward, so it seems to have been pretty good dope. Perhaps soon we'll be able to say "I told you so," on the return to full continuities and the return of one-reel drama stories. Just keep plugging along and in time the business will catch up with your ideas. It is bound to keep on. Five years ago it was going to rack and ruin because the original story ideas had all been used up. Then it was going to smash up because the stars were getting stale. It will be noted that it is still going along and will probably continue to go along, and to go along the conditions must keep improving. Study to keep pace with the advancement and a little ahead. Get ready now to write one-reel ideas and full continuities. Both will be needed in time and the man who is ready when the first demand comes is the one who is going to clean up.

Stung.

It pays to advertise. We asked lately what had become of the man who wanted a collaborateur to write a story on sharing terms, and the very next week one of them wrote in that he thought that there must be a good story on profiteering and would we submit a list of authors who would be capable of writing the idea for him. And he sent a stamp for reply, but forgot to sign his name to the letter. And after him came the man who had seen the notice at the top of this department, but his stories were so much better than the rest that he was certain we would make an exception and read his. There is absolutely no exception. We do not read synopses for love nor money.

The Synopsis Question.

Even some of the old timers are disposed to kick against the submission of the synopsis only, and one of them writes that while he will send out only the synopsis, he thinks it is all wrong and adds:

> It is the reason there are so few good stories. You cannot sense a piot in synopsis whether it is written in 150 words or 5,000. The story is in the action and you only spoil it when you boil it down to a newspaper story.

That is very true and we never said it was not, but the point is that so long as the synopsis only is in demand, the only thing to do is to give the synopsis just as much as you can take from the action. It is possible to make some sort of a story from a good synopsis, though it may not be just the story the original author had in mind, and so long as they want only the makings of a story and not the story itself, it pays better to offer the making than to stand pat and stand no chance with the continuity. Individuality of story is possible oniy when there are many individual treatments, and the treatment cannot possibly be written in story form. More than once in the old days we bought a story that was in poor action merely because the synopsis sounded so good, and almost always the story did not pan out well. That still holds good. The story that tells well in action will teli well on the screen if that action is used, but you have only to compare the current synopses with the screened version to see how materially they differ. Some day a really intelligent maker of motion pictures is going to know enough about stories to smash this synopsis only fad, and his success will cause the others to follow him, so keep up your continuity practice, but from the continuity make a synopsis to offer for sale and get as much of the continuity into that as you are able.

The Real Plot.

Be certain that the story you write is the real story and not some side issue. It is astonishing to note how many authors get off the main track to run down some less profitable incident.

Get Ideas.

There is no use trying to write a play until you have a plot. You can't make it up as you go along any more than you can get to some particular place starting out for nowhere in especial.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Important Notice.

OWING to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

From South Africa.

From E. Vandenberg, Pietermaeitzburg (as nearly as I can make it out; friend Vandenberg writes a backhand which is very difficult to read), Natal, South Africa, comes the following interesting letter.

"Having seen no letter from Africa in the Projection Department, I will come forward. I only wish you might come to Africa and personally examine the conditions. Taking it as a whole, projection is poor, the main trouble being that most of the men have the idea they already know about all there is to know, hence to them study is mere waste of time. There are only two Bioscopes in this town (Bioscope is the name applied to motion picture theatre.—Ed.), and the managers of them are always at war with each other. Both the projectionist at the other house and myself read and study the projection department. We have reaped considerable benefit therefrom. My manager tells me he was an operator many years ago, and has no more to learn; however, when I ask him questions about lenses he 'did know but has forgotten.'

"I will try and describe my outfit: My projection room (?) is perched outside the building, with holes cut in the walls thereof for lens and observation ports. It is reached by climbing 22 rickety steps. Below it is the motor room, containing a motor generator and the transformers. The former is a 10½-h. p., 200-volt, 100-cycle, single-phase motor, with 70-volt, 95-ampere, 1,930-r. p. m. generator. Projection room is built of galvanized and corrugated iron. It is 100 wide by 8 feet deep. Ceiling is 8 feet at back and 10 feet at front. It is very warm in summer, the thermometer standing 85 to 95 in the sun. In the projection room it is very much hotter. I have two projectors, one a Pathe Imperial, 1914 model, and one a No. 1A Improved Motiograph. The switchboard, voltmeters, ammeters and indicators are placed beside the Pathe and hidden from my sight by the upper magazine and the border attachment (German manufacture). The resistances (two of them) are placed between the projectors, 18 inches from the floor, which latter is cemented. A vent in roof measures 16x18 inches and has a wooden frame around it. There is a rewinding table 14 inches wide by 5 feet long, on which is film storage box and rewinder. Observation ports are as follows: Pathe, both ports, 8x12 inches; Motiograph, observation port, 5x10½ inches; lens port, 8x15 inches. Through Pathe observation port I can see exactly half the screen (Meaning from projection position, I presume.—Ed.). Distance between machine bases, 3 feet. Distance between Motiograph lamp controls and film storage box, 16 inches when lid is closed; 2 inches when it is open. Besides all of above I have a chair, telephone, clock, two boxes to stand on, in order to see, and an assistant. Here is my kick, or at least the main one: We get two programs a week, each about 6,000 feet. Start at 8 P. M., with ten-minute interval, and have to make this programme last until 10.20 P. M. The Motiograph has a two-blade shutter, so you may guess the result on the screen. Manager says: 'Never mind about the flicker. Finish at 10.20 P. M.' This damages my reputation as a projectionist. I intend leaving this place, as I cannot and will not stand for that. I enclose sketch of projection room, in which walls are presumed to be laid down flat; one wall not shown. By the way, the machines are hand-driven. In closing, I wish yourself and the boys the best of luck."

Your plan of showing walls by laying them down is unique. Had never thought of such a stunt myself. Commenting, in detail: We have had South Africa letters before, though not since the war began. Glad to hear from you. As to the South Africa men "knowing it all," why I hardly think any such childish idea is generally held by your men, though probably you have that type of idiot there, even as we have him here. His idea that he "knows it all" is, of course, merely stupid and foolish, since that man who knows it all about anything has never yet lived, and probably never will. When a man gets into the frame of mind where he feels he knows enough, right then and there he stops developing and progressing; also, his usefulness largely ceases and he rapidly becomes a back number. Very likely your manager may have been a competent ouerator when he was an operator, but he fails to realize that the profession has advanced clear out of sight of what it was then. The change from operator to projectionist typifies the advancement. As to your projection room being outside the auditorium, why that is good, provided it be properly constructed, which yours does not seem to be. Corrugated iron is hot, noisy and unsuitable for projection room construction. The fact that your switchboard, carrying volt and ammeters, is located out of your sight, makes for inefficient operation of the plant. Such a foolish stunt is injuring friend manager far more than any one else. If he were wise in his generation he would very quickly change the location of those instruments so that they would be in full view from projection position all the time. I presume the "border attachment" you mention is an attachment which throws a border of light around the picture. Used to have a few of them in this country, but their use has been, so far as I know, entirely discontinued. Why in the name of common sense are those heat-producing resistances placed in such an utterly silly location? Would respectfully suggest that friend manager have them moved back three feet and require you to sit on them! In winter they may well be inside the room, but in summer—wow! Manager must be trying to prepare you for the future life. For heaven's sake, if you must have the resistances in the projection room, friend manager, place them near ceiling, with vent directly over them through the roof. Your room seems almost as badly crowded as are some of our own. Such practice does not make for efficiency of operation, or for high-class screen results, though I see the manager cares nothing for that latter trifle. His remark about flicker means that he cares nothing for irreparable damage to the eyesight of the community, for your reputation as a projectionist or for giving the audience value received for their money. He is simply doing all he can to kill the business. When his patrons complain that the "pictures hurt their eyes" and come only once a week instead of twice, he learns no lesson by lost business. If he fills his house under such wretched conditions as that, he could fill it at an advanced price with high-class screen results. He does not even give you a chance to see your picture. How in the name of sanity can he expect to get all there is in the film service he is paying for under such conditions?

Information Wanted.

Henry J. Schmieder, Easton, Pa., asks: "Brother Richardson: I say 'brother' because I feel that your help, through the projection department, has made us all realize we are here to help one another and not be selfish. I am the chief of the Fourth Street Theatre, Easton, and must say I have had better success since subscribing to the Moving Picture World, the projection department of which is the first thing claiming attention on arrival of paper. Would be glad to see you should you visit Easton. And now that that is off my chest, let me impose upon your good nature by seeking information. Have a small projector on which I have fitted a Power's Six 'head.' In the small lamphouse which came with the home projector I use a 200-watt bulb and am able to produce a 12x14-inch picture at 60 feet. What size would you advise? In addition, please tell me what sort of screen you recommend and where it can be bought. I intend using the outfit for school, church and lodge exhibitions. Would you appove of an aluminum screen on a spring roller?

"Notice in recent issue you spoke of the manufacturers not being able to do proper work because many of their best men are in the U. S. service. If the companies cannot turn out the same grade of work they used to, why do they still charge the same price? Recently my employer sent two heads to the factory to be repaired in first-class shape. One came back O. K., but you should have seen the other! Sounded like a threshing machine, fire shutter stuck, not a drop of oil in intermittent oil well, and oil well put together without proper packing to retain lubricant. But my employer had to fork over $65.00 just the same. I don't see where that is a square deal."

Neither do I, but your employer should have returned the head with the statement as to just what was wrong. Of course that would be a lot of bother and aggravation, but it is also a great aggravation to the manufacturer to get that kind of deal from the men he is paying to do his work right; moreover, it would be a lot of expense to him. Why don't the manufacturer lower his prices when quality is admittedly below par? Why, brother, for the simple reason that he is paying, at a guess, two to five times as much for material, machinery and inefficient labor as he formerly paid for the best of everything. When you say he has not raised his prices, it really means he has greatly lowered them. If he kept pace with the raise in the prices of what HE has to buy you would pay very much more, instead of the same. So long as he gives you the best procurable he is not to blame if that best is not up to standard.

And now, brother, as to your picture and screen. An 8x10 picture in a dark room should be your limit. In a school room of ordinary size I would even advise a little more reduction than that. Yes, an aluminum screen (semi-reflective) is the thing, but if you use a spring roller how are you going to hang it so the spring will work? Your spring roller will necessitate a frame, it seems to me. Better just have a roller 3 or 4 inches in diameter to roll the screen on when moving it, with a 1x3-inch white pine strip at top and bottom of screen, being sure to get a piece with straight grain. I guess Lewis Schwab, Philadelphia (see adv. for address), can fix you out with what you need. Use a 2-wing shutter, reducing its blade to least possible width.

From the Comparatively Long Ago.

Recently I had occasion to consult the bound volume of the Moving Picture World for January to June, 1910. In the index of March 26 issue (Oh you pink cover) I found the following: "Why Not Do Things Right, by F. H. R." Curiosity moved me to read the lines I had written more than eight years lang syne. The caption covered an article descriptive of a visit to the Bijou Dream Theatre, New York City, Sunday evening, March 6, 1910. After complimenting the projectionist (then operator) on doing as excellent work as conditions admitted of and criticising some very foolish blunders in auditorium lighting, here is what followed: "Shading those lights would be a very simple matter, and that such an important item is not attended to is inexplicable. The public is entitled to the best show it is possible to give with the materials at hand, and the manager who deliberately neglects to perform so simple an operation as shading a cluster of lights which greatly detract from the effect of the picture, is not doing justice to his patrons. It is just such things which cause the public to tire of motion pictures. They are unsatisfactory. The public does not know what is wrong, but does know that the picture is 'nothing extra' in the way of excellence, and says: 'Oh yes, moving pictures are all right in a way, BUT——'! and the 'but' represents poor screen results, caused very often by just such things as I have described. With modern projection equipment, with modern films, and under proper conditions, it is possible to put on a really magnificent show—one far superior to the ordinary cheap vaudeville stunts put on it theatres. To accomplish this, however, great care and intelligence must—absolutely must—be exercised at every stage of the game. A first-class operator (gee, it's getting so it seems funny to write that old word) who not only knows how, but applies his knowledge, is a prime essential, of course, but given this, neither ignorance or carelessness can be encountered anywhere, else the result will be injured."

There, that is eight years and a half old, but is nevertheless right up to the second. The big, germinal point therein contained is that then, even as now, in the theatre where, through ignorance, penuriousness, stupidity or incompetence the screen result is made to suffer, the patron blames the motion picture itself, not the individuals responsible for its improper presentation. They turn up their nose at motion pictures, until they by chance blunder into a theatre having a real manager and projectionist. Then they exclaim in delight, but do still not place the credit where it lies. They imagine that theatre "gets different pictures," or, if the subject is the same, different films. And the poor saphead mismanager continues calmly on his destructive course, in blissful ignorance of the fact that he is a barnacle on the industry, which cannot and will not attain its full speed ahead until he and his kind are scraped off and dropped down into the ocean of oblivion.

Some Questions.

A. G. Smith, Dresden, Tenn., writes, asking the following:

"First, can focus and get center of screen fairly clear, but bottom and sides are hazy. Current, 110 volt a. c. through Compensarc having no name plate; has five contacts. Judge them to be 20 to 60 amperes. Use last two. No ammeters in town. House meter reads 100 v., 50 amps., 60 cycle. Feed wires and pole transformer look large enough. Throw 60.5 feet; 20.25 inches condenser to film; 3⅛ inches arc to lens; two 6.5 plano convex condenser lenses. Projection lens, 4 inch B. F.—Gundlach-Manhattan. Use Power's 6A, located central with screen. 2-blade shutter placed 2⅝ inches from front lens glass. Ray is smallest, 3 inches ahead of shutter—toward screen. Size of picture, 11 feet 2 inches. More flicker than I like, even with white light projected on canvas. Second: Should upper end of No. 669, page 496, of the handbook (apron) be under (back of) No. 687, same page (aperture plate)? You forgot about sending page from March 17 issue."

As to the page from March 17, 1917, issue, it need not be sent because that chart will be superseded by new one about to be published. Yes, the upper end of the apron should be under the lip on lower end of aperture plate. As to other matter, it is utterly impossible to give you intelligent advice unless I can know your amperage with at least approximate accuracy. However, with 60 amperes a. c., using plano convex with their apexes not to exceed 1/16-inch apart, you should have two 6.5 condensers, with about 18.5 inches from center of condenser combination to film. With 40 amperes the combination is the same (two 6.5 lenses), but it should be 21 inches from center of lens to film. You will therefore certainly have the right lens combination, and it is merely a matter of distance of condenser from film. If you really mean B. F. of projection lens is 4 inches (and guess that is it, since if your measurements are right you have somewhere around a 5-inch E. F. lens), then you should have a lens 1.8 inches in diameter if amperage is 60, though 1.75 will do if it is only 40. If your projection lens is 5 inches E. F. and distance condenser to film 18 inches, then your revolving shutter should be 11.5 inches from film. If distance condenser to film is 21 inches, then it should be 11.25. See new charts in a couple of weeks. There would be more flicker with the white light on the screen than with film in. Are you certain your projection lens has none of its factors reversed? That "sharp in center" and hazy at sides sounds like it, though other things could cause it. First, get your condenser system right and then see how the rest is.

The Limit.

Before me lies a letter from Maryland which I have been using as a sort of "Pigs-in-the-Clover" puzzle. The passing years have brought some queer samples of handwriting, but this lad is the only one who has stalled the editor for three days on a four-page letter. It is one of those square-letter handwriting, written backhand. Here is what I've been able to decipher, but if ever he springs another on me I'll go down Maryland way and bite him:

"Perhaps you may recall that I wrote from Anniston, Ala., while with a machine gun company. At that time 1 was in charge of Y. M. C. A. projection machines of the 29th division. Was discharged at Charlotte, N. C. On my arrival here the boys said you had paid the city a visit and had looked over the projection room of the theatre where I am now working. Was truly disappointed at not seeing you. Have been a reader of the department for years, and would have liked to at least say: 'Welcome, Sir Richardson.' But as long as your weekly pages of knowledge continue to come I will worry along until such time as you repeat the visit. Unfortunately the man who operated (projectionist?—no, not he!) did not live up to his unearned reputation. Suppose, not being a knocker, I should remain silent, but the machines (Edison motor drive and Motigraph hand drive) surely offer mute testimony. Dirt, oil, bits of film and waste in open parts of mechanism, while the sprocket teeth speak of damaged film and screen results. I am unable to get into the I. A. Both brother Sherman, formerly of the News, and brother Shay know why. Might I ask for your assistance. My admiration for your knowledge of our art and profession adds to your army of friends one recruit."

Not knowing why you are refused admission to the I. A. I cannot be expected to offer aid. Possibly I could not be of much assistance anyhow, since the admission of new members to a local is a matter entirely within the jurisdiction of the local itself. This department would not attempt to interefere unless it be very clearly shown that the local has done you injustice. In that event we certainly would do whatever we could to cause the body to rectify its error, because no organization of men has the moral right to refuse admission to any citizen, except for good cause, when such refusel operates to hamper the man in earning daily bread for himself and for those dependent upon him, if any there be. Moreover, as I have before said, all organizations allied with the motion picture industry live and have their being by and through that industry. It therefore follows that no such organization has a moral right to work injustice upon any part or parcel of the industry, and, if it does, then every other part has the right to enter protest of such vigor as the case may seem to demand. State your case, friend, and I'll see. Maybe I can help smooth matters out—maybe I cannot. Don't know when I will be down that way again. Oh yes, by the way, for the love of Cleopatra, write future letters on a typewriter. Maybe it won't spell good—mine don't—but anyhow I can decipher it.

A New Projector.

Recently the editor was requested by S. Myer, mechanical engineer, Claremont, Cape Province, South Africa, to examine a projection machine of his invention which he now has on display in New York City. The model he has is entirely hand made, and is the only one in existence. I have not seen it project a picture, but see no reason why its performance in that respect should not be good. The projector, as a whole, is remarkable in its extreme simplicity. There are but two gears in its entire makeup. The takeup and upper sprockets are driven with chains, which type of power transmission was last used on a projector in this country, I believe, on the old Selig Polyscope. As will be seen by the picture, the upper and lower sprockets are of large diameter. They have 32 teeth on a side. The lower sprocket is on the crank shaft. The intermittent is of the familiar star and cam type, but made very heavy. It is placed on the operating side, behind glass, so the projectionist may at all times see the exact level of oil in the well and condition of the mechanism. Very good stunt. The gate is on the lens side of the mechanism, and carries the projection lens. The lamphouse is small, as compared with most of our United States projectors. The stand combines rigidity with service. The machine table is in two parts, hinged in the middle and supported at each corner by adjusting bolts or screws, so that very fine adjustment of projection angle may be had. The lower part of the machine table sets on what is in effect an iron cabinet, and is supported thereon by four adjusting screws, so that the entire projector may be raised vertically on the cabinet if desired. In the supporting cabinet is compartment for films, chamber for rags, etc., chamber for carbons, with compartment for tools and drawer for slides. On the opposite side is an enclosed compartment for motor to drive the machine, also containing the takeup mechanism.

The shape of the upper magazines is unique, the inventor claiming the same prevents sharp bending of the film, hence makes for less strain thereon.

Mr. Myer desires to sell the manufacturing rights to the machine outright. His statement to that effect will be found on another page of this issue.

The machine has been named the "Mietygear" by its inventor, but presumably the purchaser will rename it to suit himself. I have not given an elaborate description because of the fact that the illustrations tell the tale better than it could be told in words.

Simplex Intermittent Lubrication.

From some place in North Dakota, name of writer and name of town both undecipherable, comes a letter containing stamps and order for question booklets, together with following inquiry:

"Have installed a new Simplex. Has been running about a month and there is a sort of singing howl in the intermittent. Am unable to find any cause, but believe it to be due to some trouble with the lubrication. What kind of oil should I use in Simplex intermittent; also what hole should it be injected through?"

Open the left-hand machine casing door, place the framing lever about midway of its travel and you will see two oil holes at top of intermittent oil casing. If I rightly remember, they are short tubes, but I'm not certain as to that. The right-hand one is the one leading to the intermittent oil well. The other goes to the shaft. Use a good grade of light oil. The parts are fitted very closely, and an oil with too heavy body will have tendency to cause undue binding thereof. A good grade of light dynamo oil, which you can doubtless secure from your light company, is the thing. The Precision Machine Company, makers of the Simplex, sell an oil, which they claim has just the right properties for use with their projector. Better order some. Are you sure the intermittent is not set up too closely? That "singing howl" sounds too much like friction between star and cam. If you have a handbook you will find detailed instructions (illustrated) for adjusting Simplex star and cam, beginning on page 513, Instruction No. 3.

How to Clean Machine After Fire.

Jack L. Sabre, somewhere in Minnesota, couldn't make name out, says:

"Had a small fire here few days ago and my spare mechanism, while otherwise apparently undamaged, is all gummed up with yellowish deposit which we have been unable to remove. Can you tell us anything we can use to dissolve same?"

Yep! we can—plain, ordinary peroxide of hydrogen, same as Lizzie uses to change her chestnut locks to a darned bum imitation of gold—will do the trick. Can be had at any ten-cent store or at the store of any purveyor of drugs. It will wash the deposit off and ten cents worth should be plenty. You're welcome. Come again.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

The Question of "Timing" Looms Large In Proper Motion Picture Presentation

TEMPO means time or speed. It is closely allied to rhythm and accent in a musical sense and is related to movement and motion in a literal way.

In picture portrayal, there are many varieties of tempo calculations which enter into the musical setting. First, there is the speed of the operating machine, usually timed to a ratio of fifteen minutes to the thousand feet projected. Good "projectionists" have brought their art to a high standard and sometimes make it difficult for the orchestra leader to get co-operation. They believe that no set speed should be used for all pictures and they are obviously right in their contention, for it would be foolish to run a comedy as slowly as a heavy drama. Some operators believe in changing speed to enhance the screen action. If a funeral is shown, run it slowly; if a battle is fought, speed it up. This method also seems perfectly logical but is disconcerting to the average musical director. Nevertheless, there is in projection speed a fixed mathematical unit which plays an important part in the fitting of pictures.

There is the screen action—a form of tempo that permits no mathematical calculation—which must be seriously considered in the musical accompaniment. Naturally, the projection speed will materially influence the screen action and could, under certain conditions, ruin it. The screen action of the silent drama compares favorably with the "business" of the legitimate stage and the music should always follow the tempo of the play.

Thus, we find that from behind and in front of the orchestra or organ, there are two forms of tempo that seem detached but really belong to the music. They must be considered in the synchronization of the feature.

Musically, there are the terms "Adagio," "Andante," "Allegro," and so forth, signifying a certain tempo. These terms are merely suggestions unless followed by metronome markings, which give us another and more exact form of speed. Being dependent upon the time signature to a certain degree, metronome markings drag the former into our problem as a matter not to be lightly disregarded.

There is yet another factor with which to reckon in the musical portrayal of pictures and that is the time duration of scenes. This must be exact and the stop watch will make it so.

Thus we find six factors dealing with speed that every orchestra leader must take into consideration when playing pictures. They are closely related to each other and frequently one or more is disregarded without much loss. The thorough musician will analyze his score and base his selection upon the facts deducted. If it be a comedy, he will draw up the following table:

Projection speed..13 min. to 1,000 ft. film
Screen action .....Fast
Music ..... Allegro
Time Signature 2/4
Metronome .....1 = 160
Time duration .....3 minutes

Scrutinizing the above table, he finds that the scene runs three minutes in time duration. The music is allegro to fit the screen action, which is fast. The time signature being 2/4 and the metronome tempo being 160 beats to the minute, there should be 80 measures to play each minute or the entire scene will require a piece comprising 240 measures.

If the scene be correctly fitted with music that suits the screen action, those 240 measures will always cover the time duration even if the projection speed be increased. To follow the action, the leader must of necessity increase his beat and, should the scene be rushed through in two minutes and a half, a little calculation will show that he must beat the rate of 192. As may be readily seen, a projectionist has the power to kill a picture by going to extremes. When he does, he will also kill the music. The music will assist in the slaughter and the patrons will flee such a charnel house.

When soldiers or civilians in gala attire are seen marching, the music should take the tempo of their step, and thus give the impression that the screen figures are parading to the time played by the theatre orchestra. Under no circumstances play a waltz, for the time signature must indicate two beats to the measure to conform to the feet of each man.

The primary purpose which promulgated this thought was to gain realism and those who adhere to the procedure do more than accomplish their object—they play to the sceen action. They have brought to light and are fostering the fundamental principle in picture playing.

Screen tempo and projection speed must not be confused. The latter will give only a mathematical unit from which may be reckoned the time duration of the scene. Perfect synchrony does not depend wholly upon projection speed. If the screen action be closely followed by suitable music, any slight change in projection speed will be taken care of by a similar change in the conducting.

Remember that screen action cannot be gauged always by bodily movements. Flashes play a part in the speed of the screen and even in the pastoral and panoramic peaks of mountains there is a suggestion of action. In those moments of bodily action, there should be found no difficulty in determining the tempo of the music.

The heroine slowly drags herself across the room. Broken in spirit and tired of life, she decides that the cruel "woild" holds no place for such as she. The music, keeping time to the mood, will be slow and mournful. Should the operator feel that she should flit blithely across the room, the scene will become much shorter in time duration and the musical selection too long if played at its required tempo. But the marked tempo cannot be adhered to if it does not fit the action. Therefore, by playing to the action, the same number of measures will still fit the shorter scene.

Later, the hero, supposedly dead, is seen hurrying to the home of his loved one in an automobile. He alights, hastens up the steps, rushes into the room and into her arms. At the rate of fifteen minutes to the thousand film feet, this scene takes one minute and thirty seconds. If eleven minutes be allowed for the projection speed, the duration of the scene becomes shorter.

Now, taking it for granted that the music selected has been played at 94 under normal conditions, and comprises sixty-four measures, it must be played at about 110 to fit the increased speed of screen action. The measures remain the same if the tempo be increased. Poor conducting and bad judgment would mean loss of synchrony and probably force a stop about the fifteenth bar.

First, find your projection speed unit and time your scenes accordingly. Select the music which fits the screen action and make it synchronize with the scene as projected. After the setting has been completed, forget minutes and seconds and conduct from the screen. Let it be your score and nothing except a cyclone can break the smoothness of your musical accompaniment.

The Exhibitors Desire Musical Scores.

Showing the upward trend of music in the picture theatres of the smaller sort, we present the following letter:

Oneonta, New York,
December 22, 1918.

Mr. George W. Beynon,
New York City.

Dear Sir: Do you have music score of "La Fayette, We Come?" If so, kindly state rental price for one or two days. Am not certain about dates.

Yours very truly,
Ivan D. Bush.

Numerous inquiries come to us from all parts of the country and for various pictures. In many cases, we must disapoint our correspondents. But, thank heaven! the producer sees the hand-writing on the wall. The day is coming when he will have sense enough to protect his picture by proper musical presentation and at the same time give the exhibitor an opportunity of procuring new music pleasing to the ears of his patrons.

Musical Instruments as We Know Them.

For the past decade, no art has wielded so strong a sway on the human race as music. It has become so intensely associated with our very existence that we accept it as one of the requisites of our daily life and find it practically impossible to imagine what the world would be without it and its influence.

The great importance of music has been appreciated by students and thinkers everywhere, and much interesting research into its history has been made in recent years.

Musical instruments have an antiquity which antedates any written records and the earliest history is confined to information gleaned from sculptured figures, paintings and coins discovered by antiquarians who have explored ancient ruins of tombs and cities. Their efforts have been rewarded with intensely interesting and gratifying results. But even they, with all their wealth of wisdom and experience, have been unable to wholly pierce the veil so impenetrably drawn over the birth date of musical instruments, and the mystery will doubtless remain unsolved throughout the ages to come.

Grecian mythology is rich with pretty and fascinating stories of the manner in which different musical implements left the celestial realms to take up a terrestial abode. But, while these tales make good reading, we are too practical to accept them. And we only know that whatever the origin, mediums for producing musical sounds have come down to us from the ancients in rich profusion.

It is our pleasure to present a series of articles which will give, in a condensed form, the history of the various musical instruments which are most intimately associated with our times. If the splendid body of men who are devoting their lives to the art of music shall come to a deeper appreciation of the noble implements upon which they play, and shall gain a loftier inspiration by a more familiar knowledge of the ages speaking through them, then the articles have fulfilled their mission.

Special Music for "Stars of Glory."

The delay in the announcement of the initial showing of Leonce Perret's "Stars of Glory," featuring Dolores Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln, is due to the special musical preparations that are being made for that production.

Composer Henry S. Gerstle has been engaged by Leonce Perret to compile an elaborate and original orchestration to accompany the picture. Although the score is finished, infinite care is being given to arranging the music so that it will be equally effective in the smaller theatres, which have not a large orchestra.

The score will be suitable for rendition by an orchestra composed of any number of instruments and includes a special piano and organ score for use in theatres where only the organ or piano is used.

Mr. George W. Beynon will edit the score, which insures its practicability and feasibility.

Mr. Gerstle, whose works include some of the most successful classical selections, was inspired by the splendor of the production to compose a march which he has named "The March of the Stars of Glory." This has been introduced into the score. When Mr. Gerstle played his "March of the Stars of Glory" for Mr. Pettet, the latter became so enthusiastic over it that he decided to put on a chorus of male voices to sing the words to the march when the film is presented on Broadway.

Mr. Gerstle hopes to complete the music in about a week; meanwhile the arrangements are being perfected for the showing of the picture. The details will be announced later.

Passing of Frau Wagner Affects Music.

Frau Cosima Wagner, widow of Richard Wagner, died at Bayreuth on December 21.

So simple a sentence, yet so profound in future possibilities for music!

Frau Wagner was born December 25, 1840. Although the daughter of Franz Liszt, she permitted her personality to be absorbed in that of her husband, whom she idolized to an extent little short of insanity. Her ideas and ideals outstripped Wagner's own. He always nursed a sense of resentment toward his native land, while she became very pro-German, carrying her views so far that she even rebelled at the rendition of the Wagnerian operas in America.

The music-loving public in this country have long been conversant with Frau Wagner's attitude and this fact, along with the still more pertinent one that the income from the operas went to swell the German coffers, have been responsible for a popular wave in favor of a ban on Wagnerian music.

Music with Pep and Atmosphere.

Usually oriental music is slow and labored. It takes on that dreamy tranquility with which we associate the people of the far East.

"Arabian Nights," written by Messrs. David and William Hewitt and published by T. B. Harms and Francis, Day and Hunter, is decidedly different. It has the fire of the eastern soul and the passionate appeal that is heard in "Salome" and "Herodiade." It is typically Arabian in its atmosphere without being too pedantic in its construction. The melody is catchy and written in three-part song form.

"Arabian Nights" will become the most used "Oriental" in the leader's library. He cannot afford to be without it, for its popularity has become widespread and patrons will expect to hear it.

PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL of PICTURE PLAYING

Strand Theatre Los Angeles

Music at the Strand and Rivoli.

Christmas comes but once a year for Broadway as well as for the dwellers on Tenth avenue, yet the blasé crowd of the White Way looks for something new each year. Christmas week means much to the coffers of the picture theatres and every effort is put forth to present a bill that will entice people.

At the Strand was played "The Greatest Thing in Life," one of Griffith's productions. The spirit of brotherly love, the peace that is only found in unselfishness, breathing the Yule-tide sentiment, "Peace on earth, good will toward men," proved appropriate.

Built around this feature, we found "Christmas Morning," a descriptive overture that closed with Adeste Fidelis, a Christmas Fantasy enacted by little tots, who danced and sang and "elocuted" just like the days when we took part in the "Christmas Entertainment" in the little red school-house. This pleased the satiated tastes of the patrons. The organ closed the program and Ralph Brigham excelled himself in the playing of "The Hallelujah" chorus. Organ solos are usually accepted as a matter of course, but Ralph received merited applause.

We take pleasure in relating the fact that there was almost perfect synchrony in the musical treatment of the Pictorial Review. It was a pleasant surprise and we felt there was a joker somewhere in the proceedings and there was. The feature bore no earmarks of the art of coincidence of scene and selection.

At the Rivoli, the Christmas spirit was also paramount, although its form of expression assumed a bit different treatment. The feature was "Eye for Eye," featuring Mme. Nazimova. The underlying thought was the passing away of the destructive principle of "An Eye for an Eye" and the acceptance of the doctrine which teaches "Love Your Enemies, Bless Them That Curse You."

As an appropriate introduction to this feature was the overture "The Queen of Sheba," which brought out the atmosphere of the Orient predominant throughout the picture. The overture was conducted by Joseph Klein in such an intelligent manner that the orchestra was rewarded by a tremendous ovation, which was the only thing that could happen after such splendid musicianship.

Following the picture was a charming Christmas Fantasy offered by Hugo Riesenfeld. This introduced "Kriss Kringle," two lovely kiddies and a fascinating pair of animated dolls. It does us all good to forget our cares once in a while and we welcome a chance to become one of the children for one evening a year.

The "Rialto Male Quartette" sang "Ring Out, Sweet Bells of Peace." This song, by Caro Roma, is peculiarly appropriate to this particular Christmas, when all hearts are responding to the recent tribute to the teachings of the Great Teacher of Peace.

The Mutt and Jeff comedy, "A Lot of Bull," was a scream. It was the Bull Fight from Carmen a la minute, and gave an opportunity for a special arrangement of Carmen music as amusing and clever as the picture.

The program closed with Bach's "Toccata and Fuga in D Minor," impressively played, as always, by Professor Swinnen.

"The Cradle Song of a Cossack Mother."

The beautiful "Cradle Song of a Cossack Mother," from Larmontoff's "Russian Lyrica," published by Duffield and Company, has recently been set to music by Sacha Votichonko, the Russian composer. This poem will be heard for the first time when Mr. Votichenko gives his next Studio Concert at the Hotel des Artiste.

The War Is Over

We should now sing of our heroes and we offer for your approval the song that typifies the national feeling of triumph.

Our Rainbow Soldier Boys

Written For, and Dedicated To, the Rainbow Division
Words and Music by

BETTY TILLOTSON

Read the words and rejoice with us in the wonderful sentiment that they express.
Your boy will be singing the song when he comes home; why not be prepared to join him in the chorus:

"We are all mighty glad to meet you,
Our Rainbow soldier boys.
We are all mighty glad to greet you;
You fill our hearts with joy.
When we sadly saw the train go,
We pinned our faith to the Rainbow,
And we're all mighty proud of you,
Our Rainbow soldier boys."

FILM POPULATION IS WHAT COUNTS

That Is, to the Motion Picture Man, as Bregstein Discovers in Travels for World—Two-Thirds of Population in One County Are Barred from Theatres

If the influenza epidemic hadn't threatened to stage a "come back" he would have been going yet. But when he reached Central Illinois and learned that Iowa was fretting under the threat of more influenza Nat Bregstein turned his face toward New York and notified the home folk that he would occupy his usual chair at the festive board during the holidays.

Bregstein, be it known, had been battling influenza conditions, war taxes, the depressions of war, the "lay off" and other unstabling circumstances that have beset the moving picture business for some time. He started on the road to visit exhibitors in the interest of the Moving Picture World (and in the interest of exhibitors themselves, when the season opened in September.

It was his business to call upon exhibitors and find out as much as he could about conditions, viewed from an independent standpoint. Having no film to sell, no special axe to grind and no other purpose than to bring the message of the Moving Picture World to the showmen, Bregstein was able to get the sidelights on exhibition matters that do not always come within the gaze of films salesmen, exchange managers or traveling representatives of film concerns.

Bregstein has had to battle against many discouraging elements. His travels have not always been continuous, and his route has led him into all kinds of towns. But despite discouragements of many kinds Bregstein has taken his message into the New England States, into Pennsylvania, Central and Southern New York, most of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois—and nearly 1,000 exhibitors sent him away from their theatres with subscriptions to The World that made his worries lighter and put the paper into the hands of that many more showmen to whom its message will come in future months and years.

"If showmen will pay $3 a year for the World," says Bregstein, "it proves that they will read it and get their money's worth, when they can get some papers for $1, others for nothing and more 'sample copies' than they could open and read and still have time to run their theatres."

Why Are Salesmen Always Changing?

We asked Bregstein to tell us about some of the things he learned during his travels. The most conspicuous thing he observed concerned the actual business of exhibiting pictures in the East and Middle West.

"In a town of fifteen or twenty thousand in the East," said Bregstein, "I was sure to find from three to five moving picture theatres. Towns of the same size in the Middle West have only one, and sometimes two houses. In the East running a picture theatre is often the 'side line' of a local merchant; in the West the exhibitor makes running his theatre his sole occupation.

"Another thing that was frequently cropping up in my conversation with theatre managers: They cannot understand why film salesmen are always changing from one firm to another. Several merchants who operate theatres as a 'side line' have commented on this phase of selling pictures. They say that the firms from whom they buy merchandise send the same travelling men to call upon them year after year. But rarely does the same film salesman come to see them a second time—and never when representing the same firm. According to theatre managers the distributors think that once he has secured an exhibitor's contract there is no necessity for calling on him again to see how the service is fulfilling its mission. Get the contract, get out of town and never come back seems to be the theory.

Population, as shown by the census, doesn't always count when it comes to getting them into the theatre, a fact Bregstein demonstrated by the case of Lancaster, Pa. There is a town approximating 50,000, perhaps more, in a county that contains 75,000 members of religious sects who are not allowed, by their authorities, to enter a theatre. Plenty of towns have a negro population for which none of the picture theatres make any accommodations or any effort to attract. The film concern that figures rentals on the sole basis of population very frequently does the exhibitor a great injustice.

The Wise Exhibitor Never Cuts Prices.

"Exhibitors who keep up their prices," said Bregstein, "are getting the best of the games in all the towns I visited. In Evansville there is one manager who has gone to the extreme of low prices—giving a few vaudeville acts, a feature and a comedy for 6 cents, a penny going to war tax. Other exhibitors in town are holding their price to 10 cents, and there is no way anybody can figure the 6-cent man as making a fortune. Everywhere the exhibitor is giving a big dollar show for a thin dime, and in most cases showmen are bending their efforts to drive that fact home

"The influenza plague has been handled by most local newspapers to the great detriment of the picture showman and other theatre managers. The theatre has been singled out as the place where people congregate, while the department stores, churches and other places where the public congregate have been passed over in the newspapers. In some cases the showmen have shown bad business judgment in fighting the authorities; in other instances they have worked with officials to the benefit of everybody concerned. But in every town I visited the local newspapers 'played up' the influenza as the big 'scare' and very greatly excited the public and damaged the theatres. It was the business of the newspapers to give the news—and they gave 'flu' the front page scare heads all the time.

"Scores of exhibitors complained about the great mass of mail that comes to them from the distributors. In many towns the manager of a picture theatre gets a greater number of pieces of mail matter than the biggest store in town. They get circulars, cards, posters, booklets, plan-books, letters and follow-up letters until the mail is piled in heaps on their desk by the postman. Not one-tenth of it is read by the showmen: they sort out what looks like live mail matter, throw the rest away and then drop most of what they have sorted out from the greater mass into the waste basket.

The Small Town Exhibitor Needs Help.

"Most of the showmen I talked to," said Bregstein, "are eager to get information that is of value to them in their sized towns. The advertising that is done by big city theatres has no bearing on what an exhibitor in a small town can do. He can't handle art work; he is limited in the amount he can spend, and so he wants every penny to count. From what showmen told me the big distributors are centering their effort on the first-run houses and paying no attention at all to the small-town showman who really needs their help and needs it more than the big town managers do."

Bregstein is "going away from here" in a little while. He will visit all sections of the country he has not as yet covered. He will keep his eyes open and his ears open to see and hear things that will benefit the small-town subscriber to the World. He will tell us how he can improve our paper—improve it in a way that will further help the small-town exhibitor. And he will find out lots of things that the distributor might profit by if the present system of distribution is open to improvement.

WOLFBERG NAMED PARAMOUNT MANAGER

Assumed Charge of Kansas City Exchange December 23—Has Had Wide Film Experience

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Rail way Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

THE coming of Harris B. Wolfberg to Kansas City to manage the Paramount-Artcraft branch here is the particularly interesting message in the terrltory and to the outside this week. Mr. Wolfberg is fresh from army service. He had been operating the Harris B. Wolfberg Attractions, with offices in Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Cincinnati, until last June. At that time his patriotism impelled him to give up his business and devote his complete efforts to war purposes. He went into the officers' training camp at Camp Carnegie, was one of the officers who happened to be up on higher mathematics, was transferred to the artillery and was about ready to "go over" when the armistice was announced.

Mr. Wolfberg expresses special pleasure in having the opportunity to get to Kansas City; his mother and sister live here, a brother who had been their "man of the house" having gone to Europe in the army. Another brother of Mr. Wolfberg, Edgar, who had been manager of the publicity department of the Attractions, is also serving in Europe. Mr. Wolfberg is a native Kansan. He moved from Kiowa to Wichita with his family, but when the rest of the folks came to Kansas City eleven years ago he went on East and entered the film business. He took charge of the Paramount-Artcraft office in Kansas City December 23.

Compliments Film Men on New Organization

George Bird, special representative of the American Film Company, spent a few days in Kansas City recently and spread some of his gospel of the inherent goodness—and respectability—of human nature. The conversation ran along the lines of why the American pictures are taking so well with exhibitors, and then trailed off along the lines of why organizations of business men succeed. Mr. Bird complimented the Kansas City representatives of the industry in the prospects for getting an efficient association under way here. "You're going about it in the manner that is surely conceived in the right spirit," he said. "You are aiming to help somebody, to improve the relations between yourselves in the industry and the business men of the city, and the public." He was especially congratulatory on the apparent prospect that the moving picture industry was becoming closer in touch with the Chamber of Commerce.

Byerle New Salesman at Paramount.

T. O. Byerle has been appointed salesman connected with the Paramount-Artcraft branch in Kansas City. Mr. Byerle has had a wide experience in distributing films. He comes to Kansas City after four years in Canada, where he was for two years manager of the Universal branch, and for two years manager for Paramount. And without disparagement of the Canadian field, where his experience evidently had been pleasant and successful, he sees in the American field wider opportunities, and in the Kansas City territory the beginnings of them. S. R. Kent, special representative of Paramount-Artcraft, has been in Kansas City installing Mr. Byerle, and Mr. Wolfberg, the new manager.

Prints Received of "Her Mistake."

Howard F. Brink, manager of the Film Clearing House, Inc., at Kansas City, has received prints of "Her Mistake," and Homer Gill, special representative, is getting bookings for the start January 1, in this territory. Gratifying interest has been shown in "Wanted for Murder," which exhibitors seem to think will strike a popular chord in the hearts of their patrons.

Mason Joins Universal Exchange.

P. C. Mason, formerly with the Universal, has been appointed roadman for Mutual and has started out on his Kansas territory. Mr. Mason is a brother of O. K. Mason, proprietor of the Regent Theatre, at Wichita.

Helen Steinbeck Is an Efficient Booker.

Helen Steinbeck has been attracting favorable attention of exhibitors for her work as booker for the Equitable Film Corporation. Miss Steinbeck has been doing this work for five months; she has the faculty of learning by experience, reducing annual operations to a minimum, sensing with a woman's instinct the probable reasons when anything goes wrong—and using initiative to get things started right again. A friend familiar with her work remarked that she provided a splendid illustration of how useful headwork is in handling details of moving picture distribution.

Open Quarters for Exhibitors.

Quarters for exhibitors, where they may write letters, receive telephone calls and establish their headquarters while in Kansas City, have been arranged in his commodious exchange rooms, by Howard F. Brink, manager of the Film Clearing House, Inc. In order that the exhibitors who wish to use these facilities may know the personnel, and be able to call them by name when introducing themselves—here are the bookkeeper and the booker: Mrs. W. R. Williams and Francis Kelly, the latter formerly booker for Universal in Kansas City.

Books "Wives and Other Wives" for a Week

George Curtis, proprietor of the Doric, thinks this of Mary Miles Minter's new venture, "Wives and Other Wives": He will run it a week at the Doric, starting January 12. This is the first time—in Kansas City—that a picture by Miss Minter has been given such a run, and everybody who is familiar with the production indorses Mr. Curtis' judgment.

"Who Shall Take My Life" at the Gayoso.

The Gayoso Theatre, Twelfth street and Grand avenue, has put on "Who Shall Take My Life" for a three-days' run. This is an introductory presentation. G. C. Christmann, manager, will bring it back a few weeks later for an extended run. The Gayoso has suffered from the street car strike, which has prevented extensive advertising of the larger pictures. But its business continues strong. The house is located where the larger number of jitneys make their stand, picking up passengers who can't get home by street car, or who stay down in the evenings until street cars have stopped. The theatre gets many of these—and thousands more see the sign over the door. Dozens of men take advantage of the Gayoso's being open all night to see a picture and find a warm place to spend a few hours till morning.

De Luxe Theatre to Open Soon.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Savage, of Hutchinson, were in Kansas City recently preparing for the opening of the DeLuxe Theatre. Mr. Savage has been recovering from a serious illness, and the lifting of the ban finds him now full of energy for business. W. Robinson, proprietor of the Royal, at Hutchinson, with Mrs. Robinson, were also in Kansas City at the same time.

Ottawa Theatres Open.

Ottawa, Kansas, theatres opened a week ahead of several other Kansas houses that are at last out from under the influenza restrictions. Mr. and Mrs. Millington, who operate the Crystal, at Ottawa, and E. Van Hyning, proprietor of the Pastime, visited Kansas City exchanges recently.

Florence, Kan.—Mrs. P. D. Schriver has sold her Electric Theatre to Max Schuring and the new owner has taken charge of the business. The name of the theatre will be changed to the Arcade.

TIVOLI ENGAGES A NOTED ORGANIST

Uda Waldrop to Preside Over Organ at Big San Francisco House—Formerly of New York's Rialto and Rivoli

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

NOT content with having installed a new orchestra, with the celebrated violinist, Dr. Carlos DeMandil, as director, the management of the T. & D. Tivoli Theatre has made arrangements for bringing its organ music to the front rank by the engagement as organist of Uda Waldrop, formerly of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, New York. Mr. Waldrop is no stranger here, having made this city his home for many years, as well as having appeared in concert on numerous occasions. He took first honors at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and toured the world with Mme. Melba, Fritz Kreisler and Mischa Ehlman. Every effort is being made to keep up the traditions of the Tivoli Theatre as the home of good music, and the attractions now being offered in this line are superior to any heretofore presented since the change was made from opera to moving pictures.

Duck Supper Dedicates New Home.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Bruce Johnson celebrated the opening of their beautiful new home in this city on the evening of December 11 by tendering a duck supper to twenty-five of their friends. Twenty-five prime ducks fattened in the rice fields of Colusa and victims of the unerring aim of C. C. Kaufmann, leading exhibitor of that city, were served. Among the film folks who enjoyed the hospitality of this genial T. & D. official and his wife were William Russell, the American star, and his director, Henry King; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dahnken, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Asher, Mr. and Mrs. L. Crook, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Quive, A. M. Bowles, E. O. Child and Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Kaufmann, of Colusa.

Colombia Exhibitor Visits San Francisco.

Felix Rodriguez, who conducts the Minerva Theatre at Secorro, Colombia, was a recent visitor in this city to purchase supplies, film and new equipment for this theatre. He purchased a projection machine from Walter Preddey, and will install this upon his return, when he will have two machines in operation for the first time. The journey home will be made by way of the Panama Canal, with a long rail and stage ride at the other end, and will cover about six weeks' time.

Winfield Sheehan Visits Coast.

Winfield Sheehan, of the Fox Film Corporation, arrived recently in San Francisco for a short stay, having come from the East by way of the Northwest, where he was met by District Manager Paul C. Mooney. His brother, Howard J. Sheehan, is one of the owners of the Rialto Theatre, of this city.

All-Star Gets "Kaiser's Finish."

The All-Star Feature Distributors, Inc., has secured the Northern California rights to the "Kaiser's Finish," and a booking campaign will be commenced on this at once—one print having been received.

Well Known Exhibitor Dies.

Emil Friedberg, formerly of the Lyceum Theatre, located on Mission street, passed away in this city on December 9 following a briof illness. He was thirty-five years of age.

M. & R. Make Extensive Purchases.

The M. & R. Feature Film Exchange, 107 Golden Gate avenue, has purchased Screencraft productions for California, Arizona and Nevada, taking the first seven productions. The first of these, the "Prodigal Wife," has been booked by the Strand Theatre for the week of January 26. This concern has also secured the rights for these three Pacific Coast states for the Graphic productions, and the first of these, "Ashes of Love," with James K. Hackett, Effie Shannon and Ruby De Remer, has been booked over the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, opening at the Tivoli Theatre in January. Charles Rosenthal, Jr., plans to leave for New York at an early date to make arrangements for a new program release and to secure other features. E. B. Mayer, the other member of the firm, has just returned from a trip to Los Angeles, where he conferred with H. W. Stubbins, manager of the southern branch, in regard to the new state rights acquisitions.

Peerless in New Home.

The Peerless Film Service, owned and conducted by E. H. Emmick, has moved from its old home at 100 Golden Gate avenue to larger quarters at 94 Golden Gate avenue. F. J. Alberti, who handles National carbons, has taken space here.

Quive to Attend New York Meeting.

Ralph Quive, branch manager for the Greater Vitagraph, is preparing to leave for New York late this month to attend the convention of branch managers to be held early in the year.

Trade Briefs.

"Hearts of the World" has finished a two weeks' engagement at the Curren Theatre, making a seventeen weeks' run for San Francisco.

The Empress Theatre at Twenty-eighth and Church streets has been reopened, after having been closed for several weeks.

Pete Hanlon, prominent exhibitor of Vallejo, Cal., and now in the Naval Reserve, has been promoted to senior lieutenant. He has returned from a test trip on the destroyer Warrior.

Walter Stern, for several years with G. A. Metcalfe, but who has been in the Quartermaster's Department at Fort Douglas, Utah, for the past year, is back at his old post again.

Joe Jacoby, formerly with the Lyric Theatre on Fillmore street, San Francisco, has opened the old Wigwam Theatre at Oakland, and has renamed it the Peralta Theatre.

W. D. Tam, of the film and slide company bearing his name, has been chosen a director of the San Francisco Ad Club.

Among the Exhibitors.

Kirwin, Kan.—A. F. Trumbull has sold his picture show business and building to Ray Arnold, of Lenora, Kan., for $3,200.

Clinton, Ia.—Louie Rosenfeld has purchased a picture theatre here.

Lyons, Neb.—M. C. Freed has leased the Reel Theatre here.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokesman-Review, Spokane, Wash.

Liberty Shows Surrender of German Fleet.

PATHE pictures of the surrender of the German fleet to the Allied naval commanders were shown at the Liberty Theatre for three days, starting December 19. The Universal received its pictures of the surrender two days preceding this, but due to the influenza ban, they were not presented in any of the theatres at this writing.

Hippodrome Theatre to Close.

Manager Walter C. Smith, of the Hippodrome Theatre, a moving picture and vaudeville house, has served notice on his employes that the theatre will close within two weeks from December 15, or about January 1, and withdraw from the field after being here since the summer of 1916. He reported that the house could not operate on a half-seating capacity required by the influenza restrictions.

D. B. Baker, in the service for several months past, has returned to the management of the Rex Theatre at Ottumwa, of which he is half owner.

Books Griffith Film for Three-Weeks' Run.

W. F. Jackson announces that he has booked "Hearts of the World," the Griffith production, for a three-weeks' return showing with Elbert and Getchell for spring. It has not been decided whether the feature will be shown at the Princess or the Berchel.

Casino Reduces Admission Price.

The Casino, long a fifteen-cent house, has reduced its price to ten cents, starting this week. No reason is given for the drop in admission fee, although the house is a little off the beaten path for seekers of celluloid entertainment.

New Theatre Planned for Fort Dodge.

Now that building restrictions are being lifted J. B. Julius, of Fort Dodge, proprietor of the Majestic Theatre, is having plans drawn for a new thousand-seat house, which he hopes to open within the next year. Mr. Julius is doing a fine business with the Majestic.

Movies in the Schools.

Movies for school children along educational and entertainment lines have been advocated as a part of the curriculum of the local public schools when they open the first week in January after being closed for the past four weeks through the influenza scare. Plans call for a weekly show at each of the bigger schools. Local film men are on the job seeking contracts for the school movies.

A. H. Blank to Visit Los Angeles.

A. H. Blank contemplates a month's stay in Los Angeles shortly after the new year. It will be his first real vacation in the past three years and he is looking forward to a much needed rest.

Farren Entertains Orphans.

THE Victoria Theatre was crowded to the doors when Manager Jack Farren had as his guest the children from the orphan asylums of the city. About 600 happy kids were included in the lot and the film program was one specially arranged for the occasion. Farren was assisted in his care of the kiddies by prominent citizens, who volunteered for the occasion.

Regent's New Organ Dedicated.

The large new pipe organ at the Regent Theatre, Geneva, was put in operation on New Year's Day. The orchestra of eight pieces is also retained by Manager Brady.

BREITINGER WOULD BE CHIEF CENSOR

Seeks to Get Back His Old Job as Chairman of State Board—Failed to Create Amusements Bureau

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

SINCE the election of Senator William G. Sproul as governor the possibilities of Louis J. Breitinger as the next chairman of the State Board of Censors looms stronger as the new changes in the Board of Censors are about to be made. Breitinger is known to have a strong ambition to get back his old position of head censor, and, in fact, in the last session of the legislature he tried to have a law passed that would have created a State Bureau of Amusements in the hope that he would be made the head of it, but the measure was defeated. Mr. Breitinger, being a close friend of Senator Penrose, will have a great bearing on whom will be the successor to Frank R. Shattuck, the present chairman.

Schwarz Made Manager of Independent.

C. Schwarz, a pioneer film man of this city, has been appointed manager of the Independent Sales Corporation, a new exchange, which recently made its headquarters at 1309 Vine street. Bookings are now being accepted on their first release entitled "Her Mistake," featuring Evelyn Thaw and her son.

Kingston Howard and Sam Isaacson. Delegates to the American Federation of Labor, District of Columbia: G. Kingston Howard, Sam Isaacson and Frank T. Holmes.

Barron to Cover Baltimore for Lust.

Arthur Barron, who for some time was associated with the Parkway Theatre Company, and at various times acted as house manager for the Strand, McHenry and Wizard theatres in their circuit, has now become associated with Sidney B. Lust, of Washington, D. C., to handle the Baltimore territory for the pictures he is handling.

Rosenthal with Famous Players.

Lester Rosenthal, who has been in the film business for about two years, and until recently acted as manager of the Baltimore General Film Exchange, has now become associated with the Famous Players-Lasky Film Corporation as their representative for the Baltimore territory.

Harry Lewy Moves.

Harry Lewy, the moving picture producer of Baltimore, has now taken a suite of rooms on the first floor of 217 North Liberty street, which is situated near the shopping centre, just above Lexington street. There are three rooms in the suite. He will use one as an office, one as a reception room and the largest will be remodeled as a miniature theatre, so that his clients will be able to see the pictures he is making for them in a comfortable manner. Mr. Lewy was formerly located at the Wizard Theatre Building. J. Aler Barry, formerly associated with film companies on the West Coast, is associated with Mr. Lewy.

Baltimore Men Released from Service.

Among the arrivals on film row who have returned from the army and have their releases are E. R. Price, formerly associated with Paralta and other film concerns; J. Louis Rome, manager of the Broadway and Baltimore theatres, counsel for the Maryland Exhibitors' League and vice-president of the National Association of Moving Picture Exhibitors; J. J. Payette, formerly with various film companies. All were given the glad hand along the row and a rousing reception tendered them.

Baltimore Personals.

M. Courtney Jenkins, representative of the World Film Corporation, otherwise known as "Plain Jenkins" of the World, is now being held responsible for the Baltimore territory by R. A. Smelzer, manager of the Washington exchange.

Business must be excellent out in Hampden for Juslui Goodman, manager of the Ideal Theatre on West Thirty-sixth street, now drives down to film row in a new automobile.

Bright and cheerful offices are now occupied by Wallace High, running the W. H. Film Company, on the third floor of 412 East Lexington street. Mr. High was formerly located on the third floor of 412 East Baltimore street.

The Capital Film Company now has an office at 210 North Calvert street, which is under the management of William T. Timmons, who has been in the film business for some time, and managed a theatre in Washington and one in Baltimore. Mr. Timmons has had nine years' service in the old Fourth Regiment, and, after having served on the Mexican border, left the service.

"Ben" Abrams, known to a good many of his friends at "Big Ben," came back to Baltimore recently, and now represents the Film Clearing House, Inc., of New York.

SALT LAKE CITY BUSINESS NEAR NORMAL

Audiences Composed Mostly of Men and Boys—Managers Agree to Bar Children Under Fourteen

By W. H. Bennett, Jr., Desert Evening News, Salt Lake City, Utah.

BUSINESS at the Salt Lake City motion picture theatres is again beginning to look somewhat like normal. The influenza situation is improving constantly and no relapse occurred incident to the reopening of the theatres, a possibility which was feared by some of the health officials. The opening, however, appears to have no effect upon the general situation.

Business was not very good immediately following the reopening, the smaller houses being the least patronized. The larger theatres reported business as being fair, though women seemed reluctant to attend the shows. The audiences were composed more largely of men and boys than had been customary.

By mutual consent the theatre managers decided not to allow patronage of children under the age of fourteen years until the quarantine against the schools have been lifted. This has hurt business somewhat, but this, like other burdens, the managers are bearing as cheerfully as possible, hoping for the day when the disease will be wiped out and business will again become normal.

The Isis Theatre changed hands during the closing period, passing from the management of H. A. Sims to Hodges & Candland. Mr. Sims, an old time theatrical man of Salt Lake, has gone to Chicago, where he will establish a film distributing agency. It will distribute "Eyes of the World" through Illinois, Indiana and Ohio.

Skreencraft Company Organized.

A moving picture producing company has just been organized in Salt Lake. It is known as the Skreencraft Company and was organized by Clyde Tracy, formerly of the Thomas H. Ince studios; W. Palmer Morrison, of New York, a prominent dramatic actor, and Shirl Y. and Chester Y. Clawson, of Salt Lake. Mr. Tracy will direct the company's productions, Shirl Y. Clawson is cameraman and Chester Y. Clawson is manager.

The policy of the company will be the production of quaint one-reel comedies. The studio is located at 137 East First South street, Salt Lake City.

Paramount Empress Installs Big Organ.

A Hope-Jones unit orchestra has just been installed in the Paramount Empress Theatre, of Salt Lake City. Initial performance of the instrument under the hands of Edward P. Kamball, assistant organist of the Mormon tabernacle, has been attracting large audiences since the theatre reopened after the influenza quarantine was raised.

It is not the intention of the management of the theatre to have the organ replace the orchestra; it will alternate with the orchestra during the shows and special recitals will be rendered between pictures from time to time. Practically the only part of the instrument visible to the audience are four sets of pipes and the console. The body of the organ is in the pit under the stage.

CANADIAN HOUSES CUT RUNNING TIME

Edmonton Theatres Decide to Close Between 5:30 and 7:00 to Clean and Air Auditoriums

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

THERE are indications that the chief outcome of the recent epidemic in Canada will be the shortening of the hours during which moving picture theatres will be operated. In several respects this is an acceptable move. The abolishment of the all-night shows in Chicago was brought about, it was reported, because the exhibitors found it difficult to clean and air the premises, and this is the chief reason why theatres in several Canadian centres are now closed certain hours during the day.

After a consultation with the Civic Board of Health the Edmonton Theatrical Association voluntarily decided to observe certain hours, so that theatres can be aired and disinfected twice daily, once in the morning and again between matinee and evening performances.

In future Edmonton moving picture theatres will be operated from 1 to 5.30 P. M., and from 7 to 11 P. M. The houses had previously been open from 11 A. M. to 11 P. M. continuously. As a result of the promise made by the exhibitors regarding hours the Board of Health decided to issue no official order covering the point. Immediately after the conference with the Board the theatre interests published large advertisements in local newspapers, pointing out the change in arrangements.

The new plan is also welcomed by theatre employes who will now be able to put their best effort into their work.

The Edmonton exhibitors promised to co-operate with the local board of health by using slides for special health announcements, etc. Paper drinking cups will now be used in all theatres also.

Lyric Sells Seats in Advance.

Owing to a continued demand for tickets of admission to the Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ont., the management has decided to reserve the first eleven rows of the balcony at 25 cents so that patrons may buy seats in advance. The lobby has been remodeled to give easier access to the second floor.

Compromise Averts Operators' Strike.

The operators of Winnipeg, Man., threatened to call a strike on Tuesday, December 24, if they did not receive a satisfactory reply from the local exhibitors in answer to their demand for higher wages. The strike was averted, however, by the effecting of a compromise.

The operators presented their claim several weeks before, and the matter had been placed in the hands of Ed McGrath, of Winnipeg, secretary of the Bureau of Labor. Slow progress was being made in negotiations in the opinion of the men, however.

The men pointed out that they had had no increases in pay since the start of the war in 1914 and the wages during the war period had been $25 for chief operators and $20 per week for assistants. The local asked for an increase of $5 per week for both classes of projectionists. At the request of Mr. McGrath the union agreed to compromise, finally asking for $27.50 per week for chief operators but $25 per week for assistants.

The managers of nearly all of the larger theatres of Winnipeg readily agreed to the demand because they believed that the work of the operators was worth the price. The smaller exhibitors hesitated until a general strike was threatened.

Ontario Association Considers Film Offers.

The Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario has had under consideration several offers for arrangements to control the distribution of pictures to members of the organization.

Recently James Travis, of the new Mutual-Affiliated Company, placed before the members a plan for the sale of stock in the new organization and for the release of pictures to shareholders. Mr. Travis, who is the Eastern Canadian manager for the Mutual interests, told of the activities of the new company and what would be expected in the way of Canadian business.

The Exhibitors' Film Distributing Company, of Toronto, has also placed an exchange proposition before the Ontario association while a third proposition has been submitted to the association officials direct from New York.

A special committee of the Ontario body was appointed to investigate details and a further discussion was scheduled for the regular January meeting of the association on Tuesday, January 7.

A majority of the members have already expressed themselves in favor of securing control of the output of at least one producer for the Ontario territory as a counter-move to the progress of several film exchanges in acquiring moving picture theatres in various cities.

Benefit Show for Theatre Employes.

The Dominion Theatre, Ottawa, Ont., conducted a special midnight show on New Year's Eve as a benefit for all employes of the theatre for loss of wages during the recent epidemic. The Ottawa theatres were closed for practically six weeks. The sale of tickets was undertaken by the employes and the price was 50 cents per ticket. The theatre was crowded for the event. A number of special pictures were presented, while numerous vaudeville acts offered their services for the occasion. Manager W. J. Hanitch donated the use of the theatre. The total proceeds went to the employes.

Suggest Exchange Be Established in Ottawa.

The suggestion has been made by an Ottawa newspaper that a film exchange be established in the Canadian capital, particularly in view of the unfortunate delays in the arrival of film shipments from Montreal and Toronto. Several times recently boxes of reels did not reach Ottawa exhibitors until long after shows were scheduled to start on either Mondays or Thursdays, and the theatres have lost considerable money—not to say anything about dissatisfaction among patrons.

Ottawa has almost twenty theatres, while there are many houses in centres of the Ottawa Valley District, but the city is only some 120 miles from Montreal, where all Canadian film exchanges have offices.

Trade Showings at Family Theatre.

Christmas Eve was a gala night at the Family Theatre, Ottawa, Ont., for local exhibitors and newspaper critics. The Specialty Film Import, Ltd., Canadian distributors of Pathe releases, staged a special trade show for the presentation of "Infatuation," the Gaby Deslys feature, and also the first episodes of Pearl White's "The Lightning Raider." The trade was well represented.

The Allens Take Over Another House.

Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen have acquired still another theatre in Toronto, the latest being the Queen's Royal Theatre, Yonge street and St. Clair avenue. The name of the house has been changed to "Allen's Royal Theatre." It is located in the north end of the city and has been successful during its career of several years.

The Allens now own or control three houses in Toronto and are building two new palaces on Bloor street and Danforth avenue. The number of theatres which they control, own or are building in the Dominion is now near the forty mark.

Sturgess Acquires the People's Theatre.

W. G. Sturgess, proprietor of the Imperial Theatre, Queen Street East, Toronto, has taken over the People's Theatre, at 332 Queen Street West, and will operate both houses. Sturgess has been in charge of the Imperial for several years and has enjoyed great success. The Imperial Theatre, incidentally, is owned by St. Paul's Roman Catholic Church, and the theatre was originally called St. Paul's Theatre.

Appleton Sells the Maple Leaf Theatre.

A. W. Appleton, one of the veteran exhibitors of Toronto, Ont., has disposed of his Maple Leaf Theatre, 94 Queen Street West, to Meyer Feldt, who is also known in local picture theatre circles. The Maple Leaf is a small house in the downtown section and has been operated steadily for a great number of years.

A Correction.

On page 101 of last week's issue there appears a two-column head reading "Inaugurate New Policy at the Strand." The name of the theatre should have been the "Bijou" instead of the "Strand." H. F. Hill is manager of the Bijou.

Cleveland News Letter

By M. A. Malaney, 206 Sloan Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

Gusdanovic Buys the Strand.

THE Strand Theatre, one of the big downtown houses of Cleveland, has been bought by Paul Gusdanovic and associates from Adler and Freiberg.

The Strand has been operated by Dave Adler since it was built several years ago. Mr. Adler also owns the Fairyland Theatre on the west side of Cleveland, and will continue to devote his time to that enterprise.

The purchase of the Strand by Mr. Gusdanovic marks the steady growth of his chain of theatres, which now number five. These are the Orpheum, another downtown theatre; the Eclair and Norwood on St. Clair avenue, and the Homestead in Lakewood, a suburb.

With Mr. Gusdanovic is associated James E. Surrell, who shares in the management of the theatres.

Shenker Buys the Poster Rental Company.

The Poster Rental Company, Cleveland, a company which has been owned and operated for over five years by George H. MacNamara, was bought December 20 by Max Shenker and several other persons experienced in the poster mounting and rental business. The concern is located in the basement of the Sloan Building. Mr. Shenker is an old time exhibitor and rental man, and plans to increase the stock and improve the service.

Mr. MacNamara retires from this phase of the film business, and has not yet announced his future plans.

Arrested for Violating Influenza Order.

Several theatre managers of Canton, Ohio, were arrested recently on a charge of admitting children in violation of the order of the health board relating to the influenza epidemic. They pleaded not guilty, and announcement was made that all the theatre managers of the city will back their fight in the courts.

Who Has Ohio Rights on "Masque of Life."

H. A. Somerfield, 114 Lyon street, Cincinnati, owner of a theatre there, is anxious to get in touch with the party who owns the Ohio rights on "The Masque of Life," as he wants to book the picture.

Mrs. Stillwell to Run the Comique.

Mrs. Laura Stillwell is now conducting the Comique Theatre, Bedford, Ohio. Her husband died recently of influenza and pneumonia. The Comique is the only theatre in this little town, which is hardly large enough for a picture show, but Mrs. Stillwell hopes to keep up the interest which she and Mr. Stillwell had aroused and make the theatre a big success.

HOW SIOUX CITY HOUSES RAISED PRICES

Overlooked Sign on Plaza Announcing Increase for Chaplin Film Cause of a General Boost in Admissions

Guy Leavitt, World-Herald, Omaha, Neb.

WHEN Exhibitor J. C. Duncan of the Plaza Theatre, Sioux City, Ia., ran Charley Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" for a week, he raised the price of his house from 10 to 20 cents. Through an oversight at the end of the week the increased admission sign was not taken down. When the usual number of patrons came and paid the higher admission without saying a word, Exhibitor Duncan decided to let the 20-cents admission remain in effect. During that week the Sioux City exhibitors met to talk over what they should do to fight the influenza epidemic. In the course of the meeting Exhibitor L. Well of the Paramount Theatre, who for years has insisted upon a 10-cent admission, electrified the others by arising and announcing, "Gentlemen, I am going to 20 cents next Sunday." Now every house in Sioux City charges the higher admission price and not one word of complaint has been heard.

Manager Goldberg of the Sun Theatre, new downtown house in Omaha, Neb., announced that beginning with January 1 the Sun's admission price would be 20 cents instead of 10. Manager Goldberg has maintained the 10-cent admission while other downtown houses were getting 20 cents. He announced at the same time he had booked the Fox "Big Nine" pictures, and could assure his patrons of even better pictures than they had been seeing.

L. A. Gorman, proprietor of the Rialto, formerly the Majestic Theatre, of Lincoln, Neb., has recently increased the admission price to 20 cents to all parts of the house. "I am opposed to varying prices for the house," he said. "Patrons can see the pictures and hear the music just as well from one part of the house as another. The motion picture theatre is not like the legitimate house in this respect."

Other less important moves toward increasing admission prices are reported throughout Iowa and Nebraska.

Report Eager Out of Acme Company.

Frank Eager, a well known exhibitor, is reported to have resigned as general manager of the Acme Amusement Company at Lincoln, Neb.

2,700 Soldiers See "Shoulder Arms."

"Shoulder Arms" took 2,700 soldiers at Fort Omaha, near Omaha, by storm when shown to them at a Christmas eve entertainment at the fort. A delegation from the post asked Manager C. E. Holah, of the A. H. Blank Enterprises headquarters in Omaha, for permission to show the picture, and Holah immediately said "Yes."

Has Shoe Show Case in Lobby for Select Film.

Showing "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," a Select picture, Exhibitor A. G. Stolte, of the Strand, Omaha, co-operated with the Drexel Shoe Company of this city in advertising ladies' footwear, and the picture. A shoe show case was placed in the lobby, and in it were displayed every kind of house slippers for women. Hundreds of women—men, and others—viewed the display, and then went in to see the picture.

Books "Virtuous Wives" for a Week.

J. C. Duncan, proprietor of the Plaza Theatre, Sioux City, Ia., broke all precedent at his house when he ran "Shoulder Arms" for one week. The Plaza had never run one picture more than four days. At the close of the week he reported he was highly satisfied, and at once booked "Virtuous Wives" for a week's run. He is co-operating with a local shop for women's wear, and will exhibit wax models, dressed in the latest fashions, in the lobby of his theatre. He will have a "plugger" in the lobby selling copies of Anita Stewart's two songs, and the ushers will lead the audience in singing the songs, which will be shown on the screen. Local music stores are widely advertising the song.

Exchange Suffers Influenza Loss.

Exhibitor George Monroe's two houses in Beatrice, Neb., closed three months because of the influenza epidemic, were allowed to open on New Year's day. York and Grand Island, Neb., houses were opened after being closed for weeks. Exchange managers in Omaha report a forty per cent. loss of business during December, due to the influenza epidemic.

Calvert Called to New York on Business.

Manager J. H. Calvert of the Laemmle Film Service Company branch, at Omaha, was called in to New York during the holidays to see "Hearts of Humanity" and to talk over 1919 policies.

Rosenfield Sells His Temple Grand.

Louis Rosenfield sold the Temple Grand Theatre at Creston, Ia., to Hal Kelley, and took over the Family Theatre at Clinton, Ia. The Family seats 750. Rosenfield held a big opening show on Jan. 1.

Daily Launches Picture Puzzle Campaign.

Guy Leavitt, motion picture editor of the World-Herald, Omaha, Neb., on the first of the year launched a puzzle picture campaign in his department. Every Sunday the picture of some star who is to appear at a local motion picture theatre that week is cut up and a cut made of the pieces,

WORLD MAN PAYS OHIO TOWNS A VISIT

Dayton Correspondent Believes There Are Too Many Shows in Chillicothe—Business Good in Columbus

By Paul Gray, Dayton, Theatre Building, Dayton, Ohio.

AFTER witnessing the premier of Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life" at the Dayton Theatre, Dayton, the writer went to Chillicothe, Ohio, for the day after Christmas, where he met Charley Smith in his den at the Star Theatre and found him making preparations for the presentation of "The Greatest Thing in Life."

The talk with Charley Smith was not the usual so-called "interview," and among other things the writer found that there will be a concerted and speedy action on the part of the different Chillicothe theatres for business with the departure of the thousands of soldiers that were stationed at Camp Sherman near there. I am of the opinion that there are at the present time too many theatres here. Charley is doing a good business at the Star and Queen theatres, which adjoin each other, and does not seem to be worried as to the future.

Vic Cohn, who at one time was associated with Mr. Smith, is now managing the new Sherman Theatre in Chillicothe about a square from the Star and which was opened by Elmer Redelle, former Shubert manager. Mr. Redelle is no longer in Chillicothe. The Sherman is a combination house and plays pictures alternating with road attractions that come this way. The Royal Theatre managed by Myers Brothers is prospering.

Business Good in Columbus.

From Chillicothe the writer left for Columbus. The first house visited was the Majestic, Max Stern's house, which is one of the best in that place. The Majestic has a balcony and employes an orchestra as part of the musical program. Will Maddox manages the house. The Majestic does not stick to a program policy.

The Hippodrome and Pastime theatres are controlled by J. W. Swain. These houses are doing good at the present. The Hippodrome has a seating capacity of about 300 and the Pastime about 450. Mr. Swain was absent at the time of the writer's visit. The Dreamland Theatre, which has been in the hands of George Peteras for nine years, seats 600 and is a very nice house as the smaller houses go. A $5,000 organ has recently been installed.

The Columbus Dispatch has a large electric sign board the length of the Dispatch building, and the writer noticed that several of the theatres were making use of this form of advertising. Another noticeable feature was the use of the billboards by the Majestic and other picture houses.

The Southern Theatre is dark, but it is said that Charles Schwerin of the Success Productions, Cleveland, is to play "The Birth of a Nation" in this house to a fifty-cent top.

The Dayton Decorated for the Holidays.

Mark M. Gates, managing director of the Dayton Theatre, Dayton, was presented with a beautiful leather desk set by the employes of the Dayton for Christmas.

The Dayton was decorated artistically for the holidays with a large number of beautiful colored lamps bought especially for the occasion. The theatre opened Christmas with D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life" to a capacity business. A novelty newspaper ad was used with Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, Elmo Lincoln and other stars hanging on a Christmas tree, with D. W. Griffith cartooned as Saint Nicholas containing in his stick bundles listed as "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World," and then showing Mr. Griffith leaving a bundle labeled "The Greatest Thing in Life" at the bottom of the Christmas tree directly over the signature cut of the Dayton. In the text of the ad mention was made that the Christmas gift of the Dayton to its patrons was "The Greatest Thing in Life." The art work caused much favorable comment.

OPERATORS CLASSIFIED AS TO ABILITY

Chief Film Censor for the Province of Ontario Says the Move Is Made to Improve Projection

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

STARTING with January 1, the operators of the Province of Alberta were classified according to experience and abillty under the direction of Howard Douglas, chief film censor of Alberta. Arrangements were made for examinations and the operators are to be placed in one of three classes, according to their showing. Operators in small centres will be restricted to the third class only, it is understood, and if they move to a larger town or city they will be required to undergo another examination.

Mr. Douglas announced that the aim of the Board of Censors is to improve projection in Alberta.

Theatre Opens on Sundays Only.

Hull, Quebec, a town opposite to the Canadian Capital, Ottawa, in the Provlnce of Ontario, boasts of a moving picture theatre which is open only one day each week. This is the Odeon Theatre, which is operated by Paquin Bros.

Sunday shows are allowable in Hull, whereas all Sunday entertainments in Ottawa are banned. The Odeon therefore draws quite a patronage from across the river. Performances are given each Sunday afternoon and evening and the program includes a feature picture, two reel comedy and several acts of vaudeville. The house is then dark for the remainder of the week.

Paquin Bros. also operate the Eden Theatre in Hull. The Eden Theatre is an attractive fireproof structure.

Ask Right to Show War Films in Schools.

A deputation, headed by Commander Acmilius Jarvis and Rev. Father Burke, of Toronto, recently waited upon Dr. Cody, Minister of Education for Ontario, to ask for official permission for the showing in Ontario public schools of motion pictures lllustrating the work of the British Navy during the recent war. This request is significant in that it forms the first step in a movement for the presentation of motion pictures of all kinds in Ontario schools. Dr. Cody promised careful consideration.

Music Authors and Composers Organize.

The Authors and Composers' Association of Canada was organized at Toronto on December 18. One of the aims of the Association is to encourage better music in many theatres of the country. The Association also hopes to encourage Canadian compositions in various ways. Gordon V. Thompson, of Toronto, was elected president and Miss Iere Humble, of Toronto, was made the first secretary-treasurer.

Screen Club Holds Dance.

The Screen Club of Montreal, whlch is supported by many local exhibitors, exchange officials and others, held its second social evening of the season on Saturday night, December 21, when several hundred people attended a dance at the club's headquarters on University street. The club made an auspicious start early in December and bids fair to be a very successful venture.

Changes in Montreal Exchanges.

Several important changes took place in Montreal film exchange circles on December 21. Ray Peck, Montreal manager of the Mutual Exhibitors' Company, resigned on that date and returned to Toronto. James Travis, of Toronto, Eastern Canadian general manager for the company, spent several days in Montreal to arrange for the change in local management, but Peck's successor was not named.

Announcement was also made that J. Hooper had resigned as Montreal manager of the Exhibitors' Film Distributing Company, Toronto, and Charles Stephenson, general manager of the concern, came to Montreal to look after details temporarily.

Sid Taube, formerly service manager at the Montreal branch of the Famous Players' Film Service, resigned to return to Toronto and it is understood that he will assume the management of the Toronto office of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Canadian Pathe distributors.

Converts Empire Theatre Into Dance Hall.

The old Emplre Theatre, 219 Bank street, Ottawa, has been reopened as a dancing academy under the proprietorship of Prof. Laing of Ottawa. The theatre building, which was not in use for many months, was remodeled for the purpose. The place is now known as "Astor's Dansant."

Detroit News Letter

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

Big Change at Majestic.

HENRY GUTHARD, the new lessee of the Majestic Theatre, Detroit, announces that Henry Santrey, who sang there for several years, and who has been at the Regent this season, will return to the Majestic the week of December 29, and that at the same time Ward J. Hutton, former orchestra leader at the Majestic and at the Regent all this season, will resume charge of the orchestra. This brings back to the Majestic two well known favorites with Majestic audiences. M. W. McGee will remain at the Majestic temporarily—until such time as Mr. Guthard selects his successor.

Regent Changes Its Policy.

Starting Sunday, December 29, the Regent Theatre, Detroit, inaugurated its new policy of vaudeville and pictures. T. H. Ealand, managing director, was in New York City last week arranging the bookings.

Brett and Powell Join Independent.

J. Russell Brett announces his affiliation in the sales department of the Independent Sales Corporation, releasing through the Film Clearing House. Charles H. Powell, recently with Fox, has also joined the same company, and will be in the sales department.

DeBute Has Three First Runs.

George DeBute, Mutual manager, announces that "Cannibals of the South Sea Islands" and "Lafayette, We Come!" have been booked to the Colonial Theatre, Detroit, for a week each, while "The Girl of My Dreams," with Billy Rhodes, goes into the Majestic Theatre week of December 29. These are first-run bookings.

Harry Garson in Detroit.

Harry Garson, of the Broadway-Strand Theatre, and personal representative for Clara Kimball Young, was in Detroit last week on his way from California to New York, where he will arrange for a first-run on his latest picture with Blanch Sweet, "The Unpardonable Sin."

Exhibitors Are Glad.

Dr. James W. Inches, health officer of Detroit, has been appointed police commissioner. This is good news to the exhibitors, because Dr. Inches is certain to give the industry a square deal at all times. He is broad-minded and fair. The mayor, James Couzens, is also fair, and a big booster for the motion picture industry.

Mrs. William M. Elliott Dies.

The Moving Picture World extends its heartfelt sympathy to Will M. Elliott, former manager of the Washington Theatre, Detroit, in the loss of his wife, who passed away Sunday, December 22, following a long illness.

Koppin Company May Build Big House.

It is reported that Henry S. Koppin Company is planning to erect a new theatre on Gratiot avenue, near Beaubien street, that will seat 1,500. The Koppin Company may lose the lease on the Grand Circus Theatre, 301 Woodward avenue, owing to the property having changed ownership. The new owners have the adjoining property, and are said to be seriously considering the erection of a big building on the site.

Paramount Booking Department Reorganized.

H. W. Ross announces a complete reorganization of the Paramount booking department. He has appointed Eddie Fontaine general supervisor of bookings, although he personally will do none of the booking. This work will be done by three assistants, his duties being to assist exhibitors in their bookings and keeping them informed about the various pictures, their merits, etc. It is a new idea in booking, and the Detroit Paramount office is the first to make the installation. Later similar departments may be added to the other Paramount branches.

Pathe Exchange Has Record Week.

The week ending December 21 was the biggest in the history of the Detroit Pathe Exchange, all of which brings praise to F. W. Gebhardt, the local manager, who has been working faithfully and energetically since taking charge about nine months ago.

Broadway-Strand Raises Prices.

The Broadway-Strand Theatre, Detroit, has raised its prices, the new scale calling for 40 cents for downstairs seats at night, 60 cents for loges, 30 cents in the first balcony and 20 in the second balcony, while in the afternoons prices are 20 cents for all seats, except the loges, which are 30 cents. The above prices include the war taxes.

Somerville Resigns from Drury Lane.

Harry Somerville has resigned as manager of the Drury Lane Theatre, Detroit, and has been succeeded by R. Perry, formerly with Metro. Mr. Somerville will rest until after January 1, although he has a half dozen offers under consideration.

Paramount Has Fine Projection Room.

Paramount's new projection room at the Detroit exchange is one of the finest in the country. It represents a miniature theatre—has beautiful carpet on the floor and genuine wicker furniture, comprising chairs, settees, tables, rockers, etc. The room is large, airy and comfortable. An operator is on the job day and night to screen for exhibitors.

New Manager at Broadway-Strand.

George Cusick has been appointed house manager of the Broadway-Strand, succeeding Edgar Garson, who resigned some time ago. Mr. Cusick is a young man of pleasing and affable personality, and he well deserved the promotion made by Managing Director Phil Gleichman.

Bush Makes Survey of Conditions.

Paul Bush, manager of the Universal Exchange, visited Flint, Saginaw and Bay City last week, spending three days in making a survey of conditions in this part of his territory. Mr. Bush reports that owing to the influenza and pre-holiday shopping he found the exhibitors just managing to get enough business to pay expenses.

TO ERECT BIG THEATRE IN FORT WORTH

H. G. Cottar's Plans Call for the Building of One of the Finest Picture Houses in the South

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

A FIVE-STORY building which will contain one of the finest motion picture theatres ever constructed in the South will be erected by the Citizens' Amusement Company, chartered by Fort Worth business men. Ground will be broken early in January and a $600,000 structure will be completed before the end of the year.

Feeling the crying need for a modern and spacious motion picture play house in Fort Worth, H. G. Cottar of the Lone Star Amusement Association with his business associates has secured a tract of 50 by 200 feet on Main street, in the heart of the Fort Worth business district. Architects have prepared plans for a five-story structure, in which will be included a theatre to be devoted exclusively to motion pictures, which will have a seating capacity of 1,800 persons and which is to be without a rival in the South.

The theatre will be featured by a luxurious rest room for women, smoking rooms for men, a check room and a nursery where trained nurses will look after the children of patrons while they view the films.

H. G. Cottar is president of the new company. Judge S. D. Lary, one of the largest property owners in Fort Worth, is secretary and treasurer, and A. S. Mims, former manager of the Odeon and Strand theatres and later special representative for Mutual, will be the manager. The Odeon theatre will be torn down to make room for the new building.

S. A. Lynch On Way to New York.

S. A. Lynch, of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, who was seriously ill with influenza in his suite at the Adolphus Hotel in Dallas, recovered sufficiently to be able to return to New York. He was confined to his bed for about two weeks.

Joe Baum Succumbs to Influenza.

JOE BAUM, salesman out of Seattle Universal office, died December 17 in a Seattle hospital of influenza. Mr. Baum had had a slight cold for about a week, but his condition did not become serious enough to excite alarm among his friends until two days before his death. At that time Sol Baum, his brother, who is Northwest manager for Universal, came up from Portland and succeeded in getting him into one of the few hospitals in the city that will admit influenza patients. Sol remained with his brother until the last.

The news of Joe's passing came as a sudden blow to his many friends in film circles of the Pacific Northwest, for he was a big, muscular man, the very picture of health. His jovial good nature and straight forward business dealings had made friends for him wherever he had gone, and his desire to help others was constantly being shown in many little personal affairs and in planning for exhibitors new ways of putting over their pictures.

Influenza Hits Seattle's Film Colony.

Seattle's motion picture colony is just now for the first time feeling serious personal anxiety from the influenza epidemic. John Danz, manager of the Colonial and the Star theatres, with his entire family, have been attacked by the disease. Mr. Danz has been trying to fight it off for several days, but has finally had to give up and go to bed.

Only three or four of the force at the Seattle Vitagraph office are working this week. Those confined at their homes are L. M. Cobbs, manager; L. C. Tomlinson, assistant manager; Miss Conklin, stenographer, and Mrs. Manning, poster clerk.

Eden Becomes Manager of Select Exchange

A. W. Eden has resigned the management of the Seattle Fox office to accept that of the Select office. He has been succeeded in the Fox organization by K. L. Burke, for the past six months salesman out of the local office.

B. R. Kellar, in charge of the booking department here, has been ordered to San Francisco to report for duty by the first of the year.

Featherstone Booking for Paramount.

C. J. Featherstone, who was reported to have died while with the Oakland (Cal.) High School Training Detachment, is back in his old position in the booking department of the Seattle Paramount-Artcraft office.

NEW ASSOCIATION HOLDS FIRST MEETING

Minneapolis Theatrical Protective League Hears No Severe Influenza Order Is To Be Imposed

By William Edward Mulligan, Minneapolis Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

THE first regular meeting of the newly formed exhibitors' organization, the Theatrical Protective League, was held on Tuesday, December 17. A special committee which had been appointed to interview D. H. M. Guilford, city health commissioner, reported they had been informed that the influenza epidemic was at a standstill and that under existing conditions the health department was not contemplating any harsh measures against moving picture interests.

Five members of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade were present at the meeting and asked to be allowed to co-operate with the exhibitors in the influenza epidemic. As a result a committee of five exhibitors was appointed to act with the exchangemen's organization.

Plans were agreed upon for a mass meeting to take place December 27 in the Unique Theatre, at which the difficulties confronting the moving picture industry, its hopes and aims will be given an open hearing. Mayor-elect J. E. Meyers and other city officials will be invited to give addresses on the occasion.

Club rooms for the exhibitors' organization have been provided on the third floor of the Kasota Building. The rooms have been splendidly furnished by Ruben & Davis and no expense was spared to make it as home-like as possible. The club will be self-sustaining and open to members only. Messrs. Eselin, Broms and Degnan have been appointed by President Steffes to act as house committee of the club rooms.

Shubert Theatre, Minneapolis.

Acting as chairman of the Theatrical Protective League, Frank Boehlig declared the office of treasurer vacant and Frank Dillon was elected to the office permanently, succeeding George Carisch, who refused to continue as treasurer because the organization was not "a local."

Some opposition to the new league has developed over the fact that it proposes to cover the same territory as the old Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest instead of confining its activities to Minneapolis.

Bryson Managing Universal Exchange.

James V. Bryson, one of the most widely known moving picture men of the Northwest, is back in Minneapolis again as manager of the Minneapolis Universal Exchange, replacing L. H. Coen, who has been called to the New York office. Mr. Bryson was manager of the Minneapolis Universal Exchange until about three years ago. Since that time he has been in the independent film business and more recently was with Universal at Los Angeles, Cal.

Fox Chief Auditor in Minneapolis.

F. P. Hill, chief traveling auditor for the Fox Film Corporation, was in Minneapolis last week installing a new system of auditing at the local exchange. The Minncapolis exchange has the distinction of being the first Fox branch office to secure the new system, which will be installed in all others on the circuit.

Harrison Hatton on Publicity Job.

Harrison Hatton has been engaged by Ruben and Kinkelstein to handle publicity for their Minneapolis theatres, succeeding George Guise, who has returned to the Minneapolis Tribune editorial staff. Mr. Hatton was director of publicity for the St. Paul Association of Commerce during its "10,000 Lakes" campaign, and until recently was associated with the War Industries Board at St. Paul.

Joe Lee Visits Minneapolis.

Joe Lee, prominent in New York film circles, was a visitor in Minneapolis last week. Mr. Lee, who is sales manager for the Anita Stewart Company, gave a showing of the first of the Anita Stewart productions, "Virtuous Wives," to a select audience of exhibitors at the Strand. The picture was highly praised.

EXPRESS RULING PRESAGES TROUBLE

San Francisco Exchange Heads Get Word That Sunday Delivery and Pick-Up Are To Be Abolished

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO exchange managers received word last week that commencing at an early date the American Railway Express Company will abandon its Sunday delivery and pick-up. This will mean that film exchanges will be compelled to make arrangements of their own for this work at considerable expense.

Chaplin to Get a Surprise.

Wheeler Dryden, an English comedian and half-brother of Charles Chaplin, arrived here on the liner Siberia Maru recently from the Orient, and left shortly afterward for Los Angeles to surprise the moving picture star, whom he has not seen for twenty years.

Lift Censorship on Films for Export.

The censorship of moving pictures leaving the port of San Francisco for other countries has come to an end, and L. E. Beban, brother of George Beban, the actor, will no longer be called upon to view and censor productions intended for exhibition in China, Japan, Mexico and other countries bordering on the Pacific. As deputy for Colonel John S. Irby, surveyor of customs, he began his work last January, and since that time has reviewed 1,751,373 feet of film running the gamut from slapstick comedies to educational features and drama. His duties included the elimination of everything that might cast discredit upon the Government, give comfort or aid to the enemy, or which might be a secret means of communication. He found 76,139 feet of objectionable film.

Duhem Increases Laboratory Facilities.

Raymond A. Duhem, of the Duhem Motion Picture Manufacturing Company, has taken advantage of the temporary lull in the moving picture business to improve the facilities of the printing and developing plant and to install a machine shop. Full machine shop equipment has been purchased, and not only will camera repair work be handled, but the manufacture of rewinds and similar equipment will be engaged in. Mr. Duhem recently did the laboratory work on an interesting series of educational pictures made by the University of California, and also had full charge of a moving picture show given in connection with a tractor demonstration in this city.

New Producing Company Organized.

The American Films Producing Company has been organized to engage in the production of special feature subjects in this city, and has established headquarters at 420 Sutter street. Charles Sanders is director general, and Florian Fischer, formerly connected with the Liberty Feature Films Company, is manager of detail. The company expects to begin operations late in January.

New Manager for Berkeley House.

H. A. Merlin, who has had charge of the Strand Theatre conducted on College avenue, Berkeley, by the Beach-Krahn Amusement Company, Inc., has resigned, and has been succeeded by L. V. DeLorme, recently connected with a large house in Alameda. Mr. DeLorme is well known in this field, having been with the Rialto Theatre in San Francisco at one time, as well as with the Turner & Dahnken Circuit.

Strand Theatre Entertains Poilus.

For the second time since the arrival of French soldiers in this city en route to Siberia the Strand Theatre has played host to the visitors. On the first occasion they were entertained by Charles Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" and on the recent one by John Barrymore in "One the Quiet." The French heroes will be here for an indefinite period, and it is planned to hold open house for them at the Strand one day each week during their stay, arrangements to this end having been made through Mayor James Rolph, Jr.

Brodsky Returns from the Orient.

Ben Brodsky, whose achievements as an exhibitor and producer of moving pictures in the Orient have made him the best known operator in that field, has returned to San Francisco, and will open offices here. It is understood that he will take over the premises at 100 Golden Gate avenue, recently vacated by the Peerless Film Exchange, which has moved to 94 Golden Gate avenue.

Washington News Letter

Christmas Tree at Famous Exchange.

THERE was a real, old-time Christmassy feeling around the quarters occupied by the Famous Players-Lasky Company last week when the girl employes got together and put up a sure enough Christmas tree all covered with shiny tinsel and glittering ornaments. And it was something unusual, too, that such a celebration should occur in a motion picture film exchange.

The employes of the establishment presented Manager Oscar A. Morgan with a handsome traveling bag fitted with all of the toilet articles that go to make traveling in dusty trains more comfortable, and he in turn played Santa Claus and was responsible for the distribution of boxes of candy to each of them.

Oscar Morgan is perhaps the youngest exchange manager in Washington. This does not serve to act as an obstacle, for, to use the expression of his friends, "he is there." No man is more popular with his associates than this Famous Players-Lasky representative. He is secretary of the local exchange managers' association and has done much to make it a strong organization. He has aided in making things move. And when the employes of the exchange of which he is the manager wished him "Merry Christmas," they expressed the sentiment of a large number of exhibitors and the exchangemen in this territory.

Jasper Gets His Honorable Discharge.

All kinds of fire news was prevalent in this city last week. The only good news of this description was the honorable discharge given William E. Jasper, film man, lieutenant in the army, and now once more a film man. Lieutenant Jasper got into the service some months ago as an ordinary, everyday buck private. He had previously had some experience in telephone work and was soon given an opportunity to improve the knowledge he had by attending the Government course at the Bliss Electrical School. He emerged a non-commissioned officer and later was given shoulder straps and stationed at Camp Lee, near Petersburg, Va.

Rudolph Berger, formerly manager for the George Kleine System in Washington and in Philadelphia, was a visitor here last week, looking fine in his uniform and expressing the hope that he, too, will soon be "fired," now that the war is over, that he may get back into the film game.

Sidney B. Lust, of the Super Films Attractions, Inc., lost his Hudson speedster in the fire which consumed something like fifty automobiles stored in the Mount Pleasant Garage at Eighteenth Street and Columbia Road, Northwest. The car was insured. Mr. Lust is now speeding around town in a "jitney."

Fire in the booth of the Lyric Theatre last week caused the destruction of Select's "Midnight Patriot" and a Christie Comedy.

A Correction.

On page 1534 of the issue dated December 28 in the Washington News Letter there appeared a head "Famous Players Exhibition Room Opened." The line should have read "Fox" instead of "Famous Players."

Cincinnati News Letter

By Kenneth C. Crane, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

War Films at the Music Hall.

MUSIC HALL has again been the scene of moving picture exhibitions, with much the largest crowds to see the pictures that ever saw such performances there. The occasion was the visit to Cincinnati for nine days of the War Trophies Exhibit, backed by the United States and Allied Governments, and an interesting feature of the show was the use of the great auditorium for almost continuous exhibitions of war pictures. Most of those shown had been seen in Cincinnati before, as they were collections of the official war pictures heretofore distributed by the Pathe organization under the auspices of the Allied Governments; but they were viewed with added interest by reason of the end of the war and the touch of historical value thus given them, indicating strikingly the possibilities years hence of bringing the Great War close to students of that day. Over 200,000 people attended the exhibit. William Ganson Rose, who had charge for the Government, gave special attention to the moving picture end, as he is a member of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information.

I. Frankel Robbed.

I. Frankel, president of the Ante-Frankel Amusement Company, operating a string of theatres in Cincinnati, was the victim of a highly practical burglar recently, as the midnight visitor to his home got away with money amounting to $55 and jewelry valued at $600. As usual, in such cases, he left no trace.

Holiday Shows at Cincinnati Theatres.

Programs for holiday week in Cincinnati indicated that the moving picture houses had got together with the film men for the purpose of showing some unusually good productions in honor of Christmas. The Walnut showed Annette Kellerman in her latest aquatic attraction, "Queen of the Sea," supplemented by a Sennett comedy and the first pictures seen here of the surrender of the German fleet. The Strand had Elsie Ferguson's latest Artcraft picture, "Under a Greenwood Tree," while the Gifts had William Farnum in a film version of the popular Zane Grey novel, "The Rainbow Trail," with a Harold Lloyd comedy to furnish laughs, and Charley Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms," at the Bijou made Fountain Square a place of mirth. The return of Gaby Deslys to pictures gave the Alhambra a fine attraction, the famous French dancer appearing there in "Infatuation." This brief summary shows strikingly the wide variety of offerings available for the theatregoer, and, while perhaps a trifle better than usual, indicates the kind of amusement menu spread pretty regularly for the public.

Clifford Theatre Opened Christmas Day.

The new Clifford Theatre, Urbana, Ohio, Billy "Single" Clifford's latest and finest house, opened on Christmas Day with a splendid General Film program, headed by a Sherry feature, "Out of the Night," with a Rainbow comedy and pictures of the famous Fourth of July parade in which American and Allied troops participated in Paris. The Clifford seats 1,200 persons, and is modern from basement to roof in every respect.

FRIEDBERG BUYS TWO MORE THEATRES

Pennsylvania Exhibitor Takes Over the American at Mount Oliver and the American in Pittsburgh

By Elmer H. Mayer, 231 Collins Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

NATHAN FRIEDBERG, part owner of the Alhambra Theatre, East Liberty, and the Strand and Fairyland, in Cleveland, is apparently branching out and extending his chain of theatres. During the week of December 15 he closed deals for two houses in the Pittsburgh section and disposed of the Strand in Cleveland.

The company of which he is the head bought the American, Mount Oliver, taking over the house Saturday, December 21. Two soldier boys, Ben Amdursky and William Davis, are managers of the house. The former was discharged from the navy and the latter from the army recently. The American was formerly owned by Charles O. Duvie. It is a 400-seat house and should be transformed into a profitable proposition.

Friedberg has also taken over the American Theatre, on the south side, and reopened it Monday, December 23. L. W. Kniskern, formerly manager of the Pittsburgh Paramount office, is associated with Mr. Friedberg in this proposition, and will be the active manager of the house. The theatre was formerly owned by George A. Jones. It has a capacity of 500, but will be enlarged and greatly enhanced in appearance in the near future.

The Strand Entertainment Company, of which Mr. Friedberg is the president, and which has conducted the Strand Theatre in Cleveland for the past two years, has sold that house in Cleveland, and the representative there, Dave Adler, will confine his activities to the company's other theatre in the Forest City, the Fairyland, a neighborhood house, enjoying good patronage.

Neal Had a Real Taste of War.

S. S. Neal, the latest addition to the Pittsburgh Goldwyn road force, has had a real taste of war. Born in London, England, he came to America many years ago. When war broke out he immediately enlisted in the British army, and within fourteen weeks after the first shot was fired he was on French soil fighting for his country. He was a member of the Twenty-eighth Battalion, Middlesex Regiment, otherwise known as the "Diehards," and with them he fought two years and nine months. He was wounded five times by shrapnel, and on account of this was honorably discharged at Christmas, 1916.

Loew Takes Over the Lyceum.

Marcus Loew has taken over the Lyceum Theatre in Pittsburgh, and renamed it Loew's Lyceum. The house is being run with a combination policy of first-run feature photoplays and vaudeville, and was opened Monday, December 16. The attraction the opening week was Dorothy Gish in "The Hope Chest" and the second week "The Squaw Man" was the headliner. Business is reported as being very good.

Film Clearing House Branch Opens.

The Pittsburgh branch of the Film Clearing House has been opened at 412 Ferry street and the office is now ready for business. J. F. Burhans is the manager. He was formerly manager of the Pittsburgh Fox branch.

Moundsville Still Closed.

Moundsville, W. Va., is still closed as a result of the influenza epidemic. M. A. Sybert, of the Park Theatre, says he has been closed thirteen weeks and no relief is in sight as yet.

Doris Reopens Under the Name of Victory.

The old Doris Theatre, at 827 Wood street, Wilkinsburg, was reopened Saturday, December 21, by the Victory Amusement Company, composed of Robert R. Johns and Charles L. Eaton. The house was formerly conducted by J. W. Hunter. It has a capacity of 350 and was remodeled and greatly enhanced in appearance prior to the opening. The new name of the theater is the Victory.

Mr. Johns just recently returned from France, where he was shell-shocked and gassed, but otherwise uninjured. He was formerly employed at the Rowland Theatre, Wilkinsburg, and has ample experience to make the house a success. The other member of the firm is still in service of the navy, and is now at Lewis, Del., awaiting discharge.

Megowan New Manager of Hatch Exchange

Harry Megowan is now manager of the Pittsburgh Hatch exchange, succeeding J. F. Behan, who resigned to spend some time with his aged mother in Pottstown, N. Y. Harry is one of the oldest film men in Pittsburgh, but recently has had charge of the C. O. D. film business for the American Express Company.

"Shoulder Arms" Smashes Another Record.

It is claimed that "Shoulder Arms" has broken more house records than any other picture in the Pittsburgh territory. The latest performance in this line is reported by E. W. Elder, owner of a small house, the Grand, at Wilmerding, Pa. Mr. Elder says his house has only 180 seats and that he made a big profit with Charlie Chaplin's latest production. He was obliged to stop selling tickets several times and when the ticket seller was finally through for the night she was obliged to make her exit through a side door—it was impossible to get through the lobby and out the front door.

Melanos Bros. Gave Free Christmas Shows.

Melanos Brothers, proprietors of the Frederick and Loyal theatres at East Pittsburgh, gave a free show at both theatres on Christmas morning. At the Frederick, Baby Marie Osborne was the attraction and at the Loyal the Lee Kiddies entertained the young folks and women in attendance. Every child in attendance was given a box of candy and the women were presented with flowers. Over 500 pounds of sweets were distributed on the occasion. A big Christmas tree at the Frederick imparted the proper Yuletide spirit.

Not only the residents of East Pittsburgh were remembered by the Melancos Brothers, for on the day before Christmas they came to Pittsburgh with their auto laden down in regular Santa Claus fashion and stopped at every exchange in Pittsburgh with whom the firm is doing business, and distributed candy to the girls, cigarettes and cigars to the men, and more costly presents to the more important officials, such as managers, bookers, etc. Not one person was overlooked and the Melanos boys were certainly a popular pair that day.

TO MAKE THE GRAND A MODERN HOUSE

Bloomington Manager Will Spend $15,000 in Remodeling—Pictures Only on the Program

By Indiana Trade News Service, 69 Layman Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

WITH the termination of the great war removing restrictions on building and anxiety from the home, Robert Harris, manager of the Harris-Grand and Princess theatres at Bloomington, Ind., is perfecting arrangements to proceed with the remodeling of the Harris-Grand Theatre, work on which was about to be started just before the Government restrictions went into effect.

Mr. Harris, who heretofore has operated the Grand as a combination vaudeville and motion picture theatre, intends to do away with the vaudeville and turn the house over to the exhibition of feature film productions. Pictures have always been operated exclusively at the Princess.

"Over thirteen years ago when I built the Harris-Grand there was not a better theatre in any city in Indiana of double the population of Bloomington," said Mr. Harris, "and when I shall have finished with my present plans there will not be a more beautiful playhouse in this section of the state than the Grand.

"The policy of the house also will be changed. I am trying to keep apace with the rapid changes in the amusement business and in doing so I believe it will be best to abandon the present vaudeville program and substitute in its place nothing except the largest picture productions the market offers, with music and lighting effects to be in keeping with the program.

The seating capacity will be arranged so that about 500 additional seats will be installed, making the capacity of the theatre about 1,700. I expect to spend about $15,000 in carrying out foregoing plans."

Bloomington, being the site of Indiana university, at which several thousand students are enrolled, has always been regarded as an excellent motion picture town, and the exhibitors of the place are looking forward to an exceptionally good year in 1919.

Will Build Big Theatre in Kokomo.

Kokomo, Ind., will have an attractive new motion picture house about the middle of next summer if the present plans of J. W. Johnson, of that city, are realized, and present indications are that they will be. The new theatre, which Mr. Johnson proposes to erect, will not only be the largest of any in the city, but will be far more modern and up-to-date in appearance and equipment that any in that section of the state.

Messrs. McGraw and Stevenson, Kokomo architects, who are drawing the plans, say it will be patterned after some of the most prominent motion picture theatres in the country. It will be constructed of marble, concrete and brick and will be located in North Main street on the present site of the Deardorff garage and the McKee grocery store.

Mr Johnson has issued a five-year lease on the new theatre to Merrill M. Moore, owner of the Paramount Theatre. Mr. Moore says his action in leasing the new theatre will not interfere in any way with the operation of the Paramount. He says the new theatre is not to be erected with a view of supplanting any of the present theatres, but for the purpose of giving the people of Kokomo a real up-to-the-minute photoplay house.

Work on the proposed theatre will be started in the early spring in the hope that it will be completed and ready to be opened by the first of August. Tentative plans call for a marble lobby, an attractive foyer and a number of other unusual and attractive conveniences. A pipe organ and ten-piece orchestra are to be used to furnish music, Mr. Moore says, and the best program of motion pictures that can be obtained will be presented at popular prices.

Rambles Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

Life in California Agrees with Van, World's Greatest Scenarioist.

ONE glance at the accompanying illustration will prove how the glorious climate of Los Angeles agrees with Mrs. H. H. Van Loan and her husband. In the East "H. H." stands for "Hurry Home," something he never did in these parts; what it means in California we wot not. We might opine from the expression on his face that "Hellishly Happy" would be very appropriate.

And with his beautiful wife so close at hand why shouldn't he be? Think, also, of the cash he's accumulating from writing serials and features for screen stars? Think of the kale he's banking as a result of serious effort to write for the screen the way the screen should be written for! With his wife to inspire him and his native gifts to draw upon small wonder that Van is progressing by "scrips and Bonds."

Incidentally, be it observed, that "Hurry Home" or "Hellishly Happy" smokes a pipe. That's another sign of his unselfishness—because here in the office of RAMBLES we are smoking long black cigars that came to us in two big cedar chests on Christmas morning right from Van, the pipe smoker.

Happy New Year, Van!

ON his mad rush 'cross country Joe Lee piled five reels of Anita Stewart into his suit case at Minneapolis and started for Des Moines. He was sweetly dozing when the brakeman shouted "Anita" at a 1,200 town in Iowa. A little further along "Stuart" was announced and finally "Lee" was passed with due ceremony.

Arriving in Des Moines Joe joined out a painter and shipped new station signs to the town that had its name spelled wrong. Now it's properly spelled—Stewart.

Investigating his Rand-McNally Joe discovered that Lee is in Massachusetts and not in Iowa, as he first reported to make his story stand up.

"And," adds Josephus, "I'm mighty glad my name is not Marblehead."

While Reviewers Differ in Opinion Exhibitors Are Sometimes Unanimous

OUT of the same issue of the Exhibitors' Herald we clip opinions from exhibitors who have shown the pictures referred to and have, therefore, submitted them to the best of all tests—the jolly old box-office window. Reviewers for the trade papers are restricted to an opinion that borders closely upon fortune-telling. They see pictures in a projection room and then write opinions that, very frequently, are no more unanimous than those we quote hereunder:

"To Hell With the Kaiser, with Olive Tell and Lawrence Grant (Screen-Classics).—Delayed showing. Would have cleaned up with this one if we had not been obliged to postpone playing date, but as the war has ended since that time it took almost the entire receipts to pay film rental, advertising and war tax. A picture that has seen its best days.—P. R. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, S. D.

WHEN the unique card of holiday greeting from Fred Schaefer, of General, got out into distribution channels, there was considerable comment. It took the form of wondering how the copy was obtained for the classic decorative motif—said motif being a picture of said Schaefer in unconventional everyday pose like that of a movie star in a "publicity still."

The only difference noted was that Schaefer hadn't his pants pressed and wasn't careful about being well lighted. The secret of this picture is now discovered.

It wasn't specially posed, but was carefuly cut out of an 8x10 that had on it a distinguished line-up consisting of K. C. B., Earle Williams, Roy K. Moulton, Corinne Griffith, Homer Croy and A. Roosevelt.

"Of course," says Schaefer, "it would have been much more interesting to have left the others on. They can get even, however, by taking the same still next year and working it up to suit themselves. I figure that this same 8x10 still has left in it material for six more individual greeting cards.

Rambles Round Filmtown

Once a Reviewer Always a Reviewer.

TOSSED about by the rule of a cruel, cruel boss, Fritz von Hein-Tidden has, of late, been sitting in at "first nights" and writing for the Mirror his expert opinion of many and various sorts of dramatic entertainments as provided for New Yorkers and visitors to our city at the theatres. He goes where duty calls, but his heart is still in the projection room, as witness his:

Lamentation.

Out of the gloom I cry in dismal tones
A bitter wail to my brave comrades once,
With whom I pictures viewed, and wrote my thoughts,
A critic stern, yet honored and beloved.
Ah, those were golden hours, among my friends
I numbered screen stars great and beautiful,
And sage press agents, of the HILL type some,
(Though these were rare, and now, I hear, non est.)
Howbeit, in that time of Youth and Spring
And fine ambition, happier than I
Were none, my soul in gracious films dissolved
And reveled in a flood of intellect;
Ah, little then I deemed that I should sink
Into the sordid stage mire, cheek by jowl
With actorines and actors of the sort
Known as "legitimate," a sorry bunch
Beyond the camera pale, outcasts indeed.
Ah, cruel Fate! yet like a modest flower
Whose petals are besmirched by gutter stains,
There still remains the boon of memory,
The thought that in the Garden of Elect
I erstwhile bloomed and budded gloriously;
I once was a REVIEWER, naught can snatch
From me that old-time laurel, lost in dreams
Of sweet projection rooms and five-reel joys
I wander blissfully until the harsh
Alarm clock clangs its summons in mine ear,
And I awake to weep the passing of
The Silent Drama, and those dear, dead days!

Marine News from Vitagraph.

In "Hoarded Assets" Betty Blythe appears in a scene where she steps jauntily off a motor boat as it pulls up to a dock. In the film Miss Blythe does this stunt very gracefully, but at rehearsal—well that's something else again.

A slip, a grab at a beam, dock slippery and Miss Blythe finally pulled out dripping wet with a perfectly good costume ruined.

Pearl White Serial Starts Pathe Program January 5

THE Pathe program for January 5 is bountiful in its measure of New Year offerings, the biggest feature of which is the opening episode of the Pearl White serial, "The Lightning Raider," entitled "The Ebony Block." Miss White is supported by a strong cast, including Warner Oland.

Gloria Joy, the little comedienne, offers an exceptionally clever entertainment in the two-reel comedy, "I Want to Be a Lady," which shows how the child impersonates a mature liliputian, gets a theatrical engagement and starts a whimsical story on its merry way.

Stan Laurel, the English comedian, is seen in a characertistic Rolin comedy, "Do You Love Your Wife?" The laughs do not lie in the answer—for that, indeed does not matter. The fact that the comedy has the warmest indorsement from the National Federation of American Housewives might indicate that, after all, it is even more than a laughing matter.

Post Travel Series No. 26 gives intimate views of "Modern Japan" from the industrial point of view and is one of the most interesting and instructive of the collection.

Official War Review No. 28 deals with the activities of the American, French, the British and the Italian armies under the inclusive title "The End of Prussianism—the Coming of Peace—The Era of Reconstruction."

Vinnie Burns with Doris Kenyon.

June Daye, known for her work with Lubin, Biograph, Crystal and other companies, is June Daye no longer. She is now plain Vinnie Burns, which is the name that legally belongs to her and was given her at her birth. Miss Burns is playing a prominent part in Doris Kenyon's latest release, "Wild Honey." Under her correct name, she hopes to re-establish the great following which she built up by her clever work on both the stage and screen.

Under the name of Vinnie Burns she began her stage career at the age of five years in "Ben Hur." She remained with that production for several seasons, after which she was with the Ben Greet players in many famous productions. Then the screen lured her.

Lewis Climbs Mountain Seeking Big Locations

MITCHELL LEWIS has started on his second picture for Select. It will be "Children of Banishment," a novel of the great outdoors by Francis William Sullivan. He is being directed by Noval MacGreggor, a man who is first kin to the lands of ice and snow. Mr. Lewis has selected the site of a lumber company in the Yosemite Valley. The only entrance and exit to the camp leads up and down the longest and steepest incline railroad in the world. It is 8,000 feet from the base of the mountain to the camp location. Mr. Lewis and his entire company took chances in reaching the location of this camp.

The trip to camp was made in flat cars in zero weather, with a huge snowplow breaking a way through the swirling drifts. Once, when the train stopped to allow the plow to break a path through an unusually large drift, Mr. Lewis left the flat car and climbed out on a projecting ledge overlooking the valley 4,000 feet below. Recent rains had evidently undermined the foundation, for just as Mr. Lewis stood upright the ground crumbled away, and the big boulder started on a crashing trip through trees and brush to the level below. Mr. Lewis jumped clear and grabbed the limb of an overhanging tree, but for several seconds he was forced to fight for a tread-mill footing on the slipping rock until he was able to swing himself to one side.

Farrar Goldwyn Policy Approved by Picturegoers

GERALDINE FARRAR is demonstrating in her Goldwyn Star Series productions what far-sightedness and wisdom will do toward accomplishing box-office results for motion picture exhibitors.

When the diva joined the Goldwyn ranks in September it was announced that Miss Farrar would abandon the pageant and costume plays for big, up-to-the-minute modern dramas. This was good news for exhibitors and still better news for theatregoers. The adoption of this policy for the Geraldine Farrar-Goldwyn productions has resulted in the warm approval of fans.

Miss Farrar's first two Star Series releases, "The Turn of the Wheel" and "The Hell Cat," have unquestionably marked the diva as one of the greatest portrayers of intensely dramatic roles.

Miss Farrar's success in "The Hell Cat," a powerful melodrama of the Western plains, written for her by Willard Mack and directed by Reginald Barker, has added considerably to the prestige and position she enjoys on the screen. The novelty of seeing the celebrity in a primitive role, fighting and clawing amid the rugged characters of the Rockies, appealed tremendously to screen followers and they demonstrated their approval to the splendid financial profit of exhibitors.

Miss Farrar's coming Star Series releases will be equal, in dramatic power, to the first two. Her next release, "Shadows," is another virile story by Willard Mack. It is a drama of Eastern days and Alaskan nights, in which Miss Farrar will be first seen amid the environments of an Alaskan dance hall and then as a gorgeously gowned woman of New York. Miss Farrar is supported by Milton Sills and Tom Santschi, stars in their own right and among the most popular leading men of the screen.

William Farnum to Make Big Picture in Florida

ENVIOUS of the reputation made by Los Angoles and perceiving the industrial development possibilities that lie in the manufacture of motion pictures, several live cities are trying to lure film producers to locate within their confines.

San Antonio is among the foremost of the cities now angling for film studios to increase industrial importance. Merchants and others interested in the welfare of San Antonio have inaugurated a movement, which is well backed financially, to bring film companies to that city.

Another city which sees the possibilities of film production as a stimulus to industry and trade is Miami, Fla. The advent of the vanguard of the William Farnum company that is to film a big special feature in Florida was hailed by Miami newspapers as marking the beginning of a new era in Miami's industrial life.

Edward Sedgewick, assistant to Richard Stanton—who will direct Farnum in this picture—and William Mach, general technical director of the Fox corporation, arrived in Miami last week to select locations and to prepare for the filming of the exteriors of the picture, which has been given the temporary title, "The Lucky Charm."

Several scenes will be taken in and around the Florida Everglades. One of these scenes will show a Hindu city and another a jungle village. Before the arrival of Mr. Farnum and his supporting cast it will be necessary to construct the Hindu city, including an imposing Hindu temple, and make changes in the Florida scenery, so that it will conform with the scenery of India. Mr. Bach and Mr. Sedgewick were accompanied by a crew of mechanics, modelers, etc., who will work under their direction, with the assistance of local labor.

"The Silver King" Released January 12.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that it will release the Paramount-Artcraft special, "The Silver King," on January 12, instead of Thomas H. Ince's "The False Faces," also a special, which was originally scheduled for that date. The Ince picture will be released in February.

William Faversham, star of the legitimate stage, appears in the title role of "The Silver King," which is an adaptation of the play of the same name by Henry Arthur Jones, which during the many years of its presentation since its premiere in London in 1882 achieved one of the greatest success in the history of English drama. Wilson Barrett produced the play in London and appeared himself in the leading role. Supporting Mr. Faversham as leading woman is Barbara Castleton. Burns Mantle, dramatic editor of the New York Mail, prepared the scenario.

MacDonald Out of Service.

The officers of the Triangle Distributing Corporation had the pleasure of extending to Wallace MacDonald, former Triangle star, a hearty welcome when he called at their offices on December 18.

MacDonald was visiting New York for a few days to greet old friends and to renew acquaintances, after several months' services in the Canadian artillery, in which he enlisted last spring. He left for California last week, where he expects to visit friends and renew his activities as a film actor.

Keiler Closes for First Nationals.

Leo Keiler, president of the Arcade Theatre Company, in Paducah, who was in Louisville recently, closed with the Big Feature Rights Corporation for practically all the pictures of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

"Made in America" Shows Building of a Soldier

MADE in America," the story of the American soldier from the day he was drafted up to the time he was winning victory on the fields of France is, in brief, the ground covered by this remarkable series which has patriotism for its keynote.

While there is a great deal of talk on the future success of the war picture, it has little or no bearing on "Made in America," as it was never intended to show it while we were at grips with the enemy. It is essentially a peace picture—a timely aftermath when our armies in the field are being crowned for victory achieved.

In eight episodes, it shows how the American doughboy was trained within a period of less than a year to win battles against the super-trained Prussians. It gives an accurate knowledge of how this was accomplished because the picture follows a soldier's career step by step.

The play is finely cast with able motion picture favorites. Richard Turner, Edward Burns, Philip Sanford, Brian Darley, Lillian Lawrence, Florida Kingsley and Emily Merceau have the most important parts, while the rest of the cast, some 10,000 in number, is made up of American soldiers.

"Made in America" was produced and directed by Ashley Miller and is published and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathe Exchange, Inc. The Government co-operated with the producer and publisher, and it is, therefore, authoritative in every respect.

There is plenty of action in it to satisfy those who love adventure, and yet it lacks the "blood and thunder stuff." The picture has a dash of romance that is pleasing, but it does not depend upon the old, old story to give an enjoyable entertainment. To the contrary, "Made in America" has human interest, personal appeal and American spirit.

Country Store in "Sis Hopkins."

An old-fashioned country store plays a prominent part in "Sis Hopkins," the Goldwyn picture, starring Mabel Normand. It is such an emporium as can be found nowadays only in the smallest villages, and it is such a place that New Harmony is.

Down to the smallest detail the store is a replica of the kind everyone knows. Hams and gingham, soap and shoes, mackeral and bay rum crowd the shelves and floor. Needless to say a large stock of stick candy, lollipops and molasses "kisses" are in the glass showcases. Miss Normand said that not since "Joan of Plattsburg" had she enjoyed herself so much. Most people remember the army canteen around which important scenes in the comedy-drama were played. And the same thing happened to the stock of sweets in "Sis Hopkins" that befell other candies in the former play.

Director Clarence G. Badger and his assistant had their hands full—or rather Miss Normand had her hands full—of candy and they had to see to it that the stuff lasted long enough to photograph the scenes.

Post Travel Shows "Japan of Today."

More interesting news of "Japan of Today" are shown in No. 26 of the Post Travel Series, released by Pathe January 5. It is an ideal educational. The titles are informative, showing how Nippon has become a great industrial centre, although having little raw product for use. The film opens with the scene showing how the Japanese make rope out of straw. The ways of weaving the strands and putting them together forms a very interesting picture.

Views of various other industries in Japan, including the making of lanterns, match boxes and other products, are presented to form what is believed to be the most interesting of the Post Travels so far issued.

Siberian Views in Official No. 27.

Official War Review No. 27, for release December 30, will be of particualr interest in that it gives the first scenes ever shown of the operations of the American army in Siberia, where the war is not yet over. Views aro given of the great naval barracks at Vladivostok, where eight thousand American soldiers were quartered; while warehouses along the shore are shown to be crammed with war materials and munitions saved by the Allies from falling into the hands of the Huns. Doughboys are seen guarding treasures of copper, wool, tin, rubber and wire redeemed for use of the Allies.

Play and Original Scripts on Vitagraph Program

A GREAT stage success is transferred to the screen, a book which has proved unusually successful is converted into a cinema play and four original scripts of dramatic potentiality are interpreted before the camera. That, in a sentence, sums up Vitagraph's contribution to the screen for the last two weeks in January and for February in toto.

The first of these is "The Lion and the Mouse," the play that, in its stage version, as written by Charles Klein and presented by Charles Frohman, gave each of these a fortune in itself.

The release schedule in full, just issued, is as follows: January 20, Earle Williams in "The Highest Trump"; January 27, Gladys Leslie in "Fortune's Child"; February 3, Harry T. Morey in "Silent Strength"; February 10, Alice Joyce in "The Lion and the Mouse"; February 17, Corinne Griffith in "The Girl Question"; February 24, Bessie Love in "The Wishing Ring Man."

Alice Joyce plays the role of Shirley Rossmore in "The Lion and the Mouse." In her support are to be found Conrad Nagil, Anders Randolf, Henry Hallam, W. T. Carlton, Mona Kingsley, Jane Jennings, Mary Carr and Templer Saxe. Tom Terriss is the director.

The book play on the list is "The Wishing Ring Man." The play is based on the book of that name by Margaret Widdemer. It is a delightfully romantic story, just the kind that Bessie Love knows so well how to act. It is being completed out in Hollywood. David Smith is directing it.

Earle Williams figures not only as the star of "The Highest Trump," but is one of the authors as well. With H. H. Van Loan he constructed this play, which deals with the heroism of an American aviator who, on account of his resemblance with a pro-German brother who had died, is enabled to be of special service to his government. Grace Darmond plays the heroine and James Young directs the picture.

Harry T. Morey, in "Silent Strength," adds to his achievements one of the most telling picture plays in which he has ever been seen. It is a story of double identity. The results achieved in double exposure are remarkable. The technical line which bisects scenes of this kind, with the double of the character carefully superimposed on the half of the space not occupied by the original, vanishes entirely.

"Fortune's Child," full of action and incident, gives Gladys Leslie opportunities. It is a happy combination of mystery, love, kidnappers and a baby. Miriam Miles, Denton Vane, Kempton Greene and Stanley Walpole are among Miss Leslie's ideally cast support. The play was written by Lawrence McCloskey and directed by Joseph Gleason.

"The Girl Question" deals with the close-range psychological studies of woman on the part of a young novelist. Corinne Griffith as Erminie Foster has one of the best roles of her career. Walter McGrail, Agnes Ayres, Julia Swayne Gordon and Eulalie Jensen are prominent among her supporting cast. The play was written by Joseph Franklin Poland and directed by Kenneth Webb.

Lincoln Is Southerner in "Fighting Through"

ON January 27 the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will release "Fighting Through," formerly announced under the title of "The American Spirit." E. K. Lincoln is the star and William Christy Cabanne the producer, author and director. It will be distributed through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

E. K. Lincoln plays the difficult role of Robert Carr, a Southerner, who has been brought up by his grandfather, a veteran of the Civil War and a believer in the Lost Cause of the South. The grandson has been taught to look upon the North as an enemy country.

Young Carr is engaged to marry Maryland Warren, a daughter of the new South, but true love receives its jolt when circumstances force her to believe her lover a coward. How he redeems himself not only in the eyes of the girl, but in his own conscience, makes "Fighting Through" a swiftly moving, pulse-stirring, two-fisted story of love and adventure.

Millicent Fisher is the heroine, and others in support of E. K. Lincoln are Hayward Mack, Fredercik Broom, Spottiswoode Aitken and Helen Dunbar.

"After the War" (Universal).

"After the War" is the title of the second Universal special attraction to be released in 1919. "The Wildcat of Paris," featuring Priscilla Dean, is the first U. S. A. film for the new year, and "After the War" supplants Harry Carey's "Roped," which was originally scheduled for release January 13.

Doris Kenyon's "Twilight" Is Approaching Completion

DORIS KENYON'S latest picture, "Twilight," is rapidly approaching completion at the Biograph studios. All of the exteriors of the production were made in the mountains near Hendersonville, N. C., where some of the most beautiful scenery in the United States is to be found. The humanness of the scenes were enhanced by the employment of more than a hundred mountaineers and wood-choppers, in addition to a dozen yoke of oxen.

The interior scenes are correspondingly beautiful, J. Searle Dawley, the director, having created some lighting effects.

Theodore C. Deitrich, president of Miss Kenyon's company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., declares that "Twilight" will be by far Miss Kenyon's most beautiful production. "The story of 'Twilight' is such a beautiful one," said Mr. Deitrich, "that it had to be made in the most exquisite settings. To that end, Miss Kenyon and I engaged J. Searle Dawley, whom we had long considered one of the most artistic and painstaking directors in the profession. Mr. Dawley had practically decided to lay aside the strenuous work of directing and to devote all of his time to literary work. We induced him, however, to become Miss Kenyon's director, and the wisdom of our course has been more than justified. Mr. Dawley is not only ultra-artistic in his work, but has a remarkable knowledge of dramatic values."

The story of "Twilight" was written by Vingie E. Roe, and appeared in an October magazine. The screen adaptation was made by Louis Joseph Vance.

Smiling Bill Gets Into Woolly Togs.

It you've laughted at the antics of "Smiling Bill" Parsons in the past you may roar at the sight of the corpulent star and creator of Capitol Comedies disporting himself in chaps, sombrero and holster in several scenes of "You Know What I Mean."

For a while "Smiling Bill" is as desperate a bandit as ever held up a Western stage coach, but it's through no fault of his. The job is wished on him at the point of a gun in the hand of a real desperado, who meets Bill in the road and compels him to exchange clothes with him and take his horse, the bandit, known as "Desperate Bill," having received word that the sheriff and a posse are gunning for him.

"Breed of Men" Is Hart's Next.

"Breed of Men," which is the title finally decided upon for William S. Hart's Artcraft picture, is finished and bids fair to be one of the most effective of the star's westerns. It has a novel theme, the machinations of a land shark and the duping of the daredevil sheriff, portrayed by Mr. Hart, who later acquits himself with honor and brings the culprit to justice. The settings are most elaborate. A library setting alone occupied practically the entire studio. In addition there are the scenes taken at the Chicago stockyards and the splendid views of the open country representing the bottom lands of Arizona.

Seena Owen has a most excellent part as leading woman.

Signal Shows "Virtuous Wives" a Week.

Frank H. Dowler, Jr., general manager of the Signal Amusement Company at Chattanooga, Tenn., has the distinction of being the first exhibitor in Kentucky and Tennessee to run "Virtuous Wives," with Anita Stewart as the star. He secured the picture for the week of December 29, the release date.

Tony Sudekum, head of the Crescent Amusement Company in Nashville, was so impressed with the "broadside" sent out by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit to the trade that he ordered a supply of them for his patrons.

Exhibitors' Mutual Lists Five January Releases

THE Exhibitors' Mutual, in addition to their four regular releases, will offer on January 26 a special written and directed by Ralph Ince for the Affiliated Distributing Corporation. It is called "The Eleventh Commandment," starring Lucille Lee Stewart.

Among the other stars of the January list is Bessie Barriscale, who brings her familiar zest to the role of an amateur lady Raffles in "All of a Sudden Norma," for release January 5.

In the offering of January 12, William Desmond as the star of "Life's a Funny Proposition," has a problem on his hands to know what to do with a spare Belgian baby wished on him under compromising circumstances.

Sessue Hayakawa has an excellent opportunity to exhibit his skill as the depictor of two entirely different roles in "Bonds of Honor," for release January 19. One of the twin brothers he presents is wayward and lacking the courage necessary to expiate with his life a crime by which he has tarnished the honor of his family, the other is austere and self-sacrificing. The latter character, slow-moving and somber until forced by dramatic pressure to swift action, is easily adapted to the natural talents of this Japanese screen favorite; the former, however, with his breezy waywardenss and his typical human weaknesses, unknown to our conception of the men of the Shinto faith, forces upon the Jap a difficult acting problem.

In "Hoop-La," Billie Rhodes has a boisterous, rollicking medium as a circus girl. This picture will issue January 26. It was produced by the National Film Corporation of America and is released through the Affiliated Distributing Corporation.

"The Scarlet Trail" (G. and L.)

"The Scarlet Trail," which made its first appearance recently at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre, was inspired by the "Don't Take A Chance," the work of Charles Larned Robinson, and of which more than two million copies have already been distributed throughout the United States Army and Navy by the Y. M. C. A. and other welfare organizations. It is a plea to parents and children against sex indiscretion and the ravages which ultimately accrue therefrom. "The Scarlet Trail" depicts in dramatic form the incipient causes, development and effects which have despoiled the lives of so many.

Beth Ivins, Vincent Coleman, Margaret Blanc and John Costello are the features players. The direction is by John S. Lawrence, who is also responsible for the scenario.

The picture bears the indorsement of the Hygiene Division of the American Defense Society. The offices of the G. & L. Features are at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

"Marriage for Convenience" (Keeney).

Frank A. Keeney announces that the title of the fouth photoplay starring Catherine Calvert is "Marriage for Convenience," which is now ready for release. It is a melodramatic story, involving the upper set of society, written by E. Lloyd Sheldon, the well known playwright. Bennet Musson is given credit for the adaptation, and Sidney Olcott has been the director.

A notable gathering of exchange men and exhibitors attended a recent private showing of "Marriage for Convenience" at the Keeney projection room, and the consensus had it that Miss Calvert's portrayal of a southern belle adds materially to an inherently good and vibrant story. The plot and denouement are unconventional.

"Marriage for Convenience" will be distributed through the exchanges of the William L. Sherry Service in the territories of New York, northern New Jersey, and western Connecticut. The other territories are handled by the exchanges of General Film.

Red Cross Will Show the Homecoming of Soldiers

THE mothers and relatives of the two million American boys who landed in France to end the reign of Kaiserism will find interesting snap shots of the boys on their way home in the new Amercian Red Cross single reel picture entitled "Homeward Bound," a General Film release.

This picture presents the customary experience of the average soldier ordered home. It teems with humor and with all displays the half sentimental regard for France which imbued American fighters.

It begins with scenes of the last of the great Red Cross warehouses on the American front and the winding up of affairs of the last of the long link of hospitals built by the Amercian Red Cross, in the wake of America's advancing arms. It portrays the departure of several hundred Red Cross ambulance drivers who had survived the perils of nearly four years on the battle fronts of Europe. An idea of the hardships courageously met by these American women and their labors in behalf of boys who have had to drop out of the line are revealed in picturesque fashion. At the close of the picture camions loaded with doughboys bidding farewell to France are seen leaving the camps on their way to the great bridge of ships in which they are returning home.

Official War Review No. 28.

The Italian Alpini, soldiers of the eternal snows, who won victory after victory in the clouds, are shown in their offensive against the Austrians in the Official War Review No. 28, for release January 5. The splendidly trained war dogs, couriers who could traverse spaces where no human foot could go, are shown carrying messages and succor. A band of Albanese guerrillas storm a peak held by the enemy and capture it; scenes of the celebration of the triumph are shown in Albania; General Ferrier offers and receives congratulations and Albanian dancers lead the jollification. Further interesting scenes are shown with the Americans.

Fox Pins Button on His Star.

William Fox pinning on breast of William Farnum the first Red Cross button sold in the recent Red Cross membership drive. This picture was taken in front of Mr. Farnum's home.

George Baker, Man of Parts, Creator of "The Spender"

THE career of George D. Baker, who supervised "The Spender," the delightful Metro comedy in which Bert Lytell comes into his own as one of the screen's most brilliant comedians, reads like fiction. He has been successively a newspaper reporter, cartoonist, actor, scenario writer, producer of stage and screen plays and a director.

His achievements in motion picture work, like the telling and effective results he has obtained in "The Spender," have always shown him to be a man of vlsion and constructive ability.

Not only did Mr. Baker supervise the general production of "The Spender," but he wrote the scenario in collaboration with A. G. Kenyon, selected the cast, which includes Thomas Jefferson, son of the late Joseph Jefferson; Mary Anderson, and Clarence Burton, and cut and assembled the picture with Charles Swickard, who directed the comedy. In less skillful hands this charming, entertaining story of the rejuvenation of a crusty old miser into a benefactor, through the advice of his hustling young nephew, might have been only an ordinary photodrama.

As it is, "The Spender," under the guidance of Mr. Baker and his associates, together with the admirable acting of Mr. Lytell, is one of the most appealing comedy romances ever made by Metro, and does full justice to the original story written by Frederick Orin Bartlett and published in the Saturday Evening Post.

Mr. Baker enjoys the distinction of having directed Nazimova in her first two Nazimova productions, "Revelation" and "Toys of Fate," which made her overnight the foremost star in motion pictures. Following the completion of these two magnificent productions he was made manager of production of Metro's West Coast studio, where he has supervised the pictures of Bert Lytell, May Allison, Edith Storey, Viola Dana, Anna Q. Nilssen and Franklyn Farnum, and others made by these stars on the Coast the last six months.

"The Prussian Cur" is Timely.

With the Peace Conference about to open and the proposed League of Nations as the paramount topic of news and editorial comment, exhibitors are finding in "The Prussian Cur," it is announced by the Fox Film Corporation, a popularity even greater than when the outcome of the world struggle still was in doubt.

"The Prussian Cur" deals with the diplomacy which precipitated the war and the vast Prussian system of propaganda and crime by which it was hoped to intimidate Americans. One effect of the League of Nations, as announced by President Wilson, would be to stamp out all secret diplomacy with its resultant elaborate systems of spying and plotting against the peace of the world.

Like "The Birth of a Nation," "The Prussian Cur" is a great historical epic, the Fox office states—opening, as it does, a comparison of the policies of Wilhelm I of Prussia and Abraham Lincoln.

"The Game's Up" (Universal).

Al Ray is cast as Ruth Clifford's male lead in Universal's "The Game's Up," produced by Elsie Jane Wilson. The story is based on the complications which arise when an ambitious young artist is forced to make good all of the falsehoods she has told her parents in order to make them believe she has been successful. In addition to Mr. Ray, Mildred Lee, Harry Holden and John Hay Cossar are in support of Miss Clifford in "The Game's Up."

"Salome" Makes Money for Exhibitors in Small Towns

IS the exhibitor of our towns and smaller cities making the most of his opportunity to show big features? Is he not laboring under a misapprehension in assuming that big productions are chiefly desirable for metropolitan theatres? Does he not do his bank account an injustice in arbitrarily classing his house as a one-day stand?

These are questions suggested by recent experiences of progressive exhibitors as reported to William Fox. By way of answer there are cited a number of instances of recent successful runs of "Salome" in comparatively small communities in New York State.

One of these illustrations is furnished by Port Richmond, on Staten Island. The Empire Theatre there was one of the first to book "Salome." It played the big Theda Bara production two days, following which Messrs. Allen Brothers and Peyser wrote to the Fox offices in New York:

"'Salome' was a clean-up from every angle; capacity houses both days—which is unusual here—and satisfied patrons, who came to us unsolicited and told how much they enjoyed this attraction. So many are clamoring for a repeat booking that we will have to give you a return. Two-day pictures in our town are usually losing propositions, but 'Salome' was different. Our brother exhibitors who do not book this beautiful feature for any particular reason are doing themselves and their patrons an injustice."

Among the bookings of "Salome" by large exhibitors is an eleven-day engagement at the American Theatre in San Francisco.

Adelphi Has a Vitagraph Week.

It was Vitagraph week at the Adelphi, December 23 to 29, inclusive. This theatre is situated on Broadway and Eighty-ninth street, New York, in the heart of a high-class residential section. It draws its patronage from scores of wealthy homes. The billing announced "The Beloved Impostor," in which Gladys Leslie is starred, for December 23, 24 and 25; "Hoarded Assets," with Harry T. Morey as star, for December 26 and 27, and "The Captain's Captain," Alice Joyce starring, for December 28 and 29.

"A Kaiser There Was" (Universal).

"A Kaiser There Was" is the title of a Universal comedy to be released January 8. The film, two reels in length, is said to be one of the funniest Universal has produced. It will be backed by several styles of attractive posters and other advertising and press matter.

Mary Thurman

Sennett Star Who Will Appear in "The Poor Boob" (Paramount).

Mary Thurman Enters Drama.

It has just been announced from the western studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that Mary Thurman, the famous Sennett beauty, has been secured to play the principal lead in the Paramount production of "Poor Boob" in support of Bryant Washburn.

This announcement came as a surprise, as it was not generally known that Miss Thurman had left the Sennett studios. It was learned that at Miss Thurman's request Mr. Sennett returned to her her two years' contract with that organization when the player explained to him that she had a desire to enter another line of endeavor. A great future is predicted for her in her new line of work.

Wanda Hawley again will take up her duties as leading woman for Bryant Washburn in this production.

Novel Features Promised for First Pathe Review

RAYMOND L. DITMARS, one of the curators of the New York Zoological Society, whose new studies of animal life are one of the big features of the Pathe Review, to be issued every two weeks beginning January 19, is deeply interested in the recently reported demonstration of Ed Corfee, a hunter employed by the National Fisher Games Commission. Corfee lured seals to death by the means of music, siren strains from a phonograph, and the reason that Mr. Ditmars is especially anxious to get all the details of the remarkable hunt is that in No. 1 of the Pathe Review he shows, in amusing and instructive detail, how curiously music effects some animals. Following the odd itelligence from Seattle he proposes to try a series of tonal experiments with domesticated seals.

Corfee spent several months last sumber on lower Puget Sound, operating at Useless, Mutiny and Cultus bays, shooting seals that prey upon salmon. It is estimated that each seal is capable of destroying $1,000 worth of fish a year. Corfee smilingly says he saved "a big pile of salmon dollars." His outfit was a phonograph, a rifle, a sure eye and a ready finger.

The Pathe Review, which shows Mr. Ditmars' zoological musical subjects, also includes the much-discussed "analysis of motion" baseball pictures and most exquisitely colored pictures. They mark the perfection of the Pathe color process. The work was done at the Pathe color studio at Vincennes, where there have been made and are in the process of preparation a series of chromatic studies which are really a demonstration of a new art.

Polo Serial Winds Up Fast.

Judging from previews of the fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth episodes of "The Lure of the Circus" the Universal serial picks up speed toward the finish.

The plot of the serial is well sustained in these episodes, and Mr. Polo adds some remarkable feats to his list of achievements. In these three episodes he does daring automobile driving, dives from a train into a river, fights several battles with five and six men at a time, rescues Eileen Sedgwick from a burning building, and, after many thrilling exploits, obtains the birth certificate of Helen Harden so that this young heiress might later strengthen her claim to a vast estate which two men are attempting to steal from her. Eileen Sedgwick, Mr. Polo's leading woman, also does some extraordinary work in the three episodes previously mentioned.

"Under Four Flags" Gets Bracketed in First Quartet

IT was reasonable to expect that "Under Four Flags," the great Government war picture, following its success in many of the principal picture houses of the country, would receive favorable treatment at the hands of the reviewers of the accomplishments of the screen for the year 1918. But the reviewers went further than that. Beginning with the statement that the photoplay has to its credit a record of accomplishments of which every one connected with the cinema art and industry may well be proud, the revlewers undertook the task of selecting the brilliant artistic achievements of the screen during the past twelve months, at the same time declaring that 1918 was far and away the screen's greatest year. "Under Four Flags" was one of four pictures mentioned as outstanding instances of what the screen can accomplish, because they represent what the screen has accomplished.

While admittlng that it is a difficult task to select the best offerings of the year, the reviewers declare that it is the high spots reached in any endeavor that speak the life and possibilities of the undertaking, hence the four great pictures are chosen as shining examples to the industry of just what can be accomplished. "America's Answer," the second Official United States War Picture, is given favorable mention, is declared thrilling from the first to the last inch of the celluloid and a notable achievement of the screen.

Farrar Playlng Role of Mother.

Geraldine Farrar's experience in Goldwyn Pictures is requiring with each succeeding production something new of her. And she invariably makes the discovery before anybody else that she is doing somethlng she has never done before. It may be only a little thing or it may be an entire role—like "The Hell Cat," for instance.

In "Shadows" she is a mother. This is not unusual for the stage star, and even in motion pictures some stars are wise enough to realize that the most powerful emotions of the human heart are usually centered in motherhood. But never before had Geraldine Farrar chosen such a role.

As the mother of a little boy described by the caption, "her treasure, loved and cherished with the tender Intensity of a mother's heart," Miss Farrar leaves nothing to be desired. She is wonderfully maternal in her scenes with the boy. It is not merely the devotion which shows itself in frequent embraces and lovlng demonstrations. There is somethlng deeper. A new light shines forth from Geraldine Farrar's eyes, a new tenderness is found in her scenes with little George Smlth, who plays the child. She is a finer artiste by reason of the new demand on her ability.

Stowell Playing a Heavy Role.

William Stowell drops a hero role to play "heavy" in "Destiny," a forthcoming Universal release, starring Dorothy Phillips. Mr. Stowell has become one of the cinema's most popular heroes, but in "Destiny" he surrendered the role of lover to Harry Hilliard and essayed the role of a man whose only god was power, and who in his selfish desire to rule the financlal world ruined many of his fellow men, who later pooled agalnst him and caused him to lose his all, though his downfall proved a wonderful moral lesson.

In addition to Mr. Stowell and Mr. Hilliard Miss Phillips has in her support Antrim Short, featured in "The Yellow Dog"; Walt Whitman, prominently cast in "The Heart of Humanity"; Gertrude Astor and Stanhope Wheatcroft.

"Destiny" was produced by Rolin Sturgeon, who will be remembered as the producer of "God's Country and the Woman." It is scheduled for release early in 1919.

Tom Miranda Tom Moore

Goldwyn Tom-Toms.

Tom Miranda, now film editor for the Goldwyn West Coast company, sent the photograph from which the above engraving was made. Tom Moore is the star male lead. The two Smiling Thomases look happy and contented in their new environment. They also sent best wishes to friends in the east for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Indianapolis Greets Eddie Polo.

Indianapolis received Eddie Polo, Universal's serial star, with open arms and much enthusiasm, according to reports from the Hoosier metropolis. Polo spent three days in Indianapolis, making personal appearances at eight theatres and was greeted at each house by overflow crowds of serial followers. Due to a necessitated change in his itinerary Mr. Polo arrived in Indianapolis a day later than originally scheduled, but neither this fact or two rainy days curbed the interest in his personal visit to the theatres. The Manhattan, Gem, Sanders, Idle Hour, Castle, Jewel, Two Johns and Senate theatres welcomed Mr. Polo, and at each house the star of "The Lure of the Circus" made a short talk and did a few stunts for the benefit of his many admirers.

Leaving Indianapolis, Mr. Polo proceeded to Kansas City.

Good Business Reported from St. Louis.

Being eternally on the job counts for something. The St. Louis Theatre Supply Company states that business is looking up and that it has just installed twelve Power's 6B Cameragraphs and two 6A Cameragraphs in the following houses: Erber's Theatre, East St. Louis, Ill.; Redman Majestic, East St. Louis; Miner's Institute, Collinsville, Ill.; New Grand Theatre, Flat River, Mo.; New Lyric Theatre, St. Charles, Mo.; Holy Family Church, St. Louis, Mo.; Brueckner Theatre, Mount Olive, Ill.; Hippodrome Theatre, Jerseyville, Ill.; Irma Theatre, St. Louis.

Start Work on New Bessie Love Feature.

Work has been started at Vitagraph's West Coast studio on a new Bessie Love feature adapted from the popular novel, "The Wishing Ring Man," by Margaret Widdemer. David Smith, Miss Love's director, declares that this story is so admirably suited to Miss Love that it might have been written especially for her. J. Frank Glendon will be seen in the leading role opposite Miss Love.

Famous Players Announce Four Big January Issues

IN announcing the January release schedule of Paramount and Artcraft features, Walter E. Greene, managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of distribution, calls attention to the fact that the release of two Paramount-Artcraft specials, a D. W. Griffith Artcraft production and a Cecil B. De Mille Artcraft production, make it one of the most notable single month's output in the history of the organization.

"If we were offering any one of these productions in a month's schedule," said Mr. Greene, "we would feel satisfied that we were maintaining our standard, but with the William A. Brady productions, 'Little Women,' William Faversham in 'The Silver King,' D. W. Griffith's 'A Romance of Happy Valley,' and Mr. De Mille's 'Don't Change Your Husband,' all scheduled within a span of four weeks, I feel justified in saying that we were giving our exhibitors and the public an array of big features such as any distributing organization might well be proud of."

"Little Women" Widely Exploited.

A most elaborate exploitation campaign has been conducted by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in connection with William A. Brady's "Little Women," the fourth Paramount-Artcraft Special of the year. A feature of this service campaigh has been a co-operative circularization program which has been conducted for the benefit of the large number of exhiblors who have booked the screen version of the famous story by Louisa M. Alcott. Advance reports received from all sections indicate that the campaign has been productive of greater results than any service campaign ever launched by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Chaudet Directed This "Billie Rhodes."

"The Girl of My Dreams," starring Billie Rhodes, which was made by the National Film Corporation of America for the Affiliated Distributing Corporation to be released through the Exhibitors' Mutual, was directed by Louis M. Chaudet.

Mr. Chaudet has long been associated with motion pictures and for the past few years has been devoting his entire time to directing. His early direction was confined to comedies. With the Nestor company he staged a great number of one and two-reel subjects. One of his late achievements is "The Finger of Justice."

Lewis in Yosemite Valley.

Advance reports from the wilds of the Yosemite Valley, where Mitchell Lewis is working on his Select production, "Children of Banishment, give promise that there will be plenty of action in this actor's second Select attraction. Lewis again will be seen in one of those intensely gripping man-to-man encounters. The kind of fights that "Hitch" Lewis stages are not fake fights. Mr. Lewis' adversary is Arthur Morrison, who played the "heavy" or "Faro Helford" role in "Code of the Yukon."

Goldwyn to Distribute "The Border Legion"

EXHIBITORS who have had success with special productions released through Goldwyn will learn with keen anticipation that Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has acquired rights to "The Border Legion," made by T. Hays Hunter from the story by Zane Grey. In it Blanche Bates, one of America's most famous and best beloved stars of the stage, makes her screen bow. The production stars her and Hobart Bosworth, long a distinguished figure on the screen.

"The Border Legion" is a photoplay masterpeice of action, brilliantly done by a cast of artists of the first water. New York praised it recently on its premiere presentation at the Strand Theatre, the press and public being a unit in proclaiming "The Border Legion" the most virile production of the year.

It is not a war picture, as Zane Grey's followers are aware, but a strong Western drama that must appeal to every class of picturegoer—a true-to-life reproduction of incidents in the Rocky Mountain region when bandits held full sway. Mining camps in full swing, lairs of the bandits and the homes and ranches they prey upon—all have a place in "The Border Legion."

Through the smoke of battle between the outlaws and law-abiding citizens there runs a tale of love and romance in which Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth show at their best, the brilliant performance of the famous stage star recalling her remarkable portayal in "The Girl of the Golden West," which first won her public approbation as a Belasco star.

But capital as her performance is, Miss Bates is forced to share honors with Bosworth, with Eugene Strong, Russell Simpson, Horace Morgan, all of whom show a profound knowledge of the rugged West as Zane Grey pictured it.

"Smiles" Shows Lees at Best.

"Smiles" is the alluring title of the current William Fox Excel Pictures release, disclosing the latest adventures of the popular screen children Jane and Katherine Lee. Needless to say, their dog shares honors in the comedy, which the Fox officials assert is bringing smiles of happiness to the exhibitor as he counts his box office receipts as well as to the great picturegoing following that these clever children have established.

The Lee children seem to have found the secret of perpetual motion. Swift adventure is their daily fare, and in "Smiles" they start with a transcontinental journey by parcel post. Their subsequent pranks include playing checkers on the lobby floor of a big resort hotel with the silk hats of the men guests. Their hairbreadth escapes include a flight alone in an airplane which they accidentally started.

The title, the Fox Film Corporation points out, offers great scope to the exhibitor for wideawake publicity. The picture is directed by Arvid E. Gillstrom, who staged the Lee children successes "Swat the Spy" and "Tell It to the Marines." "Smiles" is said to surpass these two former hits in laughs and thrills.

International Shows Big Pictures.

The week just past was a large one in the history of news reels, in that it witnessed the triumphant launching of the first tri-weekly news service. Under the individual titles of the Hearst News, Screen Telegram and Universal Current Events—the trio of news reels issued by the International Film Service Co., Inc., and released by Universal Film. Mfg. Co.—the first three big issues made their appearance and proved to be the last word in news reel production, from the standpoint of news, artistic handling and titling.

To inaugurate the new policy International started off with speed. First an extra was issued to the Hearst News, showing President Wilson's arrival in Brest, and then an extra was issued to the Screen Telegram, showing his arrival in Paris.

In the Brest pictures you see the George Washington arriving in the harbor of Brest with the historic old city in the distance. The boat docks, and President and Mrs. Wilson are met by General Pershing and conducted to their carriage, passing through the honor guard. In the Paris pictures he is seen in a carriage with President Poincare of France.

James J. Corbett to Start Work for Universal Jan. 6

James J. Corbett, Universal's new serial star, left New York for Universal City, December 29. He is due to arrive at the Pacific Coast studios January 6, where he will begin work immediately. The director for Mr. Corbett's first serial efforts and his leading woman have not yet been selected. Neither has the title of the serial definitely been decided upon, but Universal executives will have these details settled before the arrival of the new star at Universal City.

Speaking of Mr. Corbett's serial the Universal executives have stated it will be an innovation in the serial field, and that no effort or expense will be too great to give the star a vehicle in which he can display his extraordinary dramatic and athletic talents.

Grossmith Continues with Blackton.

Lieutenant Lawrence Grossmith, well known musical comedy star before he enlisted in the service of his country and was stationed here with the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission, to which he is still attached, bids fair to become one of the most popular stars in the film world as well.

His first important work on the silver sheet was in "The Common Cause," J. Stuart Blackton's Vitagraph special, for which he was detailed by the British Recruiting Mission. By his clever performance in that special he fully realized Commodore Blackton's prediction that he would "walk away with the comedy honors of the picture," and won such unanimous approval of exhibitors, spectators and critics that the producer opened negotiations with the British-Canadian Mission to obtain his services for a principal role in "A House Divided," the drama of love, divorce and marriage adapted by Anthony Paul Kelly from Ruth Holt Boucicault's novel, "The Substance of His House."

Select Acquires Anna Case Picture.

Select Pictures Corporation announces that it has acquired Anna Case's first picture, "The Hidden Truth," produced by the International Film Service Company, Inc. It will be distributed as a Select special. "The Hidden Truth" was directed by Julius Steger and marks the screen debut of the woman who has been known in metropolitan opera circles as the "American beauty of prima donnas." Anna Case in "The Hidden Truth" is the fifth big special to be announced by Select this season. "The Hidden Truth" furnishes Anna Case with a remarkable medium for becoming known personally to picturegoers. The cast includes, in addition to Miss Case and Mr. Richman, Forrest Robinson, Grace Reals, John Charles, Thomas McGrane, Fred G. Hearn, Frank Wonderly, Madelyn Clare, William Black and D. L. Don.

"Sahara" Nearing Completion.

"Sahara," the elaborate feature which brings Louise Glaum back to the screen, is rapidly nearing completion at the new Culver City studio of Thomas H. Ince. It is freely and confidently predicted that its initial showing will be a sensational event, and J. Parker Read, Jr., the producer, to whom Miss Glaum is under contract, is rapidly completing his plans for a New York premiere.

The scenes of "Sahara" were photographed by Charles Stumar, one of the best cameramen in the business.

First National to Issue "The Fighting Roosevelts"

ALMOST notable contract was completed last week between Harry Schwalbe, secretary and treasurer of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and Frederick L. Collins, publisher of McClure's Magazine and president of McClure Productions, Inc. The deal involves the Theodore Roosevelt production, whose title, "The Fighting Roosevelts," is here announced for the first time. This title discloses the element of "punch" that is in the picture, for there are big scenes that show the virile Americanism of the Roosevelt boys as well as of their fighting father. The picture, completed under the direction of William Nigh, was made under the personal management of Mr. Collins, who some time ago acquired the exclusive screen privileges to the ex-President's books and writings. As announced at the time of the agreement with Colonel Roosevelt, that outstanding figure of American public life consented to the filming of his life and work under the management of Mr. Collins, with the proviso that all royalties accruing to Roosevelt from the production and sale of all of the films shall go to the American Red Cross and other war charities to be designated by Roosevelt from time to time.

Following a private screening of the Roosevelt production for the benefit of the officials of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, the Circuit immediately closed a contract with Mr. Collins for the distribution of the film in the United States and Canada. It is said that the largest sum of money ever paid by a distributor to producer in advance of public release for the privilege of handling a screen production of this nature passed hands on this occasion, all known records for a transaction of this nature being broken.

May Allison Throws Gus Phillips.

May Allison has finished work in "Peggy Does Her Darndest," in which she was directed by George D. Baker. The story was adapted by Director Baker from the story by Royal Brown and was photographed by William E. Fildew.

The final scenes give Miss Allison plenty of excitement. Augustus Phillips, who has the role of "Laughing Larry" Doyle, a gentleman crook, wasn't sorry when the production was finished. Miss Allison had practiced boxing and jiu-jitsu—employed by Peggy to foil the thief trying to steal some gems from her father's safe—and she not only threw Phillips over her head, but crowned his punishment with a regular right cross to the jaw.

Miss Allison regards the role of Peggy as one of the best she has ever had. It is that of a lovable hoyden, who studies "detectivity" by correspondence and wins a sweetheart away from the wiles of her elder sister by wearing sister's vampire gown.

In the supporting cast are Robert Ellis, Frank Currier, Augustus Phillips, Wilton Taylor, Dick Rosson, Ernest Morrison, Rosemary Theby and Sylvia Ashton.

Big V Comedies to Star Aubrey.

James Aubrey will be starred in a series of two-reel Big V comedies. He will be under the direction of J. A. Howe. The comedies will be made at Vitagraph's Western studios.

Work has already been started on the first subject, "Soapsuds and Sapheads," that will mark the return of Aubrey to the Vitagraph fold. Madge Kirby and Carrie Stevens will be seen in support of the popular comedian.

J. A. Howe's work will be remembered as director of Montgomery and Rock and Larry Semon. He will write the Aubrey subjects, as well as direct them. Douglas Dawson has been engaged as assistant director, and R. D. Armstrong will have charge of the camera.

Among Independent Producers

Conducted by C. S. SEWELL

Leonce Perret to Screen "The Thirteenth Chair"

FOLLOWING the completion of the third Perret production which was made at the Metro studio in New York, Leonce Perret and his entire staff have moved to the Pathe studio, where they will begin work immediately on the fourth production, "The Thirteenth Chair," with Yvonne Delva as the star.

An interesting member of Mr. Perret's staff is his secretary, Miss Duchesne, who has come to be known in the studio as "Utility Georgette." Miss Duchesne is literally the director of "Lafayette, We Come" and "Stars of Glory," inasmuch as Mr. Perret has not quite mastered the English language and it is necessary for him to use her in translating instructions to the cast.

Among the other members of the staff who have gone with Leonce Perret to the new studio is Cameraman Alfred Ortlieb and Technical Director John Birkel, both of whom have been associated with him for several years.

A special company, the Acme Pictures Corporation, has been formed to present "The Thirteenth Chair." However, Adolphe Osso will represent the producers in negotiations and management, as he has done in the case of the other Perret pictures.

Week Runs for "Mickey" Break House Precedents

THE success of "Mickey" is probably best exemplified by the number of theatres that have in many cases broken precedents in booking it for one and two weeks' runs. It has played or been booked in many of the largest and most prominent theatres, including seventy days in the Loew houses in New York City, within two and a half weeks, together with a second run in the Proctor theatres, which is said to have broken records in both syndicates.

It has been booked for a one week's run in the following houses, in addition to those already announced in previous issues: Victoria, at Harrisburgh, Pa.; Majestic, at Erie; Rialto, at Washington; Merrill, in Milwaukee; Keith's Boston; Strand, at Hartford, Lynn and Worcester; Orpheum, at Malden, Mass., together with a two weeks' run at the Strand in Newark, N. J., breaking the house record.

According to advice from the W. H. Productions Company, who are distributing this feature, it is breaking box office records, and is proving one of the greatest successes. Letters are being received almost daily by the exchanges from exhibitors praising the results obtained, and requesting repeat dates. The Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, reports they did over $5,400 on a fifteen-cent admission price, while newspapers were carrying page ads warning the public away from the theatres on account of influenza. They further advise that in spite of this people were turned away every night, and the audience went wild about the picture.

The manager of the Eighty-First Street Theatre, New York, writes: "We played it four days and did a splendid business each day, and on Sunday broke records. One seldom gets a picture that is so universally liked by our patrons as this one. I think a great deal of the success of this picture was due to the fact that we followed the advertising campaign as outlined by you."

This advertising campaign, which was explained in detail in a previous article, is a co-operative one, with practically no cost to the exhibitor, and involves window displays in Five and Ten Cent Stores, Columbia, Aeolian, Vocalian and other music dealers, these stores being notified from their headquarters when "Mickey" is to be played in their locality.

Supplementing the other advertising matter, the W. H. Productions Company are furnishing salesmen and exhibitors a short sales talk outlining the big publicity campaign, and with the second-run houses the benefits to be reaped from the prior publicity are pointed out, and reference made to the fact that a great many patrons who missed the picture will want to see it.

Selig Made Tom Mix Films Distributed by Exclusive

EXCLUSIVE FEATURES, INC., announces practically all of the territory on the series of sixteen Tom Mix two-reel comedy dramas has been contracted for and exhibitors in all territories can make booking arrangements with exchanges located in their vicinity.

Attractive paper has been prepared for these films. The posters offer stirring scenes from the photoplays and were designed and manufactured by one of the best firms in the business. With this material theatre managers will be in a position to play up these "big little features" so as to attract extra business to the box office.

The Tom Mix two-reelers being placed on the market by Exclusive Features should not be confused with others. These were made by Colonel Selig, with Tom Mix as the star, at his Western studio and in various locations in the West. By arrangement with the producer, Exclusive Features has been able to make them available for exhibitors at this time when there is a need for short films of this kind.

A group of New York exhibitors saw three of these films run off, and are said to have asked for more, stating they were the best short reel Western stuff that they had ever seen.

State Rights Sales Reported This Week

K. S. W. DISTRIBUTING COMPANY, Inc., report the following sales of territory on "Healthograms," which they are distributing: To M. H. Hoffman, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, for New York City and Northern New Jersey; to Sol Lesser for California, and Electric Theatre Supply Company, Philadelphia, for Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey.

In another article in this department, Hiller & Wilk report the sale of considerable territory both in this country and abroad on the Maurice Tourneur production, "Woman."

* * *

Arrow Film Corporation reports that notice carried in one of our previous issues to the effect that rights to "The Demon Shadow" had been sold to the Specialty Film Company, Dallas, for the Southeastern states is in error, and that this serial was sold to Sipe Film Company, Atlanta, for Southeastern territory.

* * *

Classical Motion Picture Company reports the sale of "Five Nights" to the Doll-Van Film Corporation for Southern Indiana, Southern Illinois and Kentucky, and to Silee Film Corporation, Chicago, for Northern Illinois.

Doctor Shallenberger Decries "Knocking"

DR. W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, discussing conditions, stated:

"It has occurred often that prospective buyers would bemoan the fact that 'business was rotten,' their territory all shot to pieces,' they didn't know whether they could possibly make a dollar out of any production, and a lot of other 'stuff' that would lead one to believe that the motion picture in general, and the state right exchange in particular were doomed to perdition, and, in the same breath they make an offer that calls for substantial cash.

"If things were as bad off as some of our erstwhile friends would lead us to believe, why would they seek to put more money into the bottom of this pit? It is our business to secure what our clients desire at the lowest possible figure, because we reckon that if they make a profit they will come back to buy more pictures, using their original investment over again four and five times a year.

"Besides, if you tell a man 'your picture is good enough for me and I'm making money, only because I buy at the right prices,' he is going to strain every endeavor to accommodate you, but if you carry a sour face and talk only of losses, he will lose the spirit of friendly helpfulness. Let us inject the spirit of optimism in our business transactions, never losing sight, of course, of the spirit of conservation."

Ritz-Carlton Ball Forms Background for S-L Film

THROUGH arrangements with sponsors of the event, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin were able to film the ball given on December 28 at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York, under the name of the Carnaval de Victoire and Masque de Triomphe, for the Free Milk for France Fund. A battery of six Sun-Light Arc lamps and numerous cameras installed at points of vantage were used and a complete film record of the event made, which when cut and titled will be sent to France to Marshal Foch and his wife, Madame Foch being the patron of the fund.

This event is said to have marked the return of society to pre-war festivities, and was well attended by prominent society people as well as military and diplomatic representatives of the Allies. E. K. Lincoln, Grace Darling and Clara Joel were also present, the two latter wearing magnificent gowns designed by Lucille, and several of the scenes in which they appear will be interpolated in the forthcoming S-L picture, which is made under the direction of Ralph Ince, being used instead of scenes which would ordinarily be made in a studio. The decorations for this event, which were under the direction of Louis Physioc, were magnificent and are said to have cost an enormous sum. The views obtained are said to be unusually massive and gorgeous.

In addition to a number of prominent people who will appear in the scenes used as a background for the production starring E. K. Lincoln, the scenes also include a number of well known stage celebrities who took part in the entertainment.

Emmett Dalton to Film Other Western Stories

THAT Emmet Dalton, general manager of the Southern Feature Film Corporation, has produced a money-maker in his initial production, "Beyond the Law," is indicated by the reception it was accorded by the trade and press. Reviewers proclaimed it one of the finest Western productions seen upon the screen in a long while, and Mr. Dalton is the recipient of a large number of inquiries regarding the disposition of territory for state rights and foreign distribution.

Though he has not yet made known his releasing plans, it is understood that he held up "Beyond the Law" because of the influenza situation. However, an announcement will probably be issued soon containing a statement as to those who will distribute the picture in this country and abroad.

Mr. Dalton will produce a number of Western productions during the coming year for release through the independent market, and will personally appear in the stellar role of each story. He will only produce stories which will have that very important element of successful pictures—a virile plot. He will personally supervise all productions made by the Southern Feature Film Corporation with the same care and excellent direction shown in "Beyond the Law."

Extensive Exploitation for "The Silent Mystery"

ONE of the most extensive advertising campaigns devised in connection with a serial, is being carried out by Louis Burston, the producer, and Hiller & Wilk, Inc., the selling agent, for the fifteen-episode Francis Ford serial, "The Silent Mystery." All of the posters are replete with punch, and the twenty-four sheet, by means of unmistakable symbols which are said to have strong box office value, transmits the sense of mystery and awe characteristic of the picture. The Horrible Hand, the Alluring Priestess Kah, the unscrupulous Von Berg, and the resourceful Phil Kelly, are suggested in a gripping manner on this big poster.

This twenty-four sheet is being posted in most of the principal cities of the country and extensive advertising is being carried in newspapers and trade journals, which give it an effective heralding to the public as well as to the exhibitors. In addition, the favorable reviews accorded to the episodes already shown constitute a strong box office asset.

In "The Silent Mystery" Francis Ford is again seen as the American detective Phil Kelly, a character in which he is already well known to theatre patrons through his work in previous serials, and swift action is said in this serial to again mark his activities, while the story furnishes new opportunities for the display of his talents as a director and actor. He is supported by Mae Gaston as Betty Graham and Rosemary Theby as the Priestess Kah.

Elaborate and Massive Sets Characterize "S-L" Feature

One of the outstanding features of the first S-L picture, starring E. K. Lincoln and directed by Ralph Ince, is the magnificence and massiveness of the properties and sets used. Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin have devoted many weeks to this particular angle of the production, in the belief that beauty in the matter of scenic dressing and bigness of settings greatly enhance the value.

The scenario was gone over carefully for the purpose of outlining the elaborate scenic investiture, together with the special construction of many sets out of the ordinary in point of size and impressiveness. Charles Chapman, an expert of many years' experience, was specially engaged to supervise the technical direction.

The preparation and study devoted to this end of the production by Ralph Ince and his associates is said to have more than gratified the expectations of all concerned, and as E. K. Lincoln remarked after viewing a portion of the film showing the interior of a wealthy man's residence, "It looks as though you could really live in such a place."

Mr. Chapman, with a special crew of experts, carpenters, electricians and mechanics, has erected library, drawing room, office and ball room which for magnitude are said to have rarely been excelled. In order to carry out his ideas to the fullest possible extent, the technical director worked from faithful reproductions gathered from some of the finest residences in New York City and its environments.

Arrival of Battle Fleet Shown in Gaumont Graphic

GAUMONT NEWS NO. 40, released December 24, pictures many of our soldiers returning home, and also shows another installment of "Flying for Uncle Sam," illustrating how an aviator is trained to shoot from the air. Other subjects include Secretary of War Baker decorating General March with the Distinguished Service Cross, pretty women posing in Washington to aid the Red Cross campaign, launching of a four-masted vessel, a new type of seaplane built to cross the Atlantic, which carried fifty people when tested. A twenty-four-pound codfish, the season's record, which was shipped to President Wilson for his New Year's dinner; also a large number of insects which are being shipped to France to fight the bugs destroying the orange and lemon groves are shown.

Gaumont Graphic No. 40, released December 27, illustrates the return of a number of our victorious battleships and the welcome accorded them in New York, where they were reviewed from the "Mayflower" by Secretary Daniels of the Navy as they passed the Statue of Liberty. There are also scenes of the parade of the personnel of the fleet down Fifth avenue led by Admiral Mayo. Pictures from Europe show King Victor Emanuel of Italy reviewing American and Italian troops and a company of American engineers marching through an undamaged French village on their way to the Rhine. The birthplace of Marquis de Lafayette, the Chateau de Shavaniac, now a war orphanage, is also shown.

New State Rights Company.

During the past week a new state rights distributing company announced its advent into the motion picture field; the Alpha Pictures, Inc., which has established headquarters at 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York. This company is now negotiating for its initial offering which will be announced within the next few days.

Third Perret Production "A Soul Adrift" Finished

THE third Perret production, starring Dolores Cassinelli, has just been completed and has been named "A Soul Adrift." It was produced under the supervision of Leonce Perret and directed by Mme. Alice Blache, who will at once commence the cutting and titling of the production.

Mme. Blache, whose works include many successful screen plays, is said to have given to the screen in "A Soul Adrift" a motion picture that marks a distinct step of progress in photoplay production; she introduces a clever bit of screencraft which makes every person who witnesses the screening of the film one of the characters of the play. This is claimed to be the first time this has ever been attempted with success.

The story, which was written by Leonce Perret, has for its principal theme throughout constancy and devotion, and affords Miss Cassinelli wonderful opportunity to demonstrate her dramatic capability. Those who witnessed the first screening assert that the excellency of her portrayals will come as a delightful surprise to photoplay devotees.

As soon as Mme. Blache has completed the cutting and titling, "A Soul Adrift" will be given a special showing, following which the announcement concerning the manner in which it will be released will be made.

Domestic and Foreign Sales Announced on "Woman"

MAURICE TOURNEUR'S production, "Woman," is said to be smashing records in the way the various territories are selling not only in this country, but throughout the world. S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the New York Rivoli and Rialto theatres, while en route to the coast, went before a convention of exhibitors in Cleveland and asked them to aid the advancement of the photoplay by playing "Woman."

So impressed were Morrison, Beverstock & Co., of Cleveland, that they purchased the Ohio territory. Paragon Pictures, of Boston, has the New England territory; the Independent Sales Corporation has the New York State territory. Frank Gersten, Inc., has taken Northern New Jersey. The First National Exhibitors' Exchange, of Pittsburgh, has Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Tom Moore, of Washington, the District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware and Virginia; R. M. Savini, of Atlanta, has North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee, and the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, of Detroit, have Michigan.

This excellent sales record has been made in the face of unsettled conditions due to the epidemic of influenza, which is still helping to hold up sales in the West, but bookings will be in full swing in that part of the country within the next thirty days.

Hiller & Wilk also report that "Woman" has been purchased for Australia, the entire Far East, the Scandinavian countries, France, Switzerland, Argentina, Paraguay, Uraguay and Mexico.

Arrow Issues Bulletin for January.

A new number of the Arrow Bulletin published in the interest of state rights buyers, has just been issued by the Arrow Film Corporation, the publication being temporarily held up on account of the unsettled condition due to the influenza epidemic.

The current issue is an interesting number, containing a program of all the Arrow attractions, editorials by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the organization, and many other subjects of interest to independent exchanges, together with a number of personality stories of men prominent in the state rights field.

Three Decorations Awarded to Star of Crest Picture

LIEUTENANT BERT HALL, the American Ace featured in "A Romance of the Air," the Crest production marketed by Independent Sales Corporation, is one of the two survivors of the Lafayette Escadrille, and has fought over a hundred battles in the air. He has been awarded the following honors for exceptional bravery and services: The Medaille Militaire, said to be the highest French honor; the Croix de Guerre with three palms, and the Cross of St. Vladimir and Cross of St. George, received from the former Czar of Russia four days before his abdication. In addition, he was cited by Field Marshall Joffre.

The announcement that Lieutenant Hall would personally appear at many of the leading theatres prior to the release of "A Romance of the Air" has caused a large number of inquiries to be made as to when bookings may be made. His first engagement will be for four weeks at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, beginning December 30, and during this period the Independent Sales Corporation will take bookings for New England territory, which will give exhibitors in this section priority on this unique publicity.

Critical Reviews and Comments

Concerning Current Productions

"VIRTUOUS WIVES."

Anita Stewart's Initial First National Release is Elaborately Produced and Extremely Well Acted.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IT was Jerome K. Jerome who first drew attention in print to that champion boob of the western world—the American husband who toils and schemes to pile up a great stack of money which his wife spends in another part of the universe maintaining a social position either here or abroad. "Virtuous Wives," the initial Anita Stewart release for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, treats of this subject.

Written by Owen Johnson and directed by George Loane Tucker, the picture is elaborately produced and extremely well acted. The story is a pungent satire on society, and it is only at the end that any real effort is made to win sympathy for the foolish little wife whose well-intentioned but morally culpable husband leaves her in a perfect hot-bed of temptation while he betakes himself to a smoky steel mill in Colorado and slaves and sweats and bemoans the fate that keeps him and his wife apart. When he learns that the lady who bears his name is being talked about for the way she is conducting herself with a certain Monte Bracken, he hurries to New York and demands an explanation. Matters are so badly tangled that Andrew Forrester concludes the only decent thing for him to do is to withdraw in favor of the other man. He goes back West alone, but his wife follows him and makes him understand that she has always loved him.

"Virtuous Wives" owes its entertaining qualities to the shafts of ridicule it shoots into a class of social idlers that, fortunately for the good of humanity, are not so plentiful as the Owen Johnson work might indicate. The better emotions of the spectator are seldom stirred, but he is often amused and always interested in the doings of the characters in the story. Its satire is not at all subtle but it hits the mark.

Most of the scenes have been taken on a magnificent estate on the Hudson. These are very beautiful. There are too many of them, however; also, too many long shots of the interiors. The human interest is not brought near enough to give it the best effect. The moonlight bathing scenes and the prehistoric party are handled skillfully and in good taste.

Anita Stewart is so attractive as Amy Forrester it is quite beyond belief that her husband would have arranged a separation for one week, let alone a whole year. She plays the part charmingly and makes the character one of the best drawn in her gallery of fair women. The supporting company is a distinguished one. Conway Tearle as Andrew Forrester, Mrs. De Wolf Hopper as Irma Delabarre, Edwin Arden as Maurice Delabarre and William Boyd as Monte Bracken are its leading members. The remaining roles are acted by Virginia Nordon, Katharine Lewis, Captain Mortimer, Harold Gwynn, Gwen Williams, and Lucille Clayton.

Publicity Points.

An important advertising angle connected with "Virtuous Wives" is the high grade of the production throughout and the fact that two of the best known leading men on the stage or screen, Edwin Arden and Conway Tearle, are members of the cast.

The satire on society that runs through the story deals with an up-to-date subject and it is biting enough to cause many hearty laughs. The midnight beach party and the prehistoric gamble show members of the smart set when they have laid aside their good manners and are having a high old time.

Anita Stewart's part differs from her usual roles, but it gives her an opportunity to do excellent work and she performs a sensational rescue from a motor boat that is bound to thrill.

"HER INSPIRATION."

May Allison Star of Engaging Metro Carrying a Clever "Kick" at the Finish.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

HERE is a tale of "revenooers," moonshiners, and love in the Kentucky mountains, that rings true and gets the best of entertainment value out of a subject that is new only in a decidedly clever "kick" at the finish. The early reels disclose nothing out of the usual in such rugged stories. There is an abundance of pretty scenery, lively action and a couple of mildly sensational episodes that amount to a near-hanging and a coat of tar with feather fixings.

The mountaineers resent the intrusion of a playwright who has come into the moonshiners' preserves for "local color." When he makes a hit with the little mountain girl there is mild resentment and when a band of real revenue officers show up the mountaineers believe they have been betrayed. The hanging nearly takes place and from the kettle of tar the playwright flees to a train which he catches just in the nick of time.

When the playwright gets to New York and a rehearsal is called for his new play he finds the leading lady is none other than the "mountain girl" who had led him a speedy chase for "local color." The theatrical manager who was to produce the play had sent both the author and the leading lady into the Kentucky mountains that realism might be instilled into both the play and its presentation.

The "surprise finish" is well devised and lends an interesting angle to an altogether satisfactory entertainment. May Allison fully realizes the hoydenish Kentucky girl and has occasion in the rehearsal scene to "look her prettiest" as a contrasting vision. Herbert Heyes, Charles Elder, Jack Brammall and Allen D. Sears equip the principal roles with capable presentation.

Publicity Points.

The public in general will be interested in the rehearsal scene. There is always a combination of interest and curiosity in the lay mind centering in the workings of the stage and things theatrical.

The mountain scenery is rugged and effective in its natural charm and beauty. Several effective scenes are delightfully framed by rocks and trees.

When the barrels of illicit whiskey are dumped into a nearby creek and the revenue officers taste the stuff in the water they drink there follows an amusing bathing scene—the officers taking a "whiskey bath" with comedy results.

The lynching and tar-and-feathers scene are the nearest things to "sensations" the feature affords. They belong with a "moonshine" picture and live up to the "moonshine" effect.

May Allison dons boys' clothes for a series of scenes and makes a natty kid. She gets very little chance to "doll up," but makes good when the time for contrast arrives in the rehearsal scene.

"THE MIDNIGHT STAGE."

Five-Reel Pathe Subject Features Frank Keenan in Dramatic Dual Role.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THAT the old West of fiction was a bad man's paradise has long been conceded, but we have seen nothing in moving pictures that brings out its raw brutality with greater force than this five-reel subject, "The Midnight Stage." The plot material here employed would be rankly melodramatic in unskilled hands, but it has been assembled in this number with tremendous dramatic effect; it conveys shocks without limit, but they may be accepted as accurately descriptive of the times depicted.

Frank Keenan plays two roles, one of them John Lynch, a gentleman gambler, and the other 'Bige Rivers, who truly sets a new pace for the bad men of the screen. These characters have been skillfully differentiated in a manner that leaves no room for confusion in the minds of the observer. Each is played with unusual force and the whole story rises to an unforgettable climax. The production as a whole offers a wonderful picture of the old West in the matter of atmosphere and characterization, all knit together in a tense story of the times.

John Lynch, who has been estranged from his father, a rare old southern gentleman, has a double in the person of 'Bige Rivers. The latter is a bandit and murderer and in the course of the story shoots Lynch's father. The latter believes his own son did the shooting and so accuses him. The truth is brought out through the agency of Nita, a cast-off woman whose love for Rivers has turned to hate. She saves Lynch just as he is about to be made the victim of summary Western justice.

The cast does noteworthy work almost without exception. It includes Mignon Anderson, Charles Gunn, Maude George, Ernest C. Warde, Richard La Reno, Arthur Allardt, Thomas Guise, Jos. K. Dowling and Wadsworth Harris. The scenario was written by Jack Cunningham and Ernest C. Varde directed. This is a screen version of a famous French melodrama, "The Lyons Mail," originally enacted by Henry Irving.

Publicity Points.

Western atmosphere and characterization done in a most skillful and compelling manner.

A plot of dramatic intensity from start to finish, which carefully eliminates old, conventional situations.

Frank Keenan appears in a dual role calling for the highest type of acting ability, which he supplies in abundant measure.

The production as a whole shows intelligence and unusual feeling for dramatic effect on the part of the adapter and director.

"THE WAYS OF A MAN WITH A MAID."

Paramount Presents Bryant Washburn in An Entertaining Comedy by Edith Kennedy, Directed by Donald Crisp.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AN unusual story, plausible and humanizing, with delightful glimpses of character in the making. Simple, direct and on one line of action, it might not be called dramatic, but the elements of struggle are there, the struggle we all know about, that against environment. Washburn represents the everyday young clerk up against hard work for small pay, and mere accident does not relieve him of embarrassment when he falls in love with a rather gay stenographer impersonated by Wanda Hawley, who is chiefly occupied in "having a good time" regardless of the cost to those who are fond of her society. Washburn's first plunge into the cabaret merriment costs him a week's salary, and he is driven to extreme measures to hold his position and at the same time keep in touch with a girl who is constantly out with a high-speed crowd. This situation drives home from its actuality. It is that of many a young man today and heartbreaking to most of them.

This particular young man recognizes that he has found the one woman for him and dares everything rather than lose touch with her. His troubles and debts accumulate fast, but nothing daunts him. In order to forestall a wealthy rival he invites her to join a Hallowe'en party which he knows in advance will cost him a week's salary, and he plunges on some decent clothes to wear for the occasion, pledging all he expects to get for weeks to come. At the last moment, when all is ready, he is called to the office for some important night work and enlists the services of a friend to take his girl until he can get through work. This is the crisis, and his manliness under the trying circumstances wins the confidence of his employer. He is assured of a finer position and wins out with the girl by combined industry, tenacity of purpose and pluck, a typical American boy. It is refreshing to see such relief from artificial and theatrical bunk, a true motion-picture story of pure American characterization, definite purpose and artistry in all departments, a charming little comedy.

"LOVE IN A HURRY."

Five-Reel World-Picture Presents Pleasant Story of War-Time England.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS enjoyable subject was adapted by Wallace C. Clifton from a story by Kenyon Gambier in the Saturday Evening Post and directed by Dell Henderson. It presents Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in a war-time romance, the chief scenes of which are laid in England. The production abounds in pleasing rural views and contains many good romantic touches.

The hero, an American college youth traveling under the name of Charles Conant, is first discovered on board a vessel carrying a cargo of horses and mules to England. He is apparently in quest of adventure and he scans the shores of England so eagerly with a glass that he is mistaken for a spy and the captain refuses to let him land. He nevertheless manages to leave the ship and flees to the Dartridge estate, where the pretty Lady Joan assists him in eluding the police. They fall in love and read together the story of the Knight Peredur, some charming scenes from which are enacted with themselves as principals.

The interest in the story is maintained from the fact that the hero, while presumably himself a spy, is in reality on a secret mission to help both the American and English governments. He succeeds in the course of the tale in rounding up several real German agents on the Dartridge estate, and wins the girl from her watchful and jealous cousin.

Others in the cast are George MacQuarrie, Isabel O'Madigan, William Bechtel, Kid Broad, Dick Collies and Louis Grizel. The photography is by Lucien Tanguay.

Publicity Points.

The story interest has a pleasant, romantic flavor and the plot is not so obvious as many.

It is a story of war with the horrors of war left out.

Some splendid atmospheric effects of rural England have been achieved.

There is a good romantic insert picturing a few scenes from the days of King Arthur.

The spy features of the plot have been handled in a natural and effective way, without descending to the usual melodramatic methods.

"ROPED."

Six-Reel Universal Special Attraction Features Harry Carey in Virile Heart Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS six-reel comedy drama, entitled "Roped," provides Harry Carey with perhaps the most sizable story with which he has been provided in the Universal Special Attractions featuring him in the role of Cheyenne Harry. It is one of those stories that are big in their very simplicity, and carry an irresistible heart appeal. The number in this instance was written by Eugene B. Lewis, who by the way adapted it himself, and has been admirably directed by Jack Ford. The subject is one that has an all-around interest and will make friends wherever shown.

The tale opens with Cheyenne Harry, known as the millionaire cattle raiser, on his ranch in Arizona. He expresses a need for a housekeeper and his cowboy pals decide that what he really needs is a wife. They insert a matrimonial ad bearing his name in a newspaper, and in due time Harry gets a communication written from a "poor but beautiful girl living at the Ritz in New York City."

Not appreciating the humor of the situation, as the girl had intended, Harry takes the first train to New York and leases a suite at the Ritz. The manner in which he finally manages to meet the girl and the way in which her ambitious mother ensnares him, makes a rattling good story. But it is when the baby comes, which Harry is not allowed to see though he idolizes it dearly, and the mother pretends it has died, that the deep undercurrents of the tale are reached. These situations have been presented with strength and conviction.

Neva Gerber is cast in role of the wife and Molly McConnell as the mother, both parts being well played. J. Farrell McDonald as the butler accomplishes some excellent comedy effects.

Publicity Points.

This is a new and excellent variation of the contrasting conditions of our East and West, in which love once more succeeds in bridging the gap.

There is a strong "baby" interest in this subject, which adds greatly to its heart appeal.

Two minor characters stand out with pleasing distinctness — the designing mother and the humorous butler, both excelently presented.

The visit of the hero's cowboy friends to New York City is staged with humor and dramatic effect, and they make the most of their opportunities in the restaurant fight at the close.

"IN THE HOLLOW OF HER HAND"

Alice Brady Does Excellent Emotional Work in Select Production of McCutcheon Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is no doubt concerning the dramatic strength of the Select picture made from George Barr McCutcheon's novel, "In the Hollow of Her Hand." The leading character, Hetty Castleton, which falls to Alice Brady, demands emotional acting of the most exacting kind, and the interest of the story does not slacken until the final scene. The scenario was fashioned by Charles Maigne, who also directed it.

The story is not a pleasant one, and opens with a tragedy. The wife of Challis Wrandall arrives at a roadhouse to identify the body of her husband, who has been murdered. Hetty Castleton, a young English girl, killed Wrandall to save her honor. The wife knows her husband's reputation as a libertine. On her way home in an auto she overtakes Hetty, hurrying along the road. Mrs. Crandall suspects the girl's identity and befriends her. She takes Hetty to her own home, and, to repay the slights of her husband's family, tries to marry the girl to Challis Wrandall's brother.

In the meantime, Hetty has fallen in love with an artist. When a detective accuses Mrs. Wrandall of killing her husband, Hetty confesses, but the artist still insists on making her his wife. There is a slight reference to a picture in the almost altogether, for which Hetty posed in England when driven to it by necessity.

Director Maigne has handled his forces with good judgment for the most part, but strikes a false note after Hetty's confession by having the murdered man's mother kiss the woman who took her son's life. The knowledge that the killing was justified and that Wrandall was a rake does not excuse the bad taste of the incident.

Alice Brady brings out all the high lights of Hetty's character, and wins sympathy for her throughout the story. Myrtle Stedman as Mrs. Wrandall is an excellent foil to the star, and acts with her customary fine effect. Mrs. Louise Clark, A. J. Herbert, Harold Entwistle, Percy Marmont and Henry Miller, Jr., are the other members of the well-balanced support. Photography by Leo Rossi.

Publicity Points.

This is an unusual story. Written by one of the best known of American novelists, it brings two women into friendly relations after one of the women has killed the other woman's husband, and contrives to make the situation believable.

The plot of "In the Hollow of Her Hand" has the very great merit of always keeping up the suspense, and the young girl played by Alice Brady is given an opportunity to shield herself by marrying the brother of the man she killed. She is in love with another man, however, and remains true to him.

A young girl trusts a man who professes to love her and promises to make her his wife. She is asked to accompany him to a hotel in the country. Once there, she finds she must choose between dishonor or self-defense at any price. She kills her companion. This highly dramatic situation is contained in the opening reel of "In the Hollow of Her Hand." The interest is sustained until the final scene.

The title of Alice Brady's latest Select picture refers to the hold that Sara Wrandall has over the woman who killed her husband.

"THE ADVENTURE SHOP."

Corinne Griffith the Heroine of a Vitagraph Production Written by Bud Fisher.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

KIDNAPPING, blackmail and murder are among the different crimes that are introduced in "The Adventure Shop," a five-part Vitagraph production on the Star Series, written by Bud Fisher and directed by Kenneth Webb. Corinne Griffith heads the cast. Notwithstanding the imposing array of crime in the story the law is never broken, and there is not a villain anywhere in the plot. For a time the spectator may be in doubt as to the character of several of the tough looking individuals who seem ready for dark deeds of any sort, but when everything has been told and the heroine and hero have come to the right understanding it is found that only innocent fun has been shown.

The trouble starts when Phyllis Blake, a society girl with enough "pep" for a regiment of girls, makes up her mind to open an adventure shop and sell harmless thrills to customers that are suffering from ordinary everyday existence. Josephus Potts, the son of a millionaire pickle maker, is sent by his father to get an overdose of adventure, but he turns the tables on the company by falling in love with its manager and arranging to kidnap her. The picture will prove amusing to any one who is willing to accept its story without question.

Corinne Griffith plays Phyllis Blake with unflagging spirit and is a great help to the entire performance. Walter McGrail as young Potts, Priestly Morrison as John Montgomery, Robert Gaillard as Franklin Herbert and Warren Chandler as J. Potts, Sr., do good work.

"FOR FREEDOM"

William Farnum Star of Fox Picture with World War Backing.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THIS picture in its progress down the line should be watched with interest by producers of moving pictures who contemplate giving a "war angle" to their offerings. There will be a question how returned soldiers will take "war pictures," and there will be a question how relatives of men who have given their lives for real "freedom" will accept some of the scenes in this William Farnum offering for pictured "freedom."

In the six reels devoted to the story there has not been enough footage completely to register all of the details of plot; incidents are reached suddenly, and as abruptly disposed of. The outcome is a story not so smoothly blended as "fans" may like most to vision, and the result is proportionately unsatisfactory.

The whole story is based upon what most of us will believe is a false premise. Not one woman in a thousand would even think of taking the abhorrent step the wife did—let alone actually running off with a chance acquaintance to spend the night with him in a notorious roadhouse. We have said "one in a thousand"—you can lift the ratio as high as you like and not be wrong. The shortcomings of direction may be blamed for this conclusion, but it is certain that we witness no signs of inordinate love or uncommon neglect on the part of the "lover" and husband, respectively.

However, the "neglected" wife runs off, and the "lover" telephones her brother (Farnum) that she is registered at the notorious inn with a man who is not her husband. Farnum goes to the rescue, and brings his sister home in time to be on hand when her husband returns from a business trip. Later Farnum goes to the "lover's" aparements to redeem some compromising letters the sister has foolishly written, and as an outcome of the call fatally shoots the "lover." In the midst of a prison-term, Farnum inspires the pardon board to parole himself and a company of fellow-convicts that they may go to war.

On the battlefield, in the trenches and during many incidents of war, Farnum does heroic deeds, and comes home to recuperate, where the girl he has met before he sailed away to war may come to visit him. The returned hero proposes marriage, and is accepted; but it is only after his sister has confessed her past indiscretion that the way is cleared to happiness.

Thus is the story briefly outlined. The leading role does not give Farnum very many opportunities to extend his abilities as an actor, and it is fair to say that he jumps at his chances with fire and vigor. Anna Lehr is the leading woman in a role that never for an instant collects an iota of sympathy. Ruby DeRemer also is prominent in the cast.

Publicity Points.

The prison scenes are particularly well done. When Farnum pleads before the pardon board for parole he does his best acting.

"Big business" gets a knock in the method employed by a trust to secure the cotton mill it is after. The trust, as usual, gains its purpose.

Battle scenes are enacted in trenches and in "No Man's Land." Some realistic scenes result with Farnum showing up strong in the encounters.

"THE SCARLET TRAIL."

Five-Part Production by G. & L. Features Deals Frankly With Sexual Disease.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE propriety of showing a picture that deals frankly with sexual immorality and the terrible consequences of tainted blood is one that every exhibitor must settle for himself. "The Scarlet Trail" is such a picture. Produced by the G. & L. Features, story and direction by John S. Lawrence, it is said to have been suggested by the booklet, "Don't Take a Chance," which has been widely distributed by the Y. M. C. A. The picture has also been indorsed by the American Defense Society, Social Hygiene Division.

Acted by a cast in which Beth Ivins and Vincent Coleman have the leading parts, "The Scarlet Trail" is not remarkable for the manner of its production or the skill of its story. It traces the love affair of a young girl who is engaged to a young man whose father has led an unclean life and transmitted the seeds of disease to his son. A social worker tells the young girl the consequences of marriage with a man thus afflicted, but the girl refuses to give him up. The unfortunate young man learns of his condition and ends his life with a bullet just before the day set for the wedding.

One point in the picture's favor is the absence of any suggestive scenes. The facts about the pathologic portions of the story are told by the subtitles and the wording is free from offense. There is nothing in the picture that illustrates an objectionable action or serves to take the mind from the consequences of vicious living. "The Scarlet Trail" is as cleanly in treatment as the book which inspired it, and fulfills its purpose without pandering to salaciousness. If the exhibitor believes it is his duty to warn the rising generation against the dangers of venereal disease here is a medium admirably adapted to the task. "The Scarlet Trail" is released on the state rights basis.

COMMENTS

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE CABARET GIRL (Bluebird).—A five-reel social satire of a conventional sort which, in spite of its familiarity, proves quite entertaining. Ruth Clifford plays the role of the heroine, a country girl who burlesques some society queens who have snubbed her. The story was written by Hope Loring and directed by Douglas Gerard. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

Exhibitors' Mutual.

TEETOTALERS AND TOTEM POLES (Rothacker).—The scenes in this picture have been photographed in one of the national parks. St. Mary's Lake, Iceberg Lake, the interior of a chalet in the mountains and other scenes including totem poles and various interesting features of this park. The subtitling of this picture is not in accordance with the quality of its scenes.

HIGH AND HUNGRY (Rothacker).—A beautifully photographed series of views in Glacier National Park. Grinell mountain, Lake Dry Fork, trails winding in and out and rising higher toward the clouds are among the interestnig sights that the picture presents. Deadwood Falls, Lake McDonald, and the Lewis Hotel are also shown as well as other interesting points. This is decidedly one of the best of the Outdoor series.

A MAORI ROMANCE (Rothacker).—A posed picture in which apparently some native New Zealanders have taken part. It presents a love story of the Maoris which is not particularly interesting.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

THE GREATEST THING IN LIFE (Artcraft).—A Griffith production of grandeur, beauty and charm presenting some grand scenes on the field, all action woven around tender human sentiments, most of all pure love. Lillian Gish in a fine characterization. A story to leave a profound impress wherever shown; tremendously popular at the Strand when there shown.

THE HOPE CHEST.—A rather thinchested story which Dorothy Gish manages by sheer force of charming personality to make acceptable.

THE WAY OF A MAN WITH A MAID (Paramount).—A charming comedy of American character and motive, pleasing to any audience, with Bryant Washburn and Wanda Hawley in the leads, supported by a fine company. The story of a young American clerk up against discouraging circumstances, who wins fortune and love by pluck, perseverance and patience.

THE VIRGINIAN (Paramount Success Series).—A reissue of the western dramatization of a novel by the same name, with Dustin Farnum in the lead.

Fox Film Corporation.

EVERY MOTHER'S SON (Fox).—A well made five-reel story of the war written and produced by Raoul A. Walsh, with Charlotte Walker in the leading role. The story pictures the reactions of an American mother who watches her three sons go to war. At first she rebels, but later learns to glory in their going. There are a few realistic war scenes in France. Reviewed in last week's issue.

I WANT TO FORGET (Fox).—A five-reel war story featuring Evelyn Nesbit. She plays the role of a reformed dancing girl who serves the Allied cause in the secret service. The number, which was written and staged by James Kirkwood, is weak in dramatic structure and disappointing as a whole. Reviewed in last week's issue.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

THE CAPTAIN'S CAPTAIN (Vitagraph).—Alice Joyce is starred in this five-part picture taken from a story by James A. Cooper entitled "Cap'n Abe." The plot is a fantastic one and filled with the quaint characters of the New England coast. The picture was reviewed at length in last week's issue.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

THE DRIFTERS (Hodkinson Corp.).—A five-reel Alaskan story written by Kenneth B. Clarke and directed by Jesse B. Hampton. J. Warren Kerrigan, Walter Conklin and Lois Wilson have the leading roles. The story interest is strong despite some weakness in atmosphere and continuity, and the number will no doubt succeed.

Jewel Productions, Inc.

THE HEART OF HUMANITY (Jewel).—A nine-reel story of Canada's part in the great war written by Allen Holubar and Olga Scholl, and produced by the former, who devoted seven months to the task. Dorothy Phillips and a splendid cast appear. This is one of the "big" productions coming out of the war, a story of wonderful appeal and a success in practically every sense of the word. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE POOR RICH MAN (Metro).—Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are stars of a speedy comedy-drama that moves through a light plot with a satisfying total of entertainment resulting. The exhibitor who has a following that particularly favors these Metro stars will do well to "soft pedal" on high promises—but tell the folks that Bushman and Bayne are here again with good entertainment, filled with laughs and bright situations to entertain for a fleeting screen-hour. There will be none disappointed if the showman does not give way to extravagance in heralding.

THE GREAT VICTORY, Wilson or the Kaiser, the Fall of the Hohenzollerns (Metro).—Extremely cumbersome title to a picture. Exhibitors will do well to advertise, for brevity, "The Great Victory." Here is a photoplay that will make good propaganda to keep Americans from being afflicted with "soft-heart" as the events it pictures pass further from mind. The cruel deeds of the Hun, the effronts to decency and law, the braggart attitude of the Hun of Huns are reflected in well-directed and effective scenes. While the peace conference is in session the picture will be particularly good to show as timely reminders of the cause and effect of the German nation gone mad. For a quick bet, this is a mighty good exhibitor proposition. How long the subject will be appealing to the public is a matter that need not be ventured into—now is the time to get action and let the future develop its own outcomes.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

I WANT TO BE A LADY (Pathe).—A two-reel number featuring the child actress, Gloria Joy. She appears in this as a little girl with a fondness for dressing in ladies' gowns, and is finally given a part in a play. She and a small boy dressed as a gentleman run away together, but are finally overtaken and spanked by their distressed relatives. This would have been more amusing in one reel, as the story is hardly strong enough for two reels, though it has some pleasing moments.

DO YOU LOVE YOUR WIFE? (Pathe).—A one-reel comic featuring Stan Laurel, who plays the role of janitor. He has some fun with a vacuum cleaner, and there is a considerable mix-up among the apartment house tenants. This contains some fairly amusing burlesque touches.

THE HUNS HELL TRAP (Pathe).—Episode No. 13 of "Wolves of Kultur." This opens with the escape of Alice and Bob from the tower. There is a chase through the woods, and Alice is made captive and bound in the cave. Here she sees the spies working with the torpedo contrivance. They set an electric switch for the purpose of killing her, and the episode closes with Alice in the act of moving the switch. The instalment contains a fair amount of excitement.

WHEN A MAN RIDES ALONE (Pathe).—A five-reel Western melodrama featuring William Russell as the leader of a band of Texas rangers who round up some border outlaws. The number is wonderfully picturesque from a scenic standpoint, and quite thrilling in its melodramatic story. Reviewed in last week's issue.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW NO. 27 (Pathe).—This is a comprehensive view of the American Expeditionary Forces in Siberia showing Major Gen. W. S. Graves and many of the other officers. It also pictures many military men from Japan, Italy, Great Britain and various new nations, including the Czechs. This is both interesting and informing.

SINGAPORE, (Post-Pathe).—An excellent travel subject, picturing life on the island and in the city of Singapore. This has a Chinese population, very largely, and some highly entertaining forms of native life are pictured. The barber shop, the street parade and entertainments of all sorts make interesting features.

CODE OF HATE, (Pathe).—Episode No. 14 of "Wolves of Kultur." This follows the adventures of Alice and Bob, now separated, but each surrounded by the spies. Alice is a prisoner in the cave, where she has some narrow escapes and learns more about the torpedo invention. Bob has some sensational struggles in an old lighthouse where the spies are at work. The number is very interesting.

WANTED—$5,000 (Rolin-Pathe). — An amusing comic number, featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. In this number Harold must have $5,000 to win the girl and manages to get it out of her father in a novel way. The number has several laughs in it.

PATHE NEWS, No. 2 (Pathe), Dec. 29.—This diversified news issue contains many subjects of importance, but that of perhaps leading interest is the scenes showing depth bombs at work, an aspect of the war which is here given publicity for the first time. Other features include President Wilson in France, Mrs. Daniels visiting wounded sailors and Russian views.

Select Pictures Corporation.

THE HEART OF WETONA (Select).—Norma Talmadge gives a fine impersonation of the Indian heroine of his six-part picture taken from the stage play of the same name by George Scarborough. The production is excellent from every angle. A longer review was published in last week's issue.

Triangle Distributing Corporation.

WIFE OR COUNTRY (Triangle).—Written by Harry Mestayer, who also plays the hero, this five-part picture has a spy plot of considerable interest. Gloria Swanson is a member of the cast. A longer review was published in last week's issue.

Universal Film Company.

THE LURE OF THE CIRCUS, NO. 8 (Universal).—This number opens with a fight between Eddie's men and the Van Norman gang on the brink of a precipice. The hero goes over, but catches on the roots of a tree, and later climbs to safety over the backs of some of his men. He and Alice later dive from the open draw of a bridge.

World Pictures Corporation.

WHAT LOVE FORGIVES (World Pictures).—A five-reel subject written by Gardner Hunting and directed by Henry Vekroff. The plot tells of a young song writer reared in a strict New England atmosphere who falls into the clutches of a young actress who later attempts to blackmail him. The plot has more dramatic interest than was brought out in the presentation, but it holds the interest fairly well. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

KILAUEA (Prizma-World).—Some remarkably beautiful and thrilling, in their way, pictures of the famous Hawaiian volcano named Kilauea. The two-mile crater of this volcano is a molten mass of flaming lava, all the colors of which are brought out in this natural color process. The subject is but one of many that are to be released through World Pictures.

"UNDER THE TOP"

Jesse L. Lasky Presents the Famous Comedian, Fred Stone, in His Second Motion Picture Triumph Dealing with Life with a Big Circus.

Cast.

Jimmie Jones.....Fred Stone
Pansy O'Neill .....Ella Hall
Terry O'Neill.....Lester Le May
Lotta Crust .....Sylvia Ashton
"Foxy" Stillmore .....James Cruze
Jay Trimmer .....Guy Oliver
Otto B. Shott .....Charles Ogle
Professor De Como .....Noah Beery
Justice of the Peace.....J. Cummings
Mrs. Jones, Jimmie's Mother...Jane Wolff
The Wardrobe Lady.....Julia N. Stark

In Prologue

Jimmie Jones .....Gordon Griffith
Little Pansy O'Neill.....Althea Worthley

Directed by Donald Crisp.

The Story: Jimmie Jones loves a circus, much as other boys do, but he falls in love with Pansy, the daughter of Terry O'Neill, owner of the show, and he stays in love, which most other boys do not. O'Neill dies and Pansy is placed in the care of a retired equestrienne, who lives in Jimmie's town, by the men who take charge of the show. They plot to marry Pansy, as does the son of the ex-circus queen, but Jimmie wins the day and his agility in his efforts to prevent the marriage prove that he will be no small addition to the O'Neill show when he takes the management.

Feature Fred Stone as Jimmie Jones and Ella Hall as Pansy O'Neill.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Gripping Story of Circus Life and Love Told In Realistic Photo Scenes.
Novel Photo Plot Revealed in Scenes Full of Thrills and Laughter.
Exciting Scenes and Dazzling Thrills in Story of Circus Life.
Brilliant Photoplay, Reflecting Life and Lure of the Circus Arena.
Great Circus Picture Enacted by Fred Stone, Greatest of Circus Artists.

Advertising Angles: Whoop it up for the star, bearing down hard on his stage connection rather than on his earlier picture. Line up the stunts told of in the press book and announce him in these various specialties. Work on the circus style of advertisement, rather than along the more conventional lines, and make it plain that your adjectives are a travesty on the circus style, rather than overbooming for the play. Make most of your real advertising play on the stunt stuff. Make your lobby as circus-like as you can. You can get a tent effect from parts of smaller tents, and you can rent out the red lemonade privilege if you don't want to bother with it yourself.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising lay-out mats. Slides. Press book.

Released January 12.

"THE SECRET GARDEN"

Jesse L. Lasky Presents the Newest and Daintiest Star, Lila Lee, in a Delightful Story by the Creator of Little Lord Fauntleroy and The Little Princess.

Cast.

Mary Lenox .....Lila Lee
Archibald Craven ..Spottiswoode Aitken
Dr. Warren Craven, his brother, Clarence Geldart
Colin Craven .....Dick Rosson
Mrs. Medlock .....Fay Holderness
Martha Sowerby .....Ann Malone
Dickon Sowerby.....Paul Willis
Mrs. Sowerby.....Lucille Ward
Colin Craven's Nurse.....Mae Wilson
Ben Weatherstaff.....James Neill
Surgeon Harding.....Seymour Hastings
Mrs. Lenox.....Mlle. Dion
Captain Lenox.....Larry Steers
Indian Servant.....Forest Seabury
Ayah.....Miss Guwha

Directed by G. Butler Clonebaugh.

The Story: Mary Lenox, daughter of Captain Lenox, of the British Army in India, is left an orphan by the death of her father and mother in a plague. She is sent to the care of Archibald Craven, in England. Craven regards her as an addition to the burden he already carries—a crippled son, and receives her coldly, going to Egypt and leaving the children to the care of his brother, Dr. Craven, who is his heir in the event of the death of the weakling son. Mary brings the boy to health and frustrates the plan of Dr. Craven to poison the lad and on his return the father finds comfort in the secret garden which he has caused to be closed on the death of his wife and which has been Mary's base of operations.

Feature Lila Lee as Mary Lenox and Dick Rosson as Colin Craven.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Lilah Lee, Brilliant Young Cinema Star, Returns In Her Latest Screen Success.
Young Screen Star Developed Into Actress of Exquisite Charm.
Winsome Star Gives Artistic Touches to Fascinating Screen Role.
Happiness Comes to Friendless Girl Longing for True Love.
How Dan Cupid Found a Way to Brighten the Life of Friendless Girl.

Advertising Angles: By this time the star should have a following among your patrons if you have done your preliminary work properly. Keep on plugging for her, but work as hard for the well-known story by an author whose other works have screened exceptionally well. In other words you have both a star and a play to sell, either one of which should sell of itself. Get full value for this double combination. Drive home both appeals with strong phrases. The offering will back you up.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising lay-out mats. Slides. Press book.

Released January 12.

"JANE GOES A'WOOING"

Jesse L. Lasky Presents Vivian Martin in the Story of a Plucky Girl Who Gave Up a Fortune but Found a Real Husband.

Cast.

Jane Neill.....Vivian Martin
Monty Lyman.....Niles Welch
Micky Donovan.....Casson Ferguson
David Lyman.....Spottiswoode Aitken
Mrs. Arliss.....Helen Dunbar
Nita Arliss.....Byrdine Zuber
Harmon .....Clyde Benson
The Twins.....McKenzie Twins
Derondo.....Herbert Standing

Directed by George Melford.

The Story: Left with the care of two small sisters, Jane Neill takes a job as stenographer to a dramatist, and falls in love with Monty, his nephew and heir, finding him infinitely more attractive than Micky Donovan, who runs a lunch cart. Because of his wildness, his uncle disinherits Monty and makes Jane his heir, but when Jane realizes that Monty is fickle she destroys the will, leaving him heir under an earlier testiment, and turns once more to the faithful Mickey.

Feature Vivian Martin as Jane Neill and Niles Welch as Monty Lyman.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Absorbing Photoplay Vibrant With Pathos, Humor and Heart-Interest.
Dainty Vivian Martin Star of Cleverly-Contrived Photodrama.
Proving That the Best Things in Life Are Not the Ones Pursued.
The Stenographer's One Ambition Was to Marry for Money—and She Did.
Can a Girl Truly Love Two Men at the Same Time? You'll See.

Advertising Angles: Tell that Miss Martin is seen in a story by the author of her earlier success, "Mirandy Smiles." Play up the character as a brave, little wage-earner who wanted a man rather than money. If there is a lunch wagon near you post it with, "See the romance of a lunch wagon at (house and date). You'll like Vivian Martin in this story." Work on the "how to get a husband" angle. This would make a good mail proposition to a selected list if the message is carefully worded.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising lay-out mats. Slides. Press book.

Released January 5.

"WILD HONEY"

De Luxe Pictures Presents Doris Kenyon in an Adaptation by Louis Joseph Vance of Vingie E. Roe's Well Known Magazine Story.

Cast.

Mrs. Holbrook / "Wild Honey" ..... Doris Kenyon
Pastor Holbrook / Rev. "Jim" Brown ..... Frank Mills
Dick Hadding ..... Edgar Jones
Joe Stacy ..... John Hopkins
Jim Belcher ..... Joseph W. Mack
"Doc" Bliss ..... Howard Kyle
Ed. Southern ..... H. J. Hebert
Rev. David Warwick ..... Herbert Standing
Minnie Lou ..... Nellie King
Trixanita ..... Vinnie Burns
Gold Hill Ida ..... Ruth Taylor
Letty Noon ..... Mildred Leary

Directed by Francis J. Grandon.

The Story: In the prologue there comes to the Rev. Dr. Holbrook a young minister who loves an actress. She holds back on the plea that she might ruin his career. Holbrook tells them the story of the Rev. "Jim" Brown, who, young and almost fanatical in his zeal, invades a mining camp. Unknowing, he falls in love with the prettiest girl of the dance hall, Wild Honey. He makes her the object of his most bitter sermons, but Wild Honey loves him, and will not permit her numerous admirers to kill him. Then she shows him his love, and Brown, now her object slave, is made to endure greater humiliation than she had forced upon her. But love wins, and Holbrook points to his own happy married life for the answer to the younger man's question. He was the Jim Brown of the romance, and his wife the Wild Honey.

Feature Doris Kenyon as "Wild Honey" and Frank Mills as Rev. "Jim" Brown.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Doris Kenyon Dainty Star of Stirring Western Photodrama of Love and Adventure.
From Dance Hall Queen to Clergyman's Wife Through Flights of Adventure.
Real Life in the Rollicking Days of the "Rip Roaring" West.
How a "Fighting Parson" Was Licked Into Submission by Dan Cupid.
Stirring Photoplay Enacted in Vivid Scenes and Exciting Climaxes.

Advertising Angles: Play up the personality angle, but work on the theme of the young preacher who denounced the woman he loved because he did not realize that he loved her. Present this strongly, picking up incidents from the full synopsis to embellish the story. Do not overlook the use you have of two names well known to magazine readers. Play up both Vance and Miss Roe.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet. Eight 8x10 black-and-white, eight 11x14 sepia, and one 22x28 colored gelatin photos. One three-column, one two-column, and three one-column production cuts. One each one-column, two-column, and three-column "ad" cuts. Publicity photos and slides.

"LIFE'S A FUNNY PROPOSITION"

The Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation Presents William Desmond in a Story Amply Proving the Truth of the Title.

Cast.

Jimmie Pendeleton ..... William Desmond
Herbert Austin ..... Jay Belasco
Mrs. Austin ..... Vera Doria
Mary Austin ..... Louise Lovely
Tobias ..... John Steppling
Hepzibah ..... Lillie Sylvester
Jiggs ..... B. DuVaul
Horace Pendeleton ..... Jos. Franz
Jeremiah Pendeleton ..... John McGregor

Directed by Thomas H. Heffron.

The Story: Jimmie Pendeleton is so good that his prospective mother-in-law, Mrs. Austin, believes him too good to be true. She and her daughter, Mary, are invited to dine at Jimmie's apartments, and Mary's brother, Herbert, for a joke, leaves a Belgian baby with Jimmy, planning to explain the hoax at dinner. But he is the victim of an auto accident, and Jimmie has the baby, Herbert's accident, a pair of country cousins, another country cousin whom he is expected to marry and a supposed embezzlement of Herbert's all on his mind at the same time, not to mention a wealthy uncle who expects him to marry the cousin. It's a lively evening for Jimmy, but he comes through with flying colors.

Feature William Desmond as Jimmie Pendeleton and Louise Lovely as Mary Austin.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Stock, Bonds and Belgian Babies Mixed In a Photoplay of Force and Vital Interest.
William Desmond Star of Stirring Drama of Love and Adventure.
Remarkable Outcome of Plot and Counter Plot Bravely Foiled.
Strange Adventures of a Bashful Youth Who Becomes Bold Hero.
Thrills and Excitement Abound in Stirring Photodrama.

Advertising Angles: You can sell this story to advantage if you get your patrons interested in the vivid happenings. List Jimmie's woes in your advertising, and ask how any bashful young man can get out of all those scrapes in one short evening. If you can afford readers, scatter some through the paper, each taking up one of Jimmie's many troubles. You can make people want to see this play if you work the readers properly.

Advertising Aids: One each one, three and six sheets. Banner unmounted. One, two and three column cuts and mats. Lobby displays, 11x14, 22x28. Slides. Press sheet.
Released January 12.

"VIRTUOUS WIVES"

Louis B. Mayer Presents Anite Stewart in a Careful Adaptation of Owen Johnson's Unusual Novel of the Same Title.

Cast.

Amy Forrester ..... Anita Stewart
Andrew Forrester (her husband), ... Conway Tearle
Irma Delabarre ..... Mrs. DeWolf Hopper
Maurice Delabarre (her husband), ... Edwin Arden
Monte Bracken ..... William Boyd
Mrs. Teake, Sr. ..... Virginia Norden
Mrs. Teake, Jr. ..... Katharine Lewis
Jap Laracy ..... Captain Mortimer
Tubby Vandergrift ..... Harold Gwynn
Kitty Lightbody ..... Gwen Williams
Miss Rushin ..... Lucille Clayton

Directed by George Loane Tucker.

The Story: Amy and Andrew Forrester are happy in the first few weeks of their married life in the comforts that an income of $25,000 can give, but it does not last. Maurice Delabarre, steel magnate, needs Forrester's business ability, and when he cannot command it he invites them to his home for a visit. He planned well. Amy finds her standards of life, and demands that Andrew accept Delabarre's offer, though it entails a separation from her. She throws herself into the gaieties of the social set, and even dares rival Mrs. Delabarre for the interest of the most desirable social drifter. Mrs. Delabarre, finding her social throne tottering, sends for Andrew, and he comes to judge her new life by old standards—and finds her wanting. Was she or was she not a virtuous wife?

Feature Anita Stewart as Amy Forrester, Conway Tearle as Andrew and Edwin Arden as Delabarre.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Famous Serial and Best Selling Books Now Reach the Screen.
Proving That New York Society Is Not An Adamless Eden.
Anita Stewart Returns to the Screen In Her Own Productions.
Screen Version of Owen Johnson's Two-Million-Copy "Best Seller."
Disclosing Some Vital Problems in Society Marriages and Divorce.

Advertising Angles: Apart from Miss Stewart there are tremendous advertising possibilities here. In any sized town you can raise the question as to what constitutes modern virtue. Start in early to get the whole town talking. You can do it—and collect on the turmoil. Hook up with the novel through the booksellers. You can both profit.

Advertising Aids: 10½x33 rotogravure window display. One-column "ad" cut, one-column star cut, two and four-column "ad" cuts. Rotogravure herald. Press sheet. One, two, three, six and twenty-four sheets. Four slides. Three-column cut.
Released December 29 by First National.

"LITTLE ORPHANT ANNIE"

Pioneer Presents Coleen Moore in a Dainty Story Based Upon the Famous Poem by the Late James Whitcomb Riley.

Cast.

Littie Orphant Annie ..... Coleen Moore
Dave ..... Thomas Santschi
Annie's Uncle ..... Harry Lonsdale
Mrs. Goode ..... Eugenie Besserer
Children ..... Doris Baker / Lillian Wade / Ben Alexander

Directed by Colin Campbell.

The Story: Annie is sent to the orphan asylum when her mother dies, and she endears herself to the other children by her vivid fairy stories. When she becomes old enough to work she is taken from the asylum by her uncle and forced to live the life of a drudge. Dave, a neighboring farmer, falls in love with her, and arranges with the Goodes to care for Annie, intending to marry her. Then comes the call to war, and Dave enlists, giving his life to his country, and Annie joins him in "The Land of Good People" she has so often told about.

Feature Coleen Moore as Little Orphant Annie and Thomas Santschi as Dave.

Program and Advertising Phrases: James Whitcomb Riley's Immortal Poem Screened As Gripping Tragedy of War.
Best Work of "The Hoosier Poet" Reflected in Brilliant Photodrama.
Pathetic Story of Riley's Little Heroine Told in Convincing Photoplay.
Romance, Love and War Combined in Story of Pathetic Little Orphan.

Advertising Angles: The one big angle in this story is the fact that it is based upon one of the best known poems in the language. Play this up, and make Riley the star. Quote a verse in your advertisements. If you go in for ballyhoos, borrow a phonograph for your lobby and buy the record, keeping this going. You can get the loan of the machine for the advertising the record will receive. If you do not use ballyhoos, use the record at each show for a day or so before the showing, while a slide tells of the coming of the story. Appeal to school children and the literary societies.

Advertising Aids: One, three, six and twenty-four sheets. Slides. Photos, heralds, cuts and press sheet.

"HER INSPIRATION"

Metro Presents May Allison in a Story of the Land of Mountain Dew.

Cast.

Kate Kendall ..... May Allison
Harold Montague ..... Herbert Heyes
Curt Moots ..... Charles Edler
Big Hank ..... Allen D. Sears
Looney Lige ..... Jack Brammall

Directed by Robert Thornby.

The Story: Told by his manager that his new play lacks the proper color, Harold Montague goes to the mountains of Kentucky to absorb the color first-hand. He falls in with a band of moonshiners, and becomes interested in Kate, one of the gang, who saves his life when he is mistaken for a revenue officer, and again when he is mistaken as a spy for the hated officials. He leaves fearing that his love may betray his better judgment and lead him into marriage with his ignorant mountain girl. But back in town his heart still calls, and he is about to return to Kate when he fines in his new leading woman the girl of the mountains. She, too, has been seeking inspiration at first-hand.

Feature May Allison as Kate Kendall and Herbert Hayes as Harold Montague.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Pine-Scented Romance of Kentucky Mountains With May Allison the Star.
Woman's Wits Matched Against the Schemes of Mere Man.
Filled With the Spice of Romance and the Tang of Adventure.
Delightfully Captivating Drama of Mountain Love and Life.
Photographic Marvel of Exciting Situations and Unusual Events.

Advertising Angles: Make ample announcement of Miss Allison, who should sell better than the story. In advertising the latter work up the revenue angle rather than that of the playwright. Tell that it depicts the lawless country where shooting revenue officers is regarded as a sport rather than as murder, but do not play it up too strongly.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six sheets. Press sheet. Filler sheet. Ten-minute novel. Slide. Heralds. Lobby displays, 8x10 sepia, 11x14 sepia, 22x28 colored. Cuts.

Released December 30.

"ALL THE WORLD TO NOTHING"

Pathe Presents William Russell in an American Production in Which He Loses His Fortune and Gains Another and a Wife.

Cast.

Richard Chester.....William Russell
Nora Ellis.....Winnifred Westover
Everard Peck.....J. Morris Foster
Chas. Renalls.....Hayward Mack

Directed by Henry King.

The Story: Dick Chester loses his fortune in a three days' poker game. He is penniless. He is persuaded to marry Nora Ellis, who must be married at once or lose a large inheritance. He gives the name of Chester Dick. Later he comes back to influence, and saves his wife's fortunes from a raid in the stock market led by Charles Renalls, who wants to marry Nora, and thinks that he can win her by taking her fortune. Chester saves the fortune for her and wins her love, but she does not recognize him as "Dick" until the disappointed suitor precipitates an explanation and loses the day to his rival.

Feature William Russell as Richard Chester and Winifred Westover as Nora Ellis.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Long Odds and Great Chances Taken in the Game of Matrimony.
How Heavy Gambling Losses Led to Great Wealth and Happiness.
The Unhappy Position of a Bogus Husband in High Social Circles.
Gambling at Love Wins Higher Stakes Than Hazards at Poker.
Very Unusual Photo Plot Turned to the Best of Screen Entertainment.

Advertising Angles: In addition to using the name of the star work on the three days' poker game, the marriage and the scheme of Renalls. Take the incidents to serve as the basis for separate ads.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 11x14, both in sepia and color; also 22x28. Slide. Campaign book. Cuts.

Released through Pathe Exchanges.

"NEWMAN" Brass Frames and Rails

A FEW REASONS

why "NEWMAN" METAL FRAMES have been chosen by all the big circuits and best class of theatres.

1—Because the constant exposure to all sorts of weather conditions cannot affect "NEWMAN" NON-CORROSIVE METAL FRAMES.

2—Because of their richness in beauty and design, they liven the entrance and render the lobby more inviting than any other kind of frames.

3—Because they will outlast a dozen wood frames. They are practically un-wear-out-able.

Directed by Frank H. Crane.

The Story: Dick Randall, an American soldier, is wounded, and wanders into the German lines. He happens upon a company dressed in uniforms taken from dead Americans, and they think him one of themselves. He manages to escape, and is befriended by Corinne, a little French girl, with whom he escapes when an attack and counter-attack result in the death of her mother and sister. Corinne becomes the pet of the regiment, and Dick, insanely jealous, wanders away. In his delirium he imagines that he floods Berlin with pictures of the Kaiser labeled "Wanted for Murder." The signing of the armistice brings a return of sanity, and all ends happily.

Feature Elaine Hammerstein as Corinne and Charles Raven as Dick Randall.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Adventures of a Yankee Soldier-Hero In the Fight for Love and Freedom.
Hun Plots and Counter Plots Foiled by Loyal Yankee Doughboy.
Scenes of Daring and Doing Before the Mouth of Hun Cannons.
Romance Springs from the Furrowed Soil of No Man's Land.
How a Yankee Boy Fought For and Won His Bride on Battlefields.

Advertising Angles: There is just one good way to handle this subject. Flood your town or district with the "Wanted for Murder" snipes and follow up with the posters. Cover your house front with the same paper. It may not be dignified, but it is the way to get the business with this subject. Work on the same angle, with extra space, in the newspapers.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, two six-sheets, one twenty-four-sheet. 8x10 and 11x14 photos. Press sheet. Music cues. Slides. Cuts, heralds and snipes.

Released through Film Clearing House.

"THE CAVELL CASE"

Joseph L. Plunkett and Frank J. Carroll Present the Distinguished Player, Julia Arthur, in the Story of the Famous Woman Heroine of the War.

Cast.

Edith.....Amy Dennis
George Brooks.....George Le Guere
Frank Brooks.....Creighton Hale
George Brooks, his father..Thomas Brooks
Joan Clemons.....Joyce Fair
U. S. Minister to Belgium...J. W. Johnston
U. S. Ambassador to Great Britain, Fred Melville
Secretary to American Legation at Brussels .....Marty Faust
A Belgian Lawyer, legal adviser, George Dupee
Spanish Minister to Belgium, George Majeroni
Gen. von Bissing.....William H. Tooker
Captain von Baring, his aide.Fred Kalgren
Baron von der Lancken.....Paul Panzer
M. Kirschen.....Louis Sturz
Mrs. Cavell.....Sara Alexander
Nurse Edith Cavell.....Julia Arthur

Directed by John G. Adolfi.

The Story: This is the story of Edith Cavell, the British Red Cross nurse, who gave up love to devote her life to the caring of the sick and wounded. Edith Cavell loved George Brooks, but refused to marry him because she felt she had another mission in life. When the war breaks out Nurse Cavell is stationed at the Brussels Hospital. She helps Frank Brooks, her old sweetheart's son, to escape. She is discovered and imprisoned. "The shot which rang around the world and raised an army over night" was the shot that killed Edith Cavell.

Feature Julia Arthur as Edith Cavell, the martyred Red Cross nurse.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Realistic Reflection of Blighted Belgium Under the Heel of the Hun.
Julia Arthur, Famous Stage Star, Makes Her Screen Debut.
Hun Beasts Failed to Reckon on the Honor of a Woman.
Tragic History of the Woman the Germans Shot in Belgium.
Story of Edith Cavell, English Red Cross Nurse, Murdered by the Hun.

Advertising Angles: Of course, this famous incident will form the basis of your publicity work, but get what you can from the star. Julia Arthur left the stage at the very helght of her career to marry a millionaire. She has emerged from retirement only when her interest has moved her to do so. Tell your patrons that one of the most famous actresses of the American stage conquered her long prejudice against the screen to appeal to them for the memory of the heroic woman who gave up her life to duty. Also call attention to the fact that the story is by Anthony Paul Kelly, whose "Three Faces East" is one of the undeniable hits on Broadway this season.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Window cards, 14x21. Heralds. Lobby display photographs, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Slides. Cuts, two one-column, two two-column, one three-column, one one-half-column cut of star and one one-column and one two-column cuts of star.
Released in November by Select.

"THE GOLD CURE"

Metro Presents Viola Dana in the Charming Story by Alexine Heyland, Originally Appearing in the Woman's Home Companion.

Cast.

Annice Paish.....Viola Dana
Michael Darcy.....William B. Davidson
Vance Dunton.....John McGowan
Dr. Rodney Paish.....Howard Hall
Edna Lawson.....Elsie MacLeod
Cord, the detective.....Fred Jones
Michael Connors.....Franklyn Hanna

Directed by John H. Collins.

The Story: Annice Paish and Edna Lawson, despairing of ever getting married in their dull town, scatter tacks on the highway and wreck an automobile in which Vance Dunton is traveling. He has broken some bones, and Annice has him taken to her father's house for treatment by Dr. Paish. Vance sends for Michael Darcy, who is about his own age, though married, and the girls would be supremely happy were it not for Cord, a man who was following Vance, and who declares him to be a young wastrel whose real uncle is searching for him for the theft of money. The girls refuse to believe the story, and, when Cord spirits Vance to a gold cure, Annice follows and obtains his release. Then the uncle appears on the scene, and tells the detective that he never saw Vance before. The detective has been following the wrong man, and the girls find their scheme an entire success.

Feature Viola Dana as Annice Paish and John McGowan as Vance Dunton.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Fresh and Breezy Story, Combining Wit and Wisdom With Keen Adventure.

Advertising Angles: Play up the star and make capital of the publication of the story in the Woman's Home Companion. Get the hardware and house furnishing shops to display carpet tacks with a card lettered, "If you want to win a husband buy a box of tacks and see 'The Gold Cure' at (house and date) to see how it's done." Work the same scheme for a lobby card, and adapt the idea for newspaper work. Tell that it is the story of two girls who win husbands with the aid of a box of carpet tacks.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six sheets. Press sheet. Filler sheet. Ten-minute novel. Slide. Heralds. Lobby displays, 8x10 sepia, 11x14 sepia, 22x28 colored. Cuts.
Released January 6.

"WIVES AND OTHER WIVES"

Pathe Presents the Dainty Star, Mary Miles Minter, in Her Newest American Production of a Story of a Jealous Husband and a Clever Wife.

Cast.

Robin Challoner.....Mary Miles Minter
Geoffrey Challoner.....Colin Chase
Judge Corcoran.....Geo. Periolat
Mr. Norman Craig.....Wm. Garwood
His Wife.....Margaret Shelby

Directed by Lloyd Ingraham.

The Story: Geoffrey Challoner finds Robin, his bride of a few days, attempting to burn some letters, and promptly becomes insanely jealous. Norman Craig blunders into her apartment a few days later, and Robin shoots, thinking him a burglar. He faints from fright, and Robin, thinking she has killed him, runs out. Geoffrey finds the man in his wife's rooms, and decides upon a divorce. But before the case comes to trial he makes the same error and gets into Mrs. Craig's room. Before this can be straightened out a burglary gets them all bewildered, and it is not until a swift-moving chain of ludicrous incidents that Geoffrey finds that the letters were some of his own.

Feature Mary Miles Minter as Robin Challoner and Colin Chase as Geoffrey Challoner.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Fascinating Story of Mixed Marriages and Domestic Encounters.
How a Bridal Couple Were Brought to Full Understanding of Happiness.
Dainty Mary Miles Minter in Her Most Fascinating Photodrama.
Strange Misunderstandings Result from Odd Turn of Circumstances.
Swift-Moving Plot Passes Speedily Through Many Strange Encounters.

Advertising Angles: Make most of your appeal with the star, playing up her photographs and lithographs. Use fragments of the story for curiosity getters in your newspaper work. Also use such phrases as, "Don't burn your old love letters while your husband is around. For the reason why see, etc." These can also be used for throwaways. The main angle is to make them realize that it is Miss Minter plus a bright and amusing story of the type in which she shows to the greatest advantage.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 11x14, both in sepia and color; also 22x28. Slide. Campaign book. Cuts.

"WIFE OR COUNTRY"

Triangle Presents Harry Mestayer and Gloria Swanson in a Vital Story of Love and Propaganda.

Cast.

Dale Barker.....Harry Mestayer
Dr. Meyer Stahl.....Jack Richardson
Gretchen Barker.....Gretchen Lederer
Sylvia Hamilton.....Gloria Swanson
Jack Holiday.....Charles West

Directed by E. Mason Hopper.

The Story: Gretchen is married to Dale Barker, whom she has reclaimed from the drink habit. He has become a lawyer, and is now engaged in the service of the Department of Justice in hunting down German propaganda. Before her marriage, Gretchen had become entangled with the propagandists, and now is unable to sever her connection. She is fearful that Dale will discover her activities. Jealous of Sylvia, Hamilton, Dale's stenographer, plans to have her brought under suspicion, but the clever girl suspects her employer, and when arrested as a spy turns over to the authorities a mass of evidence, not knowing that a portion of it incriminates Mrs. Barker. Dale is placed between loyalty and gratitude to his wife and love of country, but fate solves his problem for him.

Feature Harry Mestayer as Dale Barker and Gloria Swanson as Sylvia Hamilton.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Wherein Gratitude Is Mistaken for Love With Some Unusual Consequences Attendant.
In Which Gratitude, Love and Patriotism Struggle for Supremacy.
How Self-Respect Was Roused to Redeem An Amiable Derelict.
Depicting the Struggle Between Love of Wife and Love of Country.
Oddly-Contrived Photo Plot Gives Play of Thrills and Excitement.

Advertising Angles: Play up the stars and their support, advertising four strong favorites in a single cast. For the story angle offer Barker's predicament in problem form, and ask your patrons what they would do in his case. This might be started on a slide before the regular advertising, stating the problem without reference to the production, working into the title when the campaign is sprung.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Special process art heralds. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Photographs. Slides. Electros and mats. Triangle magazines. Press sheets.
Released December 29.

"FOR FREEDOM"

William Fox Presents William Farnum in a Striking Romance of the War and Prison Walls.

Cast.

Robert Wayne.....William Farnum
Herbert Osborne.....C. Albertson
Mary Fenton.....Ruby DeRemer
Edith Osborne.....Anna Lehr
Howard Stratton.....Herbert Frank
"Bull" Harris.....G. Raymond Nye
The Weazel.....John Slaven
David Sterling.....Marc Robbins

Directed by Frank Lloyd.

The Story: Robert Wayne, attempting to secure the return of some compromising letters written by his sister to Howard Stratton, is surprised by the police and sent to prison under an assumed name. At the outbreak of war he persuades the authorities to parole such convicts as desire to fight, and is among those to go to France, where he serves with distinguished courage. But on his return he is recognized by the head of the parole board, whose niece, Mary, he is about to marry, and his happiness is saved only by his sister's confession as to the real cause of his imprisonment.

Feature William Farnum as Robert Wayne and Ruby DeRemer as Mary Fenton.

Program and Advertising Phrases: From Prison Bars to Heroic Glory With William Farnum Doing His Best Screen Acting.
Gallant American Makes Glorious Journey from Prison Bars to Battlefield.
See How the War Service Commission Cares for the Soldier Boys.
Gripping Story of Love and Adventure Based on Foolish Girl's Prank.
A Sister's Wrong Avenged In Man's Bitter Fight for Freedom.

Advertising Angles: Apart from the popularity of the star, here is a chance to hook up with the agitation as to the propriety of permitting convicts to fight. This is a matter which has occupied the attention of leading papers throughout the country, and it is not too late to hook in with this. For another angle use the situation in which the sister finds herself, and ask the reader what he thinks she did. With these two angles you should have plenty of material for unusual work.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets, two styles of each. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).
Released December 29.

"FIGHTING BLOOD"

William Fox Presents William Farnum in a Reissue of One of His Greatest Past Successes.

Cast.

Lem Hardy.....William Farnum
Evie Colby.....Dorothy Bernard
Henry Colby, her father.....Fred Huntley
Harry Blake.....Henry J. Hebert
Tom Gray.....H. A. Barrows
Deacon Flint.....Dick LeStrange
Big Bill.....Willard Louis

Directed by Oscar C. Apfel.

The Story: Lem Hardy, wrongfully accused of a robbery, is sent to prison, while Harry Blake, who committed the crime, marries the girl Lem loves. His money soon vanishes, and he goes West, where he becomes a gambler. There he is found by Lem, who has entered the ministry upon his release from prison, and, in rescuing a girl from Blake's clutches, Blake is killed, and Lem at last marries the woman he loves to lead her back to the path of right.

Feature William Farnum as Lem Hardy and Dorothy Bernard as Evie Colby.

Program and Advertising Phrases: William Farnum Star of Greatest Action Drama Ever Screened in Photoplays.
A Virile Story of Life in the Kentucky Mountains.
Photoplay of the Kentucky Mountains and Early Gold Fields.
Life, Love and Adventure in the Wild Mountains of Kentucky.
Photoplay of Red Blood and Real Manhood in Heroic Action.

Advertising Angles: Offer this as a reissue and not as a new production. If you have played it before, you can get more out of it on the strength of its old record. If it is new to your patrons, tell them that it is a story so good as to have been revived to meet popular demand. In your advertising use the feature of the mountaineer turned minister, but who retains all his old fighting instincts.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets, two styles of each. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).
Released December 29.

"THE HEART OF WETONA"

he has never been given any encouragement. To protect Wetona, Hardin marries her. She is ousted from the tribe. Wetona later learns that she loves Hardin and not Tony, so, with her father's forgiveness and a real man's love, she is made happy.

Feature Norma Talmadge as Wetona and Thomas Meighan as Hardin, an Indiana agent.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Norma Talmadge, Star of Her Most Delightful Contribution to the Screen.
Inspiring Story of Love Enthroned in Indian Girl's Heart.
What Happened When She Fell in Love With Her Husband.
Gripping Drama Forces Vital Problem Into Illuminating View.
A Play of Deep Tragedy and Happiness Gained Under Great Stress.

Advertising Angles: In addition to playing up Miss Talmadge give emphasis to the fact that this is a screen version of a Belasco production. You can give your lobby an Indian touch, with a tepee and camp fire. This will be much less trouble than a tent. In your newspaper work play up the Indian angle, working with the cuts of Miss Talmadge in costume. Contrast this with other types she has played. Get them interested in this angle.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Window cards, 14x21. Heralds. Lobby display photographs, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Slides. Cuts, two one-column, two two-column, one three-column, one one-half-column cut of star, and one one-column and one two-column cuts of star.
Released in December by Select.

"THE CABARET GIRL"

Bluebird Presents Ruth Clifford in the Story of a Little Singing Girl Who Loved a Man Well Enough to Give Him Up for His Own Good.

Cast.

Ann Reid.....Ruth Clifford
Dolly.....Carmen Phillips
Ted Vane.....Ashton Dearholt
Balvini.....Harry V. Meter

Directed by Douglas Gerrard.

The Story: Ann Reid, disappointed in her hopes of becoming an operatic star, sings in a cabaret. She attracts the attention of Ted Vane, who proposes to her. She accepts, but his mother persuades her that she would ruin Ted's career, and for his sake she visits his family and acts like the woman Mrs. Vane thinks she probably is. Ted is despairing, but he learns of his mothers appeal and the girl's ruse just in time to save her from herself.

Feature Ruth Clifford as Ann Reid and Ashton Dearholt as Ted Vane.

Program and Advertising Phrases: When She Gave Up Real Love She Halted At the Acceptance of a Cheap Imitation.
Dan Cupid Refused to Be Vanquished When Foolish Girl Fought His Rule.
Though She Renounced Love, She Discovered She Could Not Forget.
Fast Life Under Broadway Lights Reflected in Brilliant Photoplay.
Great Moral Lesson Driven Home in Convincing Photodrama.

Advertising Angles: Identify Miss Clifford with her earlier plays. Tell that this gives a new angle to the life of the cabaret girls; not all of whom are the dashing rounders they are supposed to be by any means. In small towns tell that most of the action lies in a famous New York cabaret. Even the larger towns will respond to the cabaret appeal. Make it strong, but do not lead your patrons to expect wild orgies.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Stock one-sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays. Slide. Heralds. Players' cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two columns wide. Press book.
Released December 16.

MOTION PICTURE CARBONS

Standard for Alternating Current Projection

A product that is considered standard by the experts in any industry must meet the requirements of the service for which it is intended. White A. C. Special carbons were designed to fill the need of an efficient light source for alternating current projection. They have been tested by the experts in the motion picture industry who are satisfied that they fill the bill in every particular.

White A. C. Special Carbons are standard. They give a pure white light of high intensity, noiseless and flickerless operation, and a rugged light source not affected by any slight changes in voltage. No new current consuming regulating devices required. Simply insert a trim of White A. C. Specials.

FOR DIRECT CURRENT PROJECTION

The Columbia-Silvertip combination gives a strong, penetrating light and absolutely steady screen illumination.

Manufacturing Rights to New Projection Machine FOR SALE

You who have sought to get into the manufacturing end of the business now have a genuine opportunity sueh as comes but onee in a lifetimc. The inventor of a new projector desires to sell all patent and other rights thereto outright. Thc machine is extremely simple in eonstruetion, henee very eheap to manufaeture. But simplicity most emphatically has not been gained at the expense of any desirable feature. The construetion is very rigid and very rugged. There are but two gears in the entire meehanism. Its sereen performance will equal or exeel that of any projeetor now on the market. In wearing qualities and handsome appearance it is seeond to none.

In the Projection Department of this issue appears an illustrated description of the maehine. Look it over.

The Argus Enterprises

New Improved Type Argus Equipment For Successful Mazda Lamp Projection

Manufactured Under Argus Patents by the General Electric Company

Argus Ezy Simplex Bracket in position for installing the Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter. Carbon-arc housing has been pushed back out of the way.

Argus Adapter mounted on bracket and in position for projection. If desired, carbon-arc housing may be removed and the Argus A.C. Regulator put in its place, as here shown.

Can be installed quickly on any projection machine without disturbing carbon-arc equipment by using the Argus Ezy Bracket

BY USING one of the new Argus Ezy Brackets, the improved Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter can be quickly and easily installed on any type projection machine, without disturbing the carbon-arc equipment. Anyone can make the change by following our simple, photographic instructions.

THIS IS another step in the progress of Mazda Lamp Projection, which has proved so efficient in hunderds of theatres by insuring better screen illumination and cutting bills for electric current 50 to 75%.
Jobbers and Dealers can market Argus Equipment by mail—the operator can make proper installation.

The Big 900 watt Mazda Projection Lamp is ready and Argus Equipment will insure its successful operation

WITH this higher-wattage lamp, Mazda Projection may be used efficiently in 90% of all picture theatres; for longer throws and larger screens than heretofore possible. THE 600 watt Mazda Lamp will continue in favor for smaller throws and smaller screens, and for use with individual lighting plants where the voltage is lower. Write for data on the application of Mazda Projection in your theatre.

The Argus Crystal Bead Screen (Patented)

THIS wonderful new screen has been installed and is highly endorsed by many exhibitors—it is the last word in screens. The Argus Screen gives added depth of focus and realism to the pictures, and eliminates "fade-away" from angle projection. It may be washed with warm water without streaking. It will insure perfectly projected pictures when viewed from any seat in your theatre. Ask for quotation, giving the size of your screen.

"Take it from me, boys, the concern that sticks to selling its product on its own merit is the concern that has the most merit to offer.

"Way, way back in the old days I bought a "Power's 4." A salesman showed me how good it was and the machine backed up every one of his arguments.

"That's Power's. It has been "showing me" ever since. It always strives for something better and the improvements which each model has presented have made me a still stronger Power's booster.

"The smoke has cleared away, the din has ceased; but Power's is right out there on the firing line. It has never lost because it has always fought under this slogan:

High Quality Of Spoor-Thompson Process Wins Big Contract

A thorough study of the Spoor-Thompson Process was made by J.A. Berst, an acknowledged expert on processing, and one of the few film executives recognized as having a full and comprehensive knowledge of laboratory methods.

Mr. Berst was convinced that positive prints produced by this method are of a higher quality and have a greater artistic value than is possible under any other system.

As president of the United Picture Theaters of America, Inc., Mr. Berst backed his convictions with a long term contract to make all his corporation's positive prints, amounting to several hundred thousand feet a week, by this Method.

Talk to our sales manager, Mr. Charles F. Stark, in regard to price and service.

INTER-OFFICE COMMUNICATION

The Suggestio for the "Ad

Date Dec. 27, 1918

To The Advertising Department:

William Faversham in the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "The Silver King," is such an unusually fine production that I hope you will exert every effort to convince the exhibitors of that fact.

Especially, I believe, should they be urged to advertise heavily and with copy that will assure their patrons of the quality of this picture.

I remember that some time ago we had an advertisement of Paramount-Artcraft Specials headed. "When we say it's a Special we speak Webster's language." Several exhibitors have used this copy in their own advertisements of Paramount-Artcraft Specials.

I think it would be a good idea to run it again - not so much for our benefit as to furnish the copy to exhibitors that they may pick it up to use in advertising "The Silver King."

I believe it would be well to include this copy in one of the extra advertisements that you are furnishing exhibitors, in addition to the regular ones in the press book.

Walter E. Greene

presents

THE SILVER KING"

The "Ad" itself

Specials

When We Say "It's a Special" We Speak Webster's Language

When we use the word "special" we mean just what Webster's New International Dictionary means, namely: "Distinguished by some unusual quality; uncommon, extraordinary; especially distinguished by superior excellence, importance, power or the like."

That describes Paramount-Artcraft Specials.

Artcraft Special

Making Promises—and Keeping Them

WHEN the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announced that it would produce a series of Paramount-Artcraft Specials it promised that each of these productions would indeed be specials in every sense of the word.

Because the promise was made by an institution in which the exhibitors had confidence, hundreds booked these Specials before they had seen even one of the pictures.

The Paramount-Artcraft Specials have made good. They are Specials.

A promise well kept always increases confidence and Paramount-Artcraft Specials are helping greatly to build good will and added business for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

So, in turn, are the Paramount-Artcraft Specials building good will and added business for the theatres that show them.

"The Silver King" will increase your profits and your prestige.

But you must advertise it sincerely. Give it your personal indorsement. We suggest that you use "When we say it's a Special we speak Webster's language," in your advertising.

It's a promise that you will back up with a 100% performance, with William Faversham in "The Silver King."

"The Silver King" was written by Henry Arthur Jones.

It accomplishes the seemingly impossible by breaking the Strand's (N.Y.) Sunday Record from Wid's:

"Virtuous Wives" Breaks Records.

"Virtuous Wives" broke a Sunday record at the Strand. Moe Mark informed the First National office that the picture smashed a single day's record at the Strand since that theater's existence, including the run of Chaplin's films. The Strand, for the first time in its history had a packed house the last performance on Sunday night.

There is no doubt that Anita Stewart's popularity has not been diminished by her long absence from the screen. The eager crowds of people that flocked to the Strand last week gave ample testimony that the dainty actress still holds her place in the favor of the motion picture fans. The lobby each evening was transformed into a holiday gathering and, instead of the staid stream of couples in search of a quiet and respectable evening's entertainment that usually attends New York's leading theatres, a veritable scramble took place to welcome Miss Stewart back into the fold. "Virtuous Wives," and the fact that the story was written by Owen Johnson, had a great deal to do with it. Owen Johnson is a most thoughtful and sincere [illegible] works [illegible]

The Syracuse Journal.

"VIRTUOUS WIVES" COMES AS CLIMAX TO STRAND'S YEAR

Film Arraigns Polite Society and Has Lesson for Husbands and Their Better Halves.

When a press agent claims that a film is "not only one of the big productions of the season on the screen, but a notable event in the annals of moving pictures" as well, one is inclined to wonder if the aforesaid P. A. is not indulging in more or less poetic license. With that feeling, we went to see "Virtuous Wives," with which Anita Stewart returns to the screen, at the Strand on Sunday. Upon leaving we were convinced that even press agents at times are truthful.

"Virtuous Wives," from the novel of Owen Johnson, is without doubt one of the best films that the Strand has presented to its host of patrons. It comes truly as a great climax to a successful year.

Not that the underlying theme of "Virtuous Wives" is new. It has been used again and again. It is as old as man and novelists will still be using it when the world ends. Stripped of conventional dress, story—the tale of man's fight for riches that he may give the woman of his choice the luxuries he finds others enjoying; of how he attains his goal, only to find that in the interval he has apparently lost the woman; of how, in the end, both see their mistake.

But in its present dress, the story is a masterly arraignment of polite society with apologies to Webster. It is a reminder to husbands to give their wives more than clothes and a home. It is a lesson to wives of the danger of playing with fire.

Andrew Forrester (Conway Tearle) is the typical American business man and Amy, his wife (Anita Stewart), is a society belle. Delabarre, — — capitalist (Edwin Arden), wants Forrester to develop his Colorado mines and with his wife, Irma (Mrs. DeWolfo Hopper), entertains the Forresters at his palatial country mansion. Forrester determines to win similar luxury for Amy and accepts Delabarre's proposition to go to Colorado for a year. Amy spends the year with the Delabarres and learns the "game" of "virtuous wives." Things run smoothly until Amy captures Irma's admirer, Monty (William Boyd). Irma, out of revenge, informs Andrew and he comes East. The conclusion is gripping.

The work of Miss Stewart, Mrs. Hopper, Mr. Arden, Mr. Tearle and Mr. Boyd is wonderful. One of the most powerful scenes comes towards the close of the story when Delabarre fears his son has been drowned. Real tears well up into Arden's eyes. And even Miss film fans will find themselves searching for kerchiefs.

The directorship of "Virtuous Wives" leaves nothing to be desired. The action is natural and is replete with human touches. One of the most effective is the "fade out" when Irma's signature turns to a cat. The photography throughout the film is excellent. The night scenes are striking, particularly those showing the beach bonfire.

The Girl, the Man and the Dream That Came True

HERE are the proper elements of Romance.

With them has been blended a delightful comedy-drama packed tight with lively adventure.

And the star of a thousand surprises; the screen heroine of the unusual; the personality that changed the picture public's taste from the day of her first great success in "Baby Mine."

DAY DREAMS

By Cosmo Hamilton Directed by Clarence G. Badger

The most amazing thing about Madge Kennedy is that she is always talked about—by critics, exhibitors and the public who frequent the theatres. Her success and her drawing power were instantaneous. This newest story, "Day Dreams," will greatly increase her popularity. Released everywhere January 12.

Here Is A Smashing Melodrama That Will "Save The Day"

A story of the lawless West; of mad, breathless riding and dare-deviltry; of outlaw courage and physical encounter; of gunplay between bandits and posses in the dead of night—and a big love story that makes the entire drama more human.

You, as an exhibitor, demand punch. Here it is, in what is rated unanimously by the New York critics and the New York Strand Theatre as "the big action-drama of the year."

The Success We Predicted!

LOUIS BENNISON
in
Oh, Johnny!

By Wilson Bayley · Directed by Ira M. Lowry

Here are but a few of the enthusiastic comments of the Philadelphia critics reviewing the premiere of this new star and his first production at the Victoria Theatre:

PHILA. LEDGER: A personality that is going to win popularity immediately is revealed by Louis Bennison in "Oh, Johnny!"

PHILA. NORTH AMERICAN: Thank goodness, an off-the-beaten-track western drama; a rattling good story with a lot of comedy and a star who wins your immediate liking.

PHILA. PRESS: Louis Bennison has a western comedy drama that is out of the common run of such stories... a big success.

PHILA. RECORD: Louis Bennison duplicates his stage success in "Oh, Johnny!" He will win great popularity in stories full of fun and action like this one.

Goldwyn is the exclusive distributor of the Louis Bennison Star Series of six productions, which are now being booked in the best houses of the nation. His second production is "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar-U" and the third is "Speedy Meade," a story as fast as its title. See them at your nearest Goldwyn office.

CAPITOL COMEDIES

You Never Have to Apologize to Your Audiences for "Smiling Bill" Parsons

MOST screen comedies for many years were made on the principle that also governed the producers of burlesque in devising their entertainments.

They were laughable—if you didn't mind having your wife and children mingle blushes with their laughter.

The American picture-going public doesn't want to blush; doesn't want to be fed the risque.

"Smiling Bill" Parsons has always recognized the healthy, sane tastes of the nation's fine average of people. He knows that women and children constitute the vast majority of picture-theatre patrons. It is a fine insurance that you have against the intrusion of smut into your theatre when you book

FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

Successful America As It Is —a dominating theme of the Ford Educational Weekly

AMERICANS love success. We are a people of big imaginations, mental daring and huge ambitions. We like to see the inside of things; to see the great industries and industrial leaders: to watch things in the making.

The hunger for information accounts for a great deal of the success of The Ford Educational Weekly.

This powerful screen supplement, issued weekly and backed by the reputation and prestige of Henry Ford himself, is a record of things as they are in the greatest Nation the world has ever known.

The FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY is the one national magazine of the screen booked and played in theatres large and small; carefully edited; carefully guarded against the entry and intrusion of improper material.

It answers the unending questions of the American people; the questions: "Who?" "How?" "Why?" "Where?"

Under its exclusive Goldwyn distribution the scope of this important cinema publication will be greater than ever before in the four years of its previous success. See these releases in your nearest Goldwyn office:

Jan. 12: "What Uncle Sam Will Do For 2 Cents."
Jan. 19: "The Truth About the Liberty Motor."
Jan. 26: "Hang It All!" The story of wall paper.

Rothapfel Succeeded by Riesenfeld at Rialto-Rivoli

SAMUEL L. ROTHAPFEL announces his resignation as managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, effective February 1. "I am leaving this connection to take up the preliminaries in a project of significance and with a greater claim upon my attention, the nature of which I cannot discuss in detail at this time," said Mr. Rothapfel. "There will be more to say later.

"I am leaving the Rialto and Rivoli with the best of feeling and in pleasant personal relations with the owners. The organization which I have built will go on with the work. I shall always feel a deep personal interest in the welfare of these theatres, which I have fathered on Broadway."

Mr. Rothapfel made his advent in the show world of New York at the Regent Theatre, uptown, having been called to that post of management after a successful career in Milwaukee and Minneapolis. This was in 1912-13.

Next came the Strand Theatre in Broadway, which was opened under Mr. Rothapfel's management on April 19, 1914. The Strand Theatre at that time became famed as the nation's greatest motion picture theatre under the Rothapfel administration.

Then came the Rialto, especially built for Mr. Rothapfel's ideas and ideals of motion picture presentation. The Rialto was opened April 21, 1916, and became rapidly one of the most remarkable successes in motion picture theatre history. The marked financial and artistic successes of the Rialto led to the building of Rivoli a few blocks up Broadway. Last week the Rivoli celebrated its first anniversary.

Riesenfeld Succeeds.

The Board of Directors of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres on Wednesday authorized the announcement of the appointment of Hugo Riesenfeld as managing director of the two theatres, succeeding Samuel L. Rothapfel.

"Mr. Rothapfel is leaving to take up activities in another field of motion picture endeavor," says the official statement, "and the good will of the institutions follow him.

"Hugo Riesenfeld, now musical director for the two theatres, has been with the organization since the opening of the Rialto Theatre. He will continue a close personal supervision of the musical phases of the entertainment and will continue to conduct the orchestra.

"The policy of the theatres will continue to be that of the highest attainable quality in motion picture and musical production."

William Brandt Sells New Albany.

William Brandt, who for several years has successfully conducted the New Albany Theatre, in Albany avenue, Brooklyn, has sold the house to a company of which Julien Loeb, who built and managed the Sumner Theatre of the same borough, is president. Oscar M. Lazrus is the treasurer. Mr. Loeb will be house manager.

Mary Pickford Ill.

Los Angeles, Jan. 7.

Mary Pickford was stricken with influenza yesterday and was taken from her studio to a hospital. Two nurses are in attendance. It is reported she is not seriously ill.

Announcement

THE Chalmers Publishing Company, through John F. Chalmers, general manager, has named the undersigned editor of the Moving Picture World.

It will be the continued aim of The World to enlarge and to fortify the confidence reposed in it by its readers; to print the news of the trade and to present it in interesting fashion; to aid in the solution of problems confronting those whose daily bread comes from that growing portion of the public patronizing motion pictures; to discourage bootless controversy and to promote that unity of purpose and harmony of action so necessary to the healthy expansion of a great industry.

War Board Removes Restrictions.

The War Trade Board announces that licenses will be issued freely for the exportation to Denmark, Norway, Sweden and European Holland of films, printed positive of negative, subject to censorship. Applicants desiring to ship films to any of the four countries named should apply, using Application for Export License Form X and such Supplemental Information Sheets as are required for such films. Supplemental Information Sheet X-119 is no longer required for films. Export licenses will be granted without the usual reference to the representative of the War Trade Board abroad. Applicants are cautioned no shipments should be made in violation of the Trading with the Enemy Act.

Condon to Write for Fairbanks.

Douglas Fairbanks has engaged Frank Condon of Saturday Evening Post fame as special scenario writer. Condon's success as an author of fiction stories attracted the attention of the Artcraft actor-producer, who feels that he has been particularly fortunate to make satisfactory arrangements with the writer of "This Way Out," "By Request" and "Blue Monday." Condon just completed a series of five stories scheduled for early publication in a magazine.

Both Sides "Stand Pat" In C. K. Young Matter

THE difference in business relations between Lewis J. Selznick, Clara Kimball Young and Harry I. Garson, as set forth in the last issue of the Moving Picture World, remains unchanged according to the statements of the most interested parties on both sides. It will be recalled that in the business pages of the World, last week, both the C. K. Y. Film Corporation and Clara Kimball Young made announcements of their future purposes.

Clara Kimball Young declared that she would make no more pictures for the C. K. Y. Film Corporation; said C. K. Y. Film Corporation declaring that she would. Wednesday afternoon, January 8, there was no perceptible change in the situation. Interviewed by a reporter for the World, Lewis J. Selznick had this to say:

"One hundred per cent. of stock in the C. K. Y. Film Corporation is owned by Select Pictures Corporation. Miss Young has a contract with the C. K. Y. Film Corporation until August 31, 1921. The statement Harry I. Garson made is absolutely contrary to facts. Instead of C. K. Y. Film Corporation owing Miss Young any money, Miss Young has overdrawn her account. We intend to stand upon our contract."

William Rudolph, representing Harry I. Garson, declared the same afternoon to the World reporter that Clara Kimball Young will make no more pictures (after delivering "Cheating Cheaters") for the C. K. Y. Film Corporation to be distributed through Select Pictures Corporation.

There the matter stands as we go to press.

Corbett Itching to Stage a Real Screen Fist Fight

Chicago, January 3.

JAMES J. CORBETT, ex-champion heavyweight of the world and author of the lives of all the champions of the squared arena, passed through Chicago Monday, December 30, on his way to Universal City, where he will be busy for the next twenty weeks in playing hero roles before the camera. He was accompanied by his wife, who never fails to be near him in all his tours.

Mr. Corbett is itching to appear in a thorough mix-up, free-for-all fight in films, and he wants his director to bring on as many hard-nut huskies as he can muster, in order that he may show how fistic science can overcome mere brute force.

It is understood that Universal will give Mr. Corbett his heart' desire, so that picture fans have something specially sensational in store.

De Mille Grabs Selwyn Stage Plot for Screen

WITH Edgar Selwyn, whom he "kidnapped" while in New York, as he expressed it, Cecil B. De Mille, director general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is back in Los Angeles after a brief but busy trip to the metropolis. With him also was William C. De Mille, his brother, who accompanied him to New York to work on a scenario.

"While in the big city," explained Mr. De Mille, "Mr. Selwyn told me the plot of a play he was writing for the stage and I told him frankly that it was not for the stage but for my next Artcraft picture. Finally he agreed with me and we all three started westward, working on the film adaptation while en route.

"I will start work on the new picture shortly," said Mr. De Mille. "Mr. Selwyn's work thereon does not mean that he has severed connections with his other interests, but simply that he has written a wonderful story which I am anxious to produce.

"As to picture conditions in general my eyes were opened by this trip East. In my five years of producing activities I have never found conditions more satisfactory, nor indicative of a more brilliant future for the industry in its entirety."

Mr. De Mille put the quietus to certain rumors that have been circulated in the West to the effect that he and Jesse L. Lasky would leave the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"The story was made out of whole cloth," declared the director general. "Our relations with the other executive heads have always been most pleasant and will continue if my vision of the future is clear. Any statement that either Mr. Lasky, my brother or myself is leaving the organization may be branded as absolutely false."

He stated in addition that while he was East the photoplay rights to two big stage successes were purchased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which he will produce for Artcraft after Mr. Selwyn's story is filmed. He is highly enthusiastic over the latter and believes the plot will have an instantaneous appeal. He promises more details later.

Kansas Exhibitors Use Mandamus in Flu Fight

THERE were a few towns in southern Kansas that had moving picture shows almost continuously during the influenza epidemic—though the local boards of health had tried to close them. These were largely towns where the local exhibitors had the nerve to use the means of mandamus proceedings to force the closing of other places of business if they were to close. "The application of a closing rule exclusively against theatres was so plainly discrimination that any court [even a justice of the peace] could issue mandamus to a board of health to compel it to close all places of business if one class of business were closed," said a film man who helped on several occasions to secure reopening of moving picture theatres.

"Some exhibitors hesitated to use this means, fearing a reflex detriment to themselves. But experience showed that when a business man acted to protect himself from suffering while others went free, the public appreciated his position. The situation was all in favor of the exhibitors. They were ready to comply with a closing order if such an order were necessary—but they maintained that if closing their places was necessary, it was certainly even more vital that stores should be closed, too, where there was less opportunity to regulate the crowds, and where people got into closer contact for longer periods than at a theatre. I don't believe a single exhibitor has lost prestige in his community because he sought mandamus to close stores in case his place was closed."

War Over, Stop Swearing, Says Kansas Censor Body

THE Kansas board of review of motion pictures indorses the suggestion coming now from many sources that profanity be taboo, since the war is over.

"We allowed many phrases to go through, while the war was on, that would have been quickly eliminated under ordinary circumstances," said Mrs. B. L. Short, a member of the board. "But we feel that the line should be drawn somewhat more strictly now. There is not the same necessity for keeping strung up to a high pitch of emotion with reference to the war and foreign and domestic affairs.

"Preachers who have been using strong language in the pulpit probably will have to tone down their expressions now. And the moving pictures will also respond to this different attitude by the toning down of the language in the titles."

Norma Talmadge Company Buys Additional Building

THE Norma Talmadge Film Corporation has just purchased the six-story red brick building at 324 East Forty-eighth street, adjoining the Norma Talmadge studios at 318 East Forty-eighth street. Work will shortly be started to convert this flat-house building into a new wing of the studios. When the renovations are completed the Norma Talmadge studios will have a frontage of 125 feet, which means that the Select star is to own the largest of any of the downtown motion picture studios in New York. This purchase, with the large expenses which must necessarily ensue in making the alterations, putting in additional fixtures, apparatus, etc., is another move on Joseph M. Schenck's part in accordance with his policy to give Miss Talmadge even bigger pictures and better productions than ever.

When the new wing is completed it is planned to transfer the offices to that section, so that the executive offices, director's rooms, scenario and title writers' press department, and stenographers' quarters will all be conveniently located within the same building.

Carpenters and painters are now at work in the old building.

Take Off Restrictions on Film for France and Italy

OF interest to exporters doing business with France and Italy is the announcement of the War Trade Board to the effect that applications for licenses to export to these countries will no longer be referred to the High Commissions of those countries, as has previously been required. A few days ago the requirement that individual applications to export to Great Britain be referred to the British War Mission was also removed.

In making this announcement the War Trade Board states that so many trade restrictions have been lifted since the signing of the armistice that the conservation list is now extremely small and it is possible to relieve exporters of certain procedure formerly necessary.

A warning is being given by the War Trade Board, however, that exporters should acquaint themselves thoroughly with the import requirements of the country of destination before making any shipments. This is declared to be essential for the reason that certain of the regulations which were in force prior to the signing of the armistice are still in full force in effect. Violations of some of the regulations will result in the seizure of such shipments, and it is to avoid this that exporters should use care in learning where they stand before sending their property to Europe.

Affliction Befalls Joseph Coufal.

The plague of influenza has stricken the family of Joseph Coufal with relentlessness. Mrs. Coufal is dead and Mr. Coufal is hovering on the brink as we go to press. The realization that affliction has so suddenly stricken the Coufal family will be a shock to the hundreds who have become staunch friends of the man who established the Standard Slide Corporation. On Saturday evening, December 28, the amalgamated corporation, that now embodies the Novelty Slide Company with other "slide" firms, gave a delightful party at the Cafe Boulevard.

Mr. Coufal went to his home in Forest Hills, Long Island, that night in the best of health, so far as outward appearances counted. Midnight came, New Year's night, and Mr. and Mrs. Coufal were stricken with influenza. Tuesday, January 7, Mrs. Coufal died, and Mr. Coufal lies now between life and death. There is a babe, born only a few months ago, and a daughter twelve years of age surviving.

Charity Gains by Sunday Shows.

In a report submitted January 6 to Director of Public Safety Brennan for Newark, N. J., by Lieutenant McConnell, amusement supervisor, it was found that charitable institutions in that city had benefited to the extent of $64,800.21. This amount represented 50 per cent. of the receipts of all Sunday performances during the past year.

Notwithstanding the fact that the theatres were closed several weeks during the influenza epidemic, the amount turned over to charity in 1918 contrasted favorably with that of the preceding year when $61,200 was given to charity. The money has been distributed among the hospitals, day nurseries and orphanages of the city, with a minor share going to churches.

FIRST NATIONAL DIRECTORS CONVENE

After Executive Session in Los Angeles They Refuse to Comment on the Proceedings—Denial Made Here of Coming Consolidation with Goldwyn or Paramount

[Special to The Moving Picture World.]

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 7.

FOURTEEN members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit arrived here on January 6 for an important meeting and business conference. Plans for the new year and an addition of other big stars to the organization are being considered.

The Board of Directors, composed of Robert Lieber, Indianapolis; H. O. Schwalbe, Philadelphia; E. H. Hulsey, Dallas; Walter Hayes, New York; Aaron Jones, Chicago; Claude Jenson, Seattle, and T. L. Tally, in secret executive session six hours at the Alexandria Hotel today, refused to give out results of the meeting for the public.

Other meetings will be held later in the week, of which announcement will be made. Members other than the directors attending the conference are J. D. Williams, New York; A. H. Blank, Des Moines; E. B. Richards, New Orleans; Fred Dahnken, San Francisco; John H. Kunsky, Detroit; Bert Esher, Chicago, and David Howells, foreign representative.

There are rumors that the subject of the admission of Douglas Fairbanks to the ranks of First National contributors is being considered by the directors.

GIEBLER.

MEETING AN IMPORTANT ONE.

PLANS pending for future activities of First National Exhibitors Circuit have resulted in the calling of an extraordinary session of the Board of Directors, to be held the latter part of this week at the Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

Los Angeles was selected as the place of meeting in compliment to the Pacific Coast directors of the Circuit. At the last regular meeting in 1918 the board promised T. L. Tally, the Circuit's franchise holder in Los Angeles, that the next meeting of the directors, whether it was a regular or a special session, would be held in that city.

In addition to action on matters which resulted in the decision to hold a special meeting, the directors will prepare their annual report in readiness for the meeting of First National stockholders, which will be held in March.

It was admitted by several of the directors, before they started for the West Coast, that one purpose of the special meeting was to decide several important propositions which have been submitted to the Circuit, involving a considerable extension of its scope in distributing and exhibiting special feature attractions. The directors declined to say, in advance of the meeting, exactly what these propositions were.

Deny Rumors of Consolidation.

The only definite denial that was made of rumors concerning the nature of the plans to be brought before the Board related to the report that First National would consider the alleged offers of a consolidation with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation or Paramount-Artcraft. It has been hinted for several weeks that an amalgamation of Paramount or Goldwyn exchanges with those of First National franchise holders was being contemplated by the three firms. This was emphatically denied by exhibitor officials of the Circuit.

"A consolidation of exchanges would not properly be within the province of the Board of Directors to decide or discuss," said a member of the Board. "The First National exchanges are independently owned by the franchise holder. First National is not a distributing concern. It is an organization of prominent exhibitors, united for the purpose of buying productions for exhibition in their own theatres and for the creation of an open market booking policy for all exhibitors."

First National Not a Producer.

The corporate charter of the Circuit provides that its activities shall be restricted solely and exclusively to the exhibition and rental of motion pictures. This is pointed out as an answer to the reports that First National would enter the producing field as a supplement to the productions of Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Anita Stewart, Jack Pickford and Norma Talmadge.

"There have been repeated rumors," said one of the exhibitor officials of the Circuit, "to the effect that First National was producing pictures, or about to produce them. Our organization cannot produce pictures, nor can it have any interest in a producing company. When the Circuit was formed we took particular pains to have our charter so read that the organization would be confined entirely to its two functions of distribution and exhibition. And, in fact, distribution is incidental and is more properly the responsibility of the individual franchise holders, who are exchange owners by necessity rather than desire. We control and operate theatres and we wanted big feature productions under contract to our houses without the liability of losing them through unfair rental practices and without the necessity of 'indemnity contracts' in addition to the top prices for those we want."

Record of Year's Growth.

The report which the Board of Directors will prepare for the annual meeting of stockholders will record a progress, within the last year, which it is believed has been without parallel in motion picture history for phenomenal growth and shortness of time.

During the twelve months just ended the Circuit had developed from what was looked upon as an experiment and a speculation into one of the foremost concerns in the industry. The contract with Charlie Chaplin for eight comedies at what was characterized generally in the trade as "an extravagant and ridiculous price" was the first definite step forward which attracted universal attention. Conservatism and a preference for facts to substantiate the practicability of First National's policy resulted in a wait of several months before another move of importance was made.

During this interval the directors and stockholders were analyzing and studying the effect of the open market booking methods applied to "A Dog's Life," the first of the Chaplin comedies released through the Circuit. The interval provided some astounding figures, which bore out the claims of Circuit officials that quality productions, released and rented as independent attractions, could earn gross receipts which would justify their pioneering methods and the waiving of all precedents.

Makes a Second Contract with Mayer.

Then came the contract with Louis B. Mayer, of Boston, who is producing the Anita Stewart special feature for First National. The results, to date, from "Shoulder Arms," Chaplin's second Circuit release, and on "Virtuous Wives," first of the Anita Stewart specials, gives added emphasis to the basic soundness of the independent booking policy.

With these facts as a sufficient assurance of the feasibility of its plans, First National then entered into an agreement with Mary Pickford for the exhibition of her pictures after the termination of her contract with Paramount Pictures Corporation. The next step was a similar contract with Jack Pickford, and the most recent activity was the arrangement which will give to exhibitor members of the Circuit exhibition rights to the Norma Talmadge productions when her present releasing arrangement expires.

There is a special significance in the statement of one of the directors of the organization that the extraordinary session of the Board in Los Angeles this week is for the purpose of taking up "very important matters which require immediate decision and which have been pending for several weeks."

Western Meeting Called Suddenly.

In the absence of J. D. Williams and Harry Schwalbe, manager and secretary-treasurer, respectively, the general office of the Circuit is without any positive information of the exact nature of the things which necessitated the West Coast session, but it was admitted that the meeting was called suddenly and as the result of developments within the last few weeks of plans formulated by the executive offices for further solidifying production sources.

The directors who will meet in Los Angeles this week are Robert Lieber, of Indianapolis, president of the Circuit; Harry Schwalbe, of the Stanley Mastbaum Corporation of Philadelphia, who is secretary-treasurer; J. D. Williams, Circuit manager; E. H. Hulsey, of Dallas, Texas; Aaron J. Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Chicago; J. G. Von Herberg, of Jensen & Von Herberg, Seattle, Portland and Butte; T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles, and Walter Hayes of the Mitchell M. Mark Theatres Corporation, New York.

Accompanying Mr. Williams on his trip from New York to Los Angeles were David P. Howells, whose export firm has the foreign rights to all First National attractions with the exception of the Chaplin comedies, and Ralph H. Clark, manager of the New York exchange of the Circuit.

It is probable, in view of Mr. Howell's presence in Los Angeles during the meeting of the Board of Directors, that matters pertaining to the sale and exhibition of Circuit attractions abroad will be taken up by the members.

Mr. Clark, it is understood, has gone to San Francisco to confer with Mr. Dahnken, of the firm of Turner & Dahnken, which has an interest in the New York State franchise for First National releases.

"SELZNICK PICTURES" AGAIN IN FIELD

Myron, Son of Lewis J., Enters Producing Market with Olive Thomas the First Star of His String

THE name of "Selznick" in association with the production and distribution of motion pictures is to forthwith return to conspicuousness in the film business. Myron Selznick, son of Lewis J., has organized the Selznick Picture Corporation and will begin at once the production of pictures, with Olive Thomas as the first star in a promised "string" of screen notables.

A little more than a year ago the name "Selznick" disappeared from billboard, electric signs, lithographing and public advertising of all sorts. The disappearance at that time of the Selznick name seems to have been an incident in the formation of Select Pictures Corporation, of which Lewis J. has been president from the first. Now Myron Selznick proposes to restore the family name to conspicuousness in the film trade and in film publicity generally.

Myron Selznick lately reached his majority, and the formation of the Selznick Picture Corporation is his way of "celebrating." The young man has been serving the necessary apprenticeship in his father's employ, and thus gets a "running start" on many ambitious young men in the film game who were not so discreet in selecting a father who has delved deeply into all branches of the business Myron Selznick is now venturing into "on his own."

Olive Thomas comes from the Triangle program to be created as the first Myron Selznick star. Miss Thomas will be presented in a series of screen productions "made to measure" for her, with Charles Giblyn general director of Selznick pictures. Other stars of present prominence will be added to the Selznick organization from time to time as Myron's plans develop. Offices will be established at 501 Fifth avenue, where the executive work will proceed. Randolph Bartlett, prominently associated in film publicity and general screen exploitation, will be one of the principal executives.

Studio arrangements have not been disclosed. For the past several months Myron Selznick has been studio manager of the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation, and there made a close study of production and studio conditions. The knowledge thus gained will be used to an advantage in forwarding his new interests. Further announcements of the Selznick plans may be expected to be soon forthcoming.

Madame Camilla Dalberg

As she appeared in "The Great Lover," as the Italian opera singer, "Bianca." After this year's season at the Forty-eighth Street Theatre she returned to the silent drama as the Spanish grand dame in a Goldwyn picture, in support of Geraldine Farrar, and at present taking part in one of Mr. Shomer's forthcoming productions.

Not Always Do Big Authors Do Big Work, Says Laemmle

ANSWERING a recent criticism of film producers by a New York photoplay editor, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, informed the commentator that after many years of experience and study he had found that the best known and most expensive authors did not always provide the best stories for screen plays.

Replying to the critic's statement that "if producers would pay enough for stories they would be able to get the best writers to give them more manuscripts," Mr. Laemmle had the following to say:

"Most assuredly you know whereof you write, but the big point of it is that the mere spending of large sums of money does not necessarily insure good stories. Universal is scouring the world for good stories all of the time. We have asked the very best authors to write especially for the screen. We have indicated our complete willingness to pay the price, but the results have not always been good.

"Our greatest trouble lies not in being asked too much money by good authors for good stories, but rather in being asked too much money for mediocre stories. The mere fact that we might tack a big author's name to a mediocre story does not interest us at all; in fact, you as an experienced critic would be first to tear to pieces some of the stories that have been submitted to us at high prices just because they bore the name of a famous writer.

Story Is What Counts.

"For a long time we have attempted to concentrate on the story first of all. We have not cared where the stories came from, whether from known or unknown writers. In fact, some of the best have come from writers we never heard of. We held fast to the policy that 'the play's the thing' and we were laughed at for our pains.

"In theory I agree heartily with you, but in practice here is what happens: Let one company produce a rattling good story without a star and let a second company produce a poor story with a big star and ninety out of a hundred critics will dismiss the first one with clever contempt and dwell for half a column or so on the picture containing the star, overlooking the poor quality of the story and helping the star to twinkle.

"As far as price is concerned I do not believe Mr. Griffith had to pay a fortune for 'The Birth of a Nation' and I am sure we did not for 'The Heart of Humanity,' yet I believe these are two of the best, if not the two very best, stories that were ever put on the screen.

"The Universal company will continue to seek good stories and will pay the price for them because we judge from our weekly reports that the moving picture fans themselves are just a little bit ahead of the critics as far as stories and stars and their relative values are concerned. We used to be stingy in the matter of paying real money for good stories, but heaven knows we got over that long ago."

RUFFNER'S TALK STIRS UP ECHOES

Publicity Men Take Exception to Impression That Address Was Directed Against Them, Saying Fault of Inadequate Service Is Mostly on Exchangemen

NOTHING recently published has aroused more comment in production circles than the report of the frank talk of Ralph Ruffner to the members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at a recent luncheon. It seems to be the general belief that the talk was timely and of real service in pointing out errors in systems, but there is also a feeling that perhaps the blame was laid too directly at the doors of the publicity men instead of being placed where much of it more properly belonged—on the desks of the exchange managers. Two recent chats with leading press men, who do not desire to be quoted, give light on this angle.

"I think that Ruffner's talk was one of the best things that ever happened in the A. M. P. A.," said the first of these. "I know that I came right back to the office from that luncheon, and had a long conference with the heads of the different departments of publicity. My company was not among those cited by Mr. Ruffner, because we do little or no business with the Rialto, but the things he said were largely of general application, and where the coat fitted we put it on, though it was not intended for our shoulders.

Thinks Members Shouldn't Feel Aggrieved.

"I believe that some of the members of the A. M. P. A. are inclined to feel aggrieved, but I do not see why they should be. To be intolerant of criticism from any intelligent source is to be beyond the hope of improvement. Any time I become so perfect, to my own thinking, that there is no longer any room for improvement I want to be led out and shot, for I shall then be useless to myself and to my employer. I learned a lot from that talk and I am free to confess that some of the pointers are needed.

"On the other hand, I do not believe that the proper suggestion was conveyed by the talk as published. To begin with, Mr. Ruffner opened his chat by remarking that he spoke for a comparatively small percentage of exhibitors, since some of the kicks he was about to make applied largely to the first run men only. These points covered delay in getting out press books in time to permit the first run man to plan his campaign, the non-delivery of cuts and other aids sufficiently far in advance of showing, and the inability of the first run man to correct these troubles through appeal to the head offices.

Ruffner Was Complaining of Exchanges.

"It would seem, too, that Mr. Ruffner was not correctly reported at times. He did not say that a certain company gave him only one small hard rubber cut, but he wanted to know why such a thing should have been sent him. I understand that inquiry developed the fact that a full set of material for the release in question was sent him, including the complained-of cut, and I don't blame a man for kicking when he is asked to make a stereotype from a rubber cut that will not stand up on the steam table.

"And this leads directly to the basic trouble. Nine-tenths of the faults Mr. Ruffner speaks of were due to the exchanges and not to the general press bureaus; because he was talking to the press men it was assumed that his complaints were directed against them and not against general conditions. He did not say that he could not get the required aid from the home offices. He said he did not have time to do so when the exchange fell down. He did mention many specific instances in which the home offices were at fault, and others as well as those mentioned have been able to make minor changes in the preparation of material, in order to meet what is the real demand, but what he was largely driving at was that the exchanges did not and would not cooperate with the home offices in the distribution of the publicity aids sent him. I think it only fair to the association to make this fact clear."

The second speaker dealt largely with this single item of the exchanges. Like the first, he was an innocent bystander at the luncheon, for his service was not complained of and he has no personal bias, but he spoke in no uncertain manner of the lack of co-operation of the exchanges with the men who plan publicity. He is a man whose firm is noted among the exhibitors as supplying about the most practical set of helps of any production company, and his efforts have very materially helped to build up a clientele for his company's product.

Giving One Specific Instance.

"Nine times out of ten," he said, "the exchange is at fault rather than the home office, and usually the tenth time same thing holds good. Only the other day I got a hurry call for an exhibitor who complained that he could get nothing whatever from his exchange. I rushed material to him by special delivery, and then I looked up the exchange. The surprising fact was developed that the exchange was taking absolutely nothing in the way of exhibitor aids.

"A little while later the manager of this exchange came over to consult with the heads, and I took up this matter with him. 'That's all wrong,' he asserted. 'The fellow could have had all he wanted had he asked for it.' I told him flatly that he was a damned liar, not to put too fine a point on it, and proved that he had not ordered a single cut or lithograph. Before he left the office he was required to sign an order for a sufficient supply and was told that he would be expected to put them out. He is doing so.

"Here's another and even more flagrant case. An exchange slightly more remote is owned by the company. I went over there one day on some other business and looking over the place I came upon a fairly large sized room almost completely filled with press material in the original packages. The bundles had never even been opened. I went to the manager with a protest.

Said Customers Didn't Want Stuff.

"His defense was the common one. He didn't need that stuff. He could sell film to his friends on his say-so. He did not need to offer them advertising aids. He was selling good accounts and that was the answer. They didn't want to bother with cuts and things.

"There was no use arguing with a man like that. I simply saw to it that a man who knew the value of exhibitor aids was put in charge of that exchange and his increased sales tell their own story."

"Then, if sales are made by the use of exihibitor aids," he was asked, "why is it that the heads of the production companies do not exercise more care in seeing that the aids supplied are the proper sort and are properly distributed to the exhibitors?"

"Because most of the heads of the production companies made their first sales on their own personalities, just as exchange managers are now doing. They, like the exchange men, sold to their friends. They cannot answer the argument when it is now offered.

"They realize now that the exhibitor aids sell film through permitting the exhibitor to sell to the public, but they cannot argue with the exchange managers, and they feel that if the accounts keep up or increase they should let well enough alone and not harry the managers with a demand that the accessories be rushed. They realize that the condition is bad, but they are unable to reach a solution of the problem."

Putting It Up to the Bosses.

And there the matter stands. On the main points of the Ruffner complaints the publicity men "pass the buck" two ways—to the exchanges and to their bosses, and their action is not without logic. They cannot make exchange managers handle the material. They cannot induce their employers to force the exchange men to make proper distribution. They can only get out the material and see that it gets to the exchanges. If the cuts and paper go to the junk man instead of the exhibitors; if the old accounts are lost and new ones are not gained because of a lack of aids, they are helpless. They can only do the best they can and hope for a change of heart both ways from the press department. Meanwhile the exhibitor is handicapped and even ruined. It is safe to say that if the exchanges persuaded all exhibitors to use the aids and these aids were always of the proper sort, the volume of business throughout the country would be increased not less than 50 per cent. with no material increase in expenditure.

It seems to be up to the bosses and the exchanges.

PORTER LOOKS FOR PROSPERITY WAVE

General Manager of Simplex Finds Outlook for Industry Bright in Spite of Some Depression

ACCORDING to E. M. Porter, general manager of the Simplex Company, who has just returned to New York from a tour of observation in the East and Middle West, the outlook for the motion picture industry is unusually bright, notwithstanding indications of present business stagnation in certain parts of the country.

Mr. Porter's predictions regarding the coming prosperity wave are based on a thorough study of conditions in the machine end of the business. He canvassed the situation in detail with the distributors who dispose of Simplex products, men who are known as acute observers of conditions in their particular territories. In some instances, these distributors were inclined to be pessimistic as regards their business today, but even they had to admit the ultimate upward tendency of business now in sight in their own localities.

His conclusions from the interviews with all of these men are that an era of unprecedented prosperity in the film business is not far off. The indications in accessory and supply quarters, he believes, point to a favorable reaction of general business on the picture industry as a whole.

Looks for Steady, Normal Growth.

"It is pretty safe to say," declares Mr. Porter, "that a long period of prosperous conditions will begin after the first of the year. It will be a different prosperity from what we have just passed through. There will be no inflation of values—but a healthy, steady, normal growth.

"With the removal of building restrictions by the War Industries Board, there are already signs of theatre construction which indicate that the amusement interests throughout the country intend rapidly to push forward plans to meet the large demand for photoplay entertainment.

"This amusement requirement will undoubtedly keep pace with the good times before us in the reconstruction period ahead. It is safe to predict that these favorable conditions will last for the next two or three years before there is any sign of business depression, which in the past has followed every period of reconstruction.

"No doubt the favorable effects of general business on the industry will, in the meantime, result in the maintenance of comparatively high admission prices. This will not require any attempted concerted effort on the part of exhibitors to raise them to a higher level, but will follow as a natural consequence, when the average theatregoer feels the effect of changed financial conditions. This will be due to the fact that the artificial barriers of prosperity, which in the last year have kept the flow of 'extra money' to only a few limited channels, will be removed.

Looks for Lower Living Cost.

With a lowering of the abnormal high cost of living to reasonable planes, the very large percentage of the public which for the past few months has been obliged to economize on luxuries, including amusements, in order to meet the prices demanded for necessities, will be able to see its way clear to a larger expenditure of its income for stage and photoplay entertainment.

"To be sure, there was a severe setback due to the influenza epidemic, but that was only a temporary retarding factor.

"We can confidently look forward to the industry being on a firmer basis than ever before, although the evidence of this prosperity may show itself in a different form. Regardless of the increase in theatre building activity, there probably will not be so many theatres as in the era of the industry's high peak development at the beginning of the war, but the quality average of the new theatres and the character of the entertainment shown therein will be infinitely greater.

"The distributors and dealers with whom I have discussed the matter, take this view. It is based, among other things, on the stimulated interest in our new devices indicated by successful exhibitors who are now forming their plans for this coming era of motion picture prosperity; and the new army of showmen who, also seeing the possibilities for a greater expansion of this particular amusement field, are already preparing to place projector orders for many of the photoplay theatres which have not yet got beyond the architects' embryo blue-print stage."

Nehls Again Off for Coast to Inspect American Plant

RICHARD R. NEHLS, general manager of the American Film Company, Inc., left his executive office at 6227 Broadway, Chicago, on December 26 to make another pilgrimage to the West Coast studios at Santa Barbara. Mr. Nehls has gone to make a thorough inspection of the plant and its equipment, with the idea of arranging for still further improvement in the big feature productions that are being made at the California studio.

As exhibitors and the public already know, all of the recent American "Flying A" Pictures have been of a calibre above that of a year or more ago. In stories, direction, stage settings and technical perfection many improvements are noticeable. It is the expectation of Mr. Nehls to effect still further improvements, to the end that the future releases of the American may be still another notch higher.

This makes the second trip General Manager Nehls has made to the West Coast within a period of a few weeks, his first trip having been a rather hurried one due to the fact that it was necessary for him to be in Chicago before Mr. Hutchinson, president of the American, left for Europe on December 21.

Subscribers to The World are, in a vast majority, located in small towns and communities where film salesmen never penetrate. The World takes its aids to showmanship and advertising helps to the very theatremen who need them most. The "big time" manager has every advantage; but the "small time" showman finds in The World his best friend and counsellor.

SHOWMANSHIP-PLUS BEHIND DREWS

A. J. Van Buren, President of V. B. K. Film Corporation, Begins Producing Comedies with Henry and Polly, Bringing Fine Equipment to Sense What Public Wants

By Walter K. Hill

WITH a good pair of field glasses Amedee J. Van Buren could have sat at his desk in the Candler Building and picked out from beyond the maze of trees that distinguished Central Park from the roof of houses and towering commercial buildings the spot in Harlem where he first interested himself in moving pictures. Then he could have switched the binoculars until they pointed a little west of north and found the junction of Riverside Drive and West 110th street where he built the Moorish Gardens, some ten years ago, and made his first real plunge into the game.

While he looked toward the spot where he piled up many thousands of dollars as manager of one of the finest airdomes ever built he could lower the glasses and look down into the Van-Kelton Stadium, at Eighth avenue and West Fifty-seventh street, and watch the preparations that are being made to turn the skating public loose on a field of ice to enjoy themselves where, in summer, most of the same public see moving pictures or disport themselves on the tennis courts.

"When the owner of a roomy piece of property on upper Lexington avenue approached me," said Mr. Van Buren in telling of his entry into the exhibition business, "he wanted me to open an airdome. At that time pictures were a matter of hearsay with me. I was busy as I could be in furthering the interests of the billposting business that has later been merged into the Van Buren-New York Billposting Corporation. I was vice-president of the Van Buren company and vacant lots looked better to me as a prospect for a billboard than as the site of an airdome.

"Eventually, however, I leased the ground and sub-let the location to a firm that made nearly seven thousand dollars out of the airdome they constructed—'cleaning up,' as showmen say—in the very first year of occupancy." "You may imagine," continued Mr. Van Buren, "that I forthwith began to be interested in another outdoor business opportunity in addition to billposting."

Put Pictures in Moorish Gardens.

The realty representative of Mrs. Russell Sage, a personal friend of Mr. Van Buren, had also heard something about airdomes, and when he intimated to Mr. Van Buren that a fine location for a summer show was open on a section of the Sage estate at Riverside Drive and 110th street the vice-president of the billposting company was ready to listen. Moorish Gardens resulted from Mr. Van Buren's talk with the man who handles Mrs. Sage's real estate.

"We put Mutual pictures on Broadway at the Moorish Gardens," said Mr. Van Buren, as he looked north from his office window twenty-two stories above Times Square. "If I told you how many thousand dollars we made there the first summer you would wonder why I stuck to the billposting business," said Mr. Van Buren.

Then as he looked out upon the housetops and let his gaze wander over the sun-bathed vista of central Manhatten—for the weather man has been "kidding" January into thinking it is October—Mr. Van Buren proceeded to tell some interesting things about what he has been doing (besides billposting) in the past few years. He told of a line of business very few have given thought to—the equiping and renting of tennis courts.

Getting and Keeping Close to Public.

You've seen those places scattered around town (generally along the route of the 'busses) where tired business men go to rest up, after office hours? Well, most of 'em have been located, fenced in, smoothed down, painted up and christened some fancy name by Mr. Van Buren and his business associates. Billposting seems to have fixed the out-of-door habit in the Van Buren scheme of public amusement—tennis and pictures in summer; ice skating in winter, and billposting the year 'round.

"For more than ten years," said Mr. Van Buren as he swung his chair around and turned his back upon the "Tenderloin" with apparent reluctance, "for more than ten years I've been close to the public. Billposting had brought me into personal acquaintance with theatrical men of all stratas. When I found myself in the exhibition business it seemed only natural that I should be there—and being there I centered my attention on the attitude of the public toward pictures. In our airdomes I tried out the public mind by every test imaginable. In all these years I have tried honestly to learn from the public; to learn what was wanted, and how best to please the people who bought tickets for our entertainments."

Charlie Chaplin cut up some of his earlier didoes on the Moorish Gardens' screen, according to Mr. Van Buren, and even an experiment with so great a favorite as Chaplin taught the airdome-billposting impresario something. "Repeatedly we tried by 'slides,'" said Mr. Van Buren, "to test the wishes of an audience. We asked, on the screen, if the people would like to see a Chaplin and listened to the applause. Then we asked if they wanted to see some favorite leading man or female star—and listened to the applause. Every experiment was more convincing than any personal opinion—the public may not always be depended upon to be unanimous in their desire for any specific type of picture.

"Of later years we have been in touch with a different class of screen 'fans' at the Van-Kelton Stadium," continued Mr. Van Buren, "for upper Eighth avenue and upper Riverside Drive are somewhat different neighborhoods. But wherever they come from my years of study and interest in satisfying the public taste has proved to me that human nature is human nature wherever you may assemble a crowd. And the picture that appeals to human nature, in its most human and natural development, is the picture that gets money into the box-office and sends an audience away to do mouth-to-mouth advertising for the man who has pleased their human instincts."

People's Laugh Music to Showman.

"And the overpowering instinct among humans who go to picture shows is the desire to laugh—to laugh at comedy that appeals to human nature because its motive springs from human nature. Summer after summer I've watched probably half a million people every season as they gazed at 'heart interest' screen dramas or laughed at comedy films—and when a great crowd is laughing a showman feels as though he was in a pretty nice kind of business.

"I've studied the 'laughers' who get their fun out of films. When a victim gets a shock from a seltzer bottle there is a guffaw, in which only a part of a crowd will join. But when Polly gets Henry into a tight corner in a Drew comedy those who laugh at a shot of seltzer are joined in a hearty and wholesome laugh by those who can't see the joke of a slap-stick. The individual human can always see the point when a husband is trying to 'white lie' himself out of responsibility for a powder-puff his wife has found in his possession."

"Speaking of Drew comedies"—

Brings Drews Back to Screen.

The billposting-airdome-skating rink-tennis court Van Buren moved out of the interview as the man who is staging the two-reel come-back of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew began "speaking of Drew comedies." Amdee J. Van Buren, experienced showman and producer of the new-era Drew comedies, fixed his gaze upon a photograph of Polly and Henry that rested in a fancy frame atop the Van Buren desk.

"The screen stole the Drews from the stage and the stage stole them back again," said Producer Van Buren. "Knowing almost as much about what the public wants as the public knows itself I decided that the public wanted comedies; good comedies; human nature comedies and comedies with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew playing them under Mrs. Drew's direction. And I decided to bring them back to the screen, if I couldn't entirely steal them away from the stage."

Right here it is well enough to interject the reminder to exhibitors that when the Drews finished off their Metro contract they went at once upon the stage as stars of "Keep Her Smiling," a comedy that started in Broadway, ran until other bookings forced it on to the road and into the larger cities on week stands, where it is still touring. The Drews could not give up the stage—so the business proposition Mr. Van Buren made to them has been carried on to the road, where between nightly performances and the usual matinees Drew comedies are being made under the formula Mr. Van Buren worked out with Mrs. Drew and her husband.

Four Weeks to Each Comedy.

"When I asked the Drews how long it would take, without needless hurry, to made a two-reel comedy they told me three weeks," said Mr. Van Buren, when the World man asked about the details of Henry and Polly's return to the screen in their new series. "I told them to take four weeks for perfectly good measure, and so it is that every four weeks, starting February 1, there will be a two-reel Drew marketed through Famous Players-Lasky channeeds. Just as we decided to take extra time in producing the comedies so will we go to extra expense in advertising them. By 'extra expense' I mean that we will spend more money in helping the exhibitor sell two-reel Drew comedies to their public than has ever been spent before in promoting comedies—and considerable more, too."

The first of the new order of "Drews" was pre-released for this week showing of "Romance and Ring" at the Rialto. This will be the February 1 release to be followed monthly by pictures ready and by comedies to be produced by the Drews with their traveling equipment of lights, comeras and other essentials. Mr. and Mrs. Drew detoured on their way from Baltimore to Buffalo especially to make a "personal appearance" as an extra send-off for the new order of things at the Rialto.

Exhibitor Producing for Exhibitors.

"I'm an exhibitor producing for exhibitors," said Mr. Van Buren as he kept the door from slamming when the World man left his office. "The Drews and I are going to produce human nature comedies—'Drew comedies'—the kind that pick clean littlc frailties out of human life, as only Mrs. Drew can pic'k them, and give a comedy reflection that has the strongest of all appeals—human nature that laughs at itself and is more human because it has laughed."

Dropping down the twenty-two stories of the Candler Building with Jesse J. Goldburg as an elevator companion the World man remarked:

"Not every one who produces pictures has had the experience in getting a line on the public that comes to a billposter, an airdome manager, a tennis court magnate and an ice-skating rinker?"

"I'll say so." said Jesse, contenting himself with expressive slang.

BRANHAM LEAVES MINNEAPOLIS STRAND

Resigns as Manager to Take Charge of Detroit's Majestic—Has Had Successful Career

WITH the departure of Charles Branham, manager of the Minneapolis Strand for the past fifteen months, the moving picture industry of the Northwest loses a most sensationally successful managerial genius.

After a career replete with achievements, Mr. Branham left Minneapolis, December 28, to take charge of the Majestic, a leading moving picture theatre of Detroit, boasting a thirty-five-piece orchestra, wonderful scenic equipment and a seating capacity of 2,000. Mr. Branham believes he is entering a larger field. His successor at the Minneapolis Strand has not yet been named.

After serving as city editor of the Duluth News-Tribune and later in the editorial department of the St. Paul Pioneer Press and Dispatch, Mr. Branham began his moving picture career in Charles Branham.

Minneapolis two and one-half years ago.

He first handled publicity and advertising for Saxe Brothers, then operating the Strand, until August 1, 1917, when he took the management of that theatre, playing to phenomenal business in the open market and competing against ten theatres owned by one corporation. He gained the reputation of being one of the cleverest "stunt artists" in the industry, because of his ingenious methods. His stunts were always "different."

In May, 1918, when Ruben & Finkelstein took over the Strand from Saxe Brothers, Branham, whose unusual ability they readily realized, was retained to continue the management of the house. He also managed the Ruben & Finkelstein's New Lyric, booked features for the New Garrick, and handled publicity and advertising for all three houses.

Set Pace for Others.

Branham's original methods in "putting a picture over" have made the Strand perhaps the most talked of moving picture theatre in the Northwest. He has set the pace for other managers and they have always been quic'k to follow in his footsteps.

The first big production exhibited at the Strand after Branham took over the management in August, 1917, was Geraldine Farrar in "Joan the Woman." In order to put this attraction over Mr. Branham secured the choir from St. Mark's Episcopal Church to sing special numbers during the showings. Of course, the picture, as a result of this novel idea, brought heavy receipts to the box office.

Mr. Branham always aimed at popular and appropriate music and attributes much of his success to that fact. For sixteen weeks he had the services of Henry Santry, a popular Minneapolis singer, many patrons coming repeatedly to hear him. Mr. Santry will be associated with Mr. Branham at the Majestic in Detroit, where he has sung publicly for two years.

Admits Redheads Free.

Mr. Branham started his 1918 fireworks in moving picture circles last spring when during the month of March he admitted all the redheads in town free to the showing of "Empty Pockets." Two weeks before the showing of this production he sent passes to every redheaded employe in two large downtown department stores. This started the ball rolling and as a result he packed the house.

When "Cleopatra" was appearing at the Metropolitan Opera House in January, 1918, at $1.50 top, Branham took advantage of the extensive and expensive publicity for that production by showing at the same time Theda Bara, recognized as the "Cleo of the movies," in "Rose of Blood." His house drew the big business, and all on one day's advertising.

"Tarzan of the Apes" made the Strand one of the most talked of theatres in this part of the country. "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," came along and broke the house record. It ran a week and was held over for three extra days. When this picture was shown the crowds attempting to enter the theatre blocked Seventh street from Nicollet to Hennepin avenues. Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms," shown more recently, was equally successful.

Mr. Branham is thirty-four years old, one of the most picturesque, forceful and genial figures in the moving picture game. He has a promising future and Detroit is indeed fortunate to get him.

MULLIGAN.

Pathe Pictures for President.

President Wilson will look at a lot of Pathe pictures on his return voyage on the George Washington, as the committee on entertainment of the George Washington has made a special request to that company for films to show the President during his voyage. The President has always been an ardent fan for the Pathe News, so he will be shown the four latest issues. He will also be given a chance to look at several of the latest Harold Lloyd comedies, including "Wanted, $5,000," and "She Loves Me Not." Two of the newest Pathe features which will be shown for the presidential party are Frank Keenan in "The Midnight Stage" and Baby Marie Osborne in "Dolly's Vacation."

OHIO MEN MEET NEW YORK PRODUCERS

Come to Metropolis to Learn if National Body Will Furnish Money to Aid in Sunday Fight

AT the Hotel Astor in New York on Tuesday afternoon, January 7, a meeting of the representatives of the Ohio State Screen League, an organization of Ohio exhibitors, and the representatives of the producers and distributors of the National Association, was called to hold a conference in regard to the Sunday opening campaign which is being made in Ohio. There were offers of aid for the Ohio men on the part of producers.

Fred Desberg, owner of the Alhambra and Mall theatres of Cleveland, president of the Screen League, and John W. Weinig, the league's attorney, were the league's representatives.

Although special notices were sent to all the producers and distributors only the following were present: E. J. Hudson of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit; Lee A. Ochs of the United Pictures Theatres Corporation; Lewis Innerarity of Pathe; Hiller & Wilk, a representative of W. L. Sherry, W. A. Brady, C. C. Pettijohn of the Mutual-Affiliated, C. G. Stewart of Rolf Productions, David Horsley, and a representative of the Hodkinson Company.

Mr. Desberg said it was stated by Mr. Brady at the Amalgamation convention held in Chicago in September last that the N. A. M. P. I. would share the cost of the campaign for Sunday opening in Ohio up to $12,500 with the exhibitors on a fifty-fifty basis. The exhibitors have already arranged for their part of the expense and had not heard until lately from the N. A. M. P. I. about its share of the amount mentioned. When they did hear from Fred H. Elliott, the secretary, in response to their many letters, they were informed that the latter had consulted Mr. Zukor, chairman of the N. A. M. P. I.'s executive board, and that owing to the withdrawal of the exhibitors from the N. A. M. P. I. and their decision to continue any further negotiations to affiliate with the national association these differences would make it impossible for the association to enter into the campaign on a fifty-fifty plan. Furthermore, Mr. Elliott's delay in replying to their communications, Mr. Desberg said, had caused them a serious setback in securing a petition of 60,000 names of citizens of Ohio indorsing a bill for Sunday opening which is to be presented to the legislature this winter.

A Hundred Ohio Towns Closed.

Mr. Weinig said there were about one hundred towns in Ohio now closed, many of which desired Sunday opening. In Cleveland theatres are open all day Sunday, in other places afternoons.

"Speaking as an individual," W. A. Brady said he thought the producers hesitated contributing on account of the exhibitors in previous campaigns not contributing one cent. It was all up to the producers. He would, however, make good his part of the promise and give $500 toward the Ohio campaign, providing all other producers would contribute accordingly or pro rata. He also advanced the opinion that until a responsible exhibitors' organization is established these difficulties and differences will occur. If Ohio requires $12,500, New York a like amount and Indiana the same and other states too, it would be impossible for the producers and distributors in the National Association to meet the demands. They didn't have the funds.

Indiana Will Stand on Its Own.

C. C. Pettijohn said that Indiana will fight its own battles on the Sunday question and was already prepared to do it. He would recommend contributions to the Ohio fund from the Mutual, Robertson-Cole and affiliated interests. At this point Mr. Brady made his exit.

Lee Ochs said he would recommend to the board of directors a contribution from the United Pictures. Continuing he stated that of pledges ninety per cent. are all "bunk." "You want cash, not pledges," he added. "You cannot expect any co-operation from the N. A. M. P. I. as long as the present secretary had to do with it. He is not in sympathy with exhibitors and there always will be some obstacle."

All the other producing concerns represented at the meeting agreed to recommend joining the Ohio campaign with funds and personal assistance.

Mr. Desburg in conclusion said that his purpose in calling the meeting, which had resulted in a "fluke," was to have a full understanding with the producers as to their attitude in the matter and find out just what they would do. Before he leaves New York he and Mr. Weinig will see every producer and distributor and go back to Ohio with something definite to tell their fellow exhibitors.

are to be elected. Mark Gates, Clay Brehm, A. F. Kinzeler, Elmer Rauh and Val Rayburg are on a committee to make new bylaws and it is thought that their plan will be presented to the Ohio organization some time early in January.

Brooklyn Exhibitors Nominate.

The Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn and Long Island, known officially as Branch No. 3 of the New York State League, held a meeting for the nomination of officers at midnight on Saturday, January 4. The candidates named are:

For president, John Manheimer, Jacob Grossman and William Brandt; first vice-president, Charles Cranides and Otto Lederer; treasurer, Harry Shapiro; secretary, Samuel Berman and Julius Celler; sergeant at arms, William Bigall.

A goodly number of members were present. There was a general discussion of matters that may be presented to the legislators this session. A lively election is expected.

MUTUAL PITTSBURGH EXCHANGE BURNED

Three Employes Seriously Hurt, Two Perhaps Fatally—Nine Others Also Are in Hospital

LESS than six hours after the Pittsburgh exchange of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation on the third floor of the building at 804 Penn avenue had been wiped out by fire, on January 7, a new exchange was in operation at 121 Fourth avenue.

With every employe of the exchange except the branch manager in the hospital, every foot of film in the vaults burned and the records of the branch destroyed, a new office was outfitted in the early evening and new film began pouring in from Buffalo and Philadelphia.

At 11 o'clock the morning of the fire a lease had been signed for new Pittsburgh quarters so that when the exchange was wiped out new offices, fully equipped with vaults, were available immediately.

Posters and other advertising accessories were on their way to Pittsburgh with the film and at 11 o'clock Tuesday evening 400 reels of film with accessories were in the new exchange.

A new salesman had been hired during the day and he was dispatched to the new exchange to help William H. Rippard, the branch manager, reorganize for business, and at midnight Joe L. Merrick, the new assistant sales manager of Exhibitors' Mutual, arrived from New York to take charge of the situation.

Of the employes of the exchange three were seriously injured—Charles L. Cassanave, salesman, leg broken and back seriously injured; Miss Clara Berger, poster clerk, leg broken; Miss Retta A. Berger, booker, unconscious from internal injuries.

The less seriously injured are: Emily Ley, Ruth M. Meiers, Edward Petri, Marie Schmidt, Harry S. Spang, Russell Taylor, A. Balavage, Fred Lacey, Howard Burket.

"It is impossible to estimate accurately our loss in the Pittsburgh fire," said A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager of Exhibitors Mutual, "until our records are completely checked. Our first concern was over the safety and condition of our employes who were injured. Three of our people are in a serious condition and two of them may not survive. All the others except Mr. Rippard, who was out of the exchange when the fire broke out, are in the hospital."

Ottawa's First Exhibitor in New York.

George C. Talbot, after fourteen years' experience as an exhibitor in Ottawa, Canada, has come to New York to establish himself in the picture business. Mrs. Talbot's desire to be back in her old home town prompted Mr. Talbot to dispose of his Canadian interests and locate in the metropolis. Fourteen years ago Mr. Talbot opened the first moving picture theatre in the Canadian capital.

It was known as the National Theatre, and the show consisted of a one-reel picture and an illustrated song singer. Thirty minutes were required to run the show off and turn in a new audience at five cents a head.

Films were scarce in Canada those days, but as the business expanded Mr. Talbot increased his holdings, and in later years operated several different theatres in Ottawa and in Hull, just across the Rideau River. When he lately disposed of the Talbotoscope in Hull he closed out his picture interests and came on to New York.

Self-Explanatory

Dec. 31, 1918.

National Association of Motion Picture Industry, Times Square Bldg., New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen—I have presented the matter of obtaining 50 per cent. representation in your association to our directors and have informed them that at a meeting held December 10 at the offices of the association you failed to have a quorum necessary to take action upon our request.

Our directors are unanimous and desire to inform you of such, that we hereby tender you the resignation of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, said resignation to take effect immediately.

Thanking you for all past courtesies, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

PETER J. SCHAEFER, President.

Will Not Order Sunday Closing.

Motion picture shows at Evansville, Ind., will not be closed on Sundays according to announcement Saturday, January 4, by Benjamin Bosse, mayor. He said he found sentiment against the closing order so strong that he would not order them closed.

Expect No Long Delay on New York Sunday Question

Albany, January 7.

THAT motion picture legislation in this state will be handled in a somewhat different manner than last year by the motion picture interests was intimated today by George Roberts of this city, a well known figure in the business and one who has been prominently connected with legislative activities during the last two or three years. Mr. Roberts expressed the belief that whatever legislation came up along movie lines it would not be left until the eleventh hour, as was the case last year, but that it would be moved in February so that there would be no chance of it again dying in committee.

"Matters look better than ever before," said Mr. Roberts in discussing the probability of legislation being enacted which would legalize the Sunday motion picture show from one end of the state to the other. "I think that there is sufficient strength already assured in Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse and the metropolis to bring about legislation which will give us Sunday shows. I understand that the Governor himself has expressed views of a favorable nature and I think also that the activities of the last year or two have served the purpose of better acquainting both senators and assemblymen with the situation as it exists.

"I do not particularly blame any senator or assemblyman coming from a rural section from opposing Sunday motion picture legislation, for if that person really represents his constituents he must do as they demand, even though I know of certain instances when the legislator himself favored Sunday motion picture shows, while perhaps thousands of his constituents, living in hamlets and believing that the Sunday movie was but an instrument of the devil, forced him to vote contrary to his own belief." Exchanges to Have Chance to Issue "The Liberator"

COMPLYING with the requests of many of his old customers who were responsible for the success of "Cabiria" and "The Warrior," in which Maciste, the unique and powerful Italian star, appeared, Harry Raver, who presented the first Maciste production in America at two dollars top and did a gross business in three years of upward of a million dollars, has decided to place his third and most elaborate production at the disposal of those of the former exchanges who feel they should have an opportunity of realizing on their previous investment the full measure of prestige created in America by Maciste.

"The Liberator" is the new vehicle for the display of Maciste's personality and prowess. It is a modern story and does not deal with the late war, although all the male principals were enlisted officers and soldiers in the Italian army, obtaining leaves of absence with great difficulty to play their parts in the picture. Well-known "Cabiria" and "Warrior" players are prominent in Maciste's supporting cast, numbering more than one thousand. "The Liberator" is 24,000 feet long and was produced after an original story by Agnes Fletcher Bain. It will be released in weekly installments of two reels each.

WHEELER RETURNS FROM WORK ABROAD

London Representative of Films Division Talks of His War Experiences and Trade Conditions

LUCIAN C. WHEELER, well known in Chicago film circles as having been editor of the Selig-Tribune weekly and afterward manager of the Selig Polyscope Company, came into the city in time to spend the holidays with his wife and family, after an absence of seven months in Europe.

About eight months ago Mr. Wheeler was appointed London representative of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, in charge of the distribution of all official Government films in the British Isles, his duties also taking him frequently to the front in France.

The most successful of the Government's official war films was "America's Answer to the Hun," and it made a big hit in the British Isles, Mr. Wheeler says. It was distributed under the auspices of the British Ministry of Information.

By arrangement made by Mr. Wheeler with Pathe Freres, of England, about 200 feet of film showing the front line activities of the American army in France were also distributed in the British Isles weekly. These negatives were taken by the United States Signal Corps in France and sent by special courier to London every week, to be run in conjunction with the Pathe Weekly Gazette.

Mr. Wheeler speaks in high praise of the splendid co-operation of the Pathe Freres, of England, in this matter. The distribution of these front line pictures was not confined to the British Isles, but also included Australia and Egypt, through the fine system of the company mentioned.

During his visits to France for the purpose of keeping in close touch with the Signal Corps Mr. Wheeler was on the front line, on several occasions, to assist in taking negatives. He and his party had the signal pleasure of being gassed, bombed and shelled several times. In one particular instance they were fortunate enough to secure views of the American guns which at the time were shelling Metz.

Meets New Fangled Female Strangers.

As a further and highly appreciated memento of these visits to the front line trenches, Mr. Wheeler and the members of his party got acquainted with the "scabies"—not the "cooties." The former is an excessively burning itch caused by a parasite, the female of which burrows under the skin and excretes a fluid which creates a painful and extremely annoying irritation. Mr. Wheeler says that our boys at the front really suffered more from this affection than from the "cooties."

Mr. Wheeler chanced to be in Paris while several German air raids were on and also during bombardments by "Big Bertha," but he was lucky enough never to be closer to an explosion than 100 or 200 feet.

Mr. Wheeler was a witness of the explosion of one of these "Big Bertha" shells. It occurred one morning about 11 o'clock, within a block of the American embassy, just when he was coming out on the sidewalk. The shell lit under a horse which was drawing a fiacre, in which was seated a British naval officer, severely wounding him, blowing off the left arm of the driver, killing two American "doughboys" and two British "Tommies" nearby, and injuring seventeen other pedestrians in the vicinity. All that was left of the horse was a bit of hide and a tuft of hair. The whole left in the street was about four feet deep and from 10 to 12 feet in diameter. And all this was caused by barbarous Huns at play, from seventy to eighty miles away!

Picture Business Good in Britain.

Mr. Wheeler during his absence traversed England, Scotland and Wales very thoroughly, and found the moving picture business in excellent condition everywhere. The pictures shown were chiefly of American make. He found that clean, strong, dramatic stories, well cast and directed, were in the ascendancy wherever he visited. War pictures were not popular, as the people aimed at getting away from the war atmosphere.

Charlie Chaplin comedies, just as in America, are in great demand everywhere. He is by long odds the most popular comedian in the British Isles.

Mr. Wheeler is of the opinion that English picture theatre managers are showing a tendency to adopt the American method of presenting pictures—in the musical accompaniment particularly. He believes that a great change has gradually taken place in the matter of patronage. Formerly the patrons were largely of the great middle class; but, of late, aristocracy and royalty itself are becoming regular attendants at the better class of picture theatres.

Admissions to the best houses run at present from 30 to 75 cents, the programs offered consisting of seven or eight reels for such prices. "The musical accompaniment to the pictures in such houses is carefully selected and well rendered," says Mr. Wheeler, which would lead one to suppose that no special score is adopted to suit the pictures in each program.

Exhibitors Pay Good Rentals.

"Excellent rental prices are paid by exhibitors," said Mr. Wheeler, and he immediately followed with the statement that he was particularly impressed that the British moving picture business is conducted on a substantial and dignified basis.

Exhibitors in the British Isles book their features from six to eight months in advance, Mr. Wheeler informed me, and in every instance they are careful to attend the trade showing of features in their localities.

Just before Mr. Wheeler left London, Charles S. Hart, director of the Division of Films, visited the city. He highly complimented Mr. Wheeler on his work in the British Isles and gave him letters to the editors of all the moving picture trade papers in America, in which he specially refers to the extraordinary results obtained in England from a propaganda standpoint, and to the great efficiency which characterized Mr. Wheeler's work.

Mr. Wheeler left for New York Sunday, January 5, where he will be engaged for some time in the exporting of films. He will make his headquarters during his stay at the Friars Club, on Forty-eighth street.

Exhibitors Lay Plans for One Great Organization

AN important meeting was held in Chicago Thursday, January 2, at which were present Peter J. Schaefer, president of the amalgamated organization; Louis Frank, national secretary, and Frank J. Rembusch, chairman of the executive committee. Plans, not yet divulged, were outlined to carry the national exhibitors organization forward in the most progressive way.

Mr. Rembusch, who was seen Friday, January 3, had the following to say about the Chicago meeting and of the failure of the National Association to carry out its promises:

"The action of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in failing to honor the agreement made during the convention of the American Exhibitors' Association at Chicago in September last, by which the two national exhibitors' organizations were to be merged into the exhibitors' branch of the N. A. M. P. I., will in no way create any lack of harmony between the two national exhibitors' organizations, because it is the intention of the exhibitors to remain together in one body.

"The first work will be the ratification of the new constitution and by-laws which have been in abeyance awaiting the fulfillment of the amalgamation agreement with the N. A. M. P. I.

"Quite a setback has been given the activities of the exhibitors' organizations by the failure of the N. A. M. P. I. to carry out the promises made by William A. Brady, its president. Mr. Brady made a special trip to Chicago and Boston saying he represented the President of the United States, and as the president of the N. A. M. P. I. requested and even demanded that the two organizations combine with the N. A. M. P. I. to help win the war, and for the best interests of the entire industry.

"The exhibitors have respectfully waited for four months, and now find it necessary to take up the work where it was left off at the Chicago national convention. The plans referred to in the second paragraph of this statement will be in working order by the first of February, and the officials have received many letters and telegrams from exhibitors, who feel that it is just as well that we are going to have an exclusive exhibitors' organization instead of being a branch of the N. A. M. P. I.

Exhibitors Will Work in Harmony.

"The name will probably be changed to the National Exhibitors' Association, and every exhibitor may expect great activities from now on, as the road is clear to advance and promote the best interests of the exhibitor and to take up the work which is the function of the National Exhibitors' Association today. The greatest harmony and enthusiasm prevails in the matter.

"It seems strange that Mr. Brady should have been so insistent that the entire industry should be united and that all exhibitors' organizations should join the N. A. M. P. I. He even promised us that he would help the exhibitors organize, and that he would travel over the entire country for that purpose. That he should then go back to New York and seemingly forget all about the whole affair is puzzling, to say the least. As far as the A. E. A. is concerned, we have never received a word of communication from Mr. Brady from that day to this on the affair. Everyone can make his own deductions on the matter."

"It is planned, if necessary, to have a meeting of all the national directors at some central point in the near future," Mr. Rembusch concluded.

Douglas H. Bergh Talks on Business Conditions

DOUGLAS H. BERGH, George Kleines' personal traveling representative, returned to the city on Christmas Eve, after a trip of eight week through the Eastern, North Central and Southern States. Among the principal cities visited were New Orleans, Dallas, Atlanta, Washington, Philadelphia, Albany, Boston, New York, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Wilkes-Barre, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit, Minneapolis, Omaha, Kansas City and St. Louis. In all of these cities he was engaged in transferring the distributing business of the George Kleine System to the General Film Company's branch offices.

In all the cities visited Mr. Bergh observed there was an unsettled, uncertain feeling among exhibitors and distributing concerns on the business outlook. The "flu" epidemic, he was impressed, was the chief cause of the depressing effects seen and of the slackness of business in all lines.

He came in contact during his journey with traveling representatives of large business houses, both on trains and at hotels, and they reported that business in general was at a standstill, as merchants were either buying at current prices or putting off buying until a later time.

In all the towns visited exhibitors reported a big falling off in their receipts, and exchangemen, without exception, were dissatisfied with their business.

Mr. Bergh reports that he investigated the business condition of every exchange of the G. F. Company visited and that he was highly pleased to find that each office was most efficiently handled. A perfect working system was found in each and exhibitors were all satisfied with the programs offered.

Mr. Bergh is of the opinion that the addition of the Sherry, the United Theatres Booking Company, and the George Kleine pictures has contributed largely to the strength of the programs.

Mr. Bergh found a pleasing contrast in moving picture conditions in North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota, western Kansas, and in all the wheat growing sections, where business was flourishing. In the small towns in North and South Dakota he found that picture theatres were charging as high as 25 cents admission and that they were booking the best pictures on the market.

It is Mr. Bergh's belief that the moving picture business must regulate itself at the present time and get down to bed rock in the cost of production of films and in the number made. "Rental prices must increase if the fabulous sums paid stars are to continue," concluded Mr. Bergh.

Meeting of Chicago Exhibitors' League.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Chicago held its monthly meeting at Fraternity Hall, 19 West Adams street, Friday afternoon, January 3. The attendance was visibly affected by the zero weather, so that the matter of increasing the dues, which was contemplated, was deferred until the next regular meeting. That will be the annual meeting for the election of officers.

The motion picture operators not having placed any demands regarding their wage increase before the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, no action was taken in the matter by that organization. There was, however, an informal talk on the claims which the operators made before the Allied Amusement Association. Peter J. Schaefer, president of the latter organization, was present and announced that a hitch had occurred in the proceedings between the Allied Amusement Association and the operators, and that the matter was again as it formerly stood.

New Theatre for Ascher Brothers.

The Ascher Brothers recently leased a large plot of ground at the northwest corner of Commercial avenue and Ninety-second street, in South Chicago, as the site of a new building which will include a moving picture theatre, the latter to cost $250,000. Henry Newhouse, the well known Chicago architect, will have charge of the plans and construction of the new house, which must be erected within two years after peace has been declared.

The Randolph Theatre Opened.

The new Randolph Theatre, on the street of that name, was opened by Jones, Linick & Schaefer Monday, December 23, and has been showing to excellent business since. This cozy house seats about 900 people, and its interior decorations give one the impression of an Italian garden. It runs from 8:30 a. m. until midnight daily. Louis Jones, brother of Aaron J. Jones, is the manager. High class programs are offered.

"Birth of a Race" at Playhouse.

"The Birth of a Race" was moved from the Blackstone Theatre to the Playhouse Monday, December 30, where it will be shown for two weeks. Manager Gregory reports that he is showing to good business at $1 and $1.50. A road company opened at Burlington, Ia., last week and another will open at Grand Rapids, Mich., the coming week.

Nate Ascher off to California.

Nate Ascher, president of the Ascher Brothers' enterprises, entertained 200 of the employes on the payroll of the Ascher Brothers' circuit of picture theatres at his home on Woodlawn avenue at a midnight feast on Christmas Eve. This was the fourth anniversary of the event and it was hugely enjoyed by the guests. Mr. Ascher will leave for California in a few days on a holiday trip.

New Years at the Riviera.

Messrs. Balaban and Katz, owners of the Riviera and the Central Park theatres, ushered in the new year at these fine houses by giving a special midnight entertainment of high class vaudeville. The innovation was highly appreciated by large audiences.

"Virtuous Wives" Big Success.

"Virtuous Wives," Anita Stewart's first feature by her own company, is making a big hit in Chicago. All the critics of the Chicago dailies have praised it highly and crowded houses are the rule wherever it is shown.

New Wilson Theatre Opened.

The new Wilson Theatre, the fourteenth house on the Lubliner & Trinz circuit, located at 2418 West Madison street, opened Saturday afternoon, December 21. Despite the snowy, slushy, unhealthy weather, the house was packed to full capacity, and has since played to crowded gatherings.

This playhouse was built at a cost of $250,000, it is given out. It has a ten-piece orchestra and a fifteen thousand-dollar Kimball pipe organ. It seats 1,500 persons. The interior of the theatre is artistically and elaborately decorated with a color scheme of pink and gold.

The admission is 17 cents for adults and 11 cents for children, including the war tax.

H. C. Holah with Vitagraph.

H. C. Holah, at one time manager of Pathe's Chicago and Minneapolis offices and later in charge of the Chicago Herald's moving picture department, is now a member of Vitagraph's Chicago sales department. Mr. Holah's numerous friends among exhibitors in Chicago territory are congratulating him warmly on his return to the regular moving picture fold.

Helen Ferguson Has Role in Screen Classics Feature

HELEN FERGUSON, who has the part of Amy Gordon, in the Screen Classics, Inc., feature, "Why Germany Must Pay," to be distributed by Metro, first appeared before the camera at the Essanay plant. Miss Ferguson was quite young then, a little more than thirteen. That was four years ago.

Her faith in herself was justified. Things didn't happen with the miraculous suddenness of fiction, but Miss Ferguson got on rapidly. Her first real part was in "Filling His Own Shoes," with Bryant Washburn.

From then on Miss Ferguson appeared regularly, alternating between leading parts in Black Cat Features and in the support of Mr. Washburn. She was seen in "The Man Who Was Afraid" and "The Golden Idiot." After Taylor Holmes left the stage for the movies he insisted, after his first picture, upon Helen Ferguson as his leading woman. They were seen together in "Fools for Luck" and "The Small Town Guy," after which the present Metro player co-starred with Jack Gardner in "The Gift o' Gab."

In the East Miss Ferguson has appeared in two features besides the Metro production of "Why Germany Must Pay."

GOVERNMENT REPLIES TO ASSOCIATION

Joint Committee Tells Atlantic City Delegation Returns from Official Films Helped to Victory

THE Joint Committee on Motion Picture Activities of the United States Government and Allied Organizations, composed of representatives of all governmental and allied agencies engaged in motion picture work, has, through its executive committee, issued a reply to the resolutions concerning the film activities of the Government which were presented by representatives of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry at the War Emergency and Reconstruction Congress recently held at Atlantic City.

"The monetary returns for the rental of Government films by the Committee on Public Information to which your resolutions refer, cannot be properly regarded as profits," says the statement, "since such returns are by law converted into the common fund in the United States Treasury, where they offset in part not only the cost of the production, editing and distribution of film by the Division of Films, but the much greater cost of production incurred by other branches notably the Signal Corps of the Army.

"Obviously, in formulating the resolutions, your committee failed to take into consideration the fact that original production constitutes a large part of the cost of film and that the rental charge made by one branch of the Government is meant to cover, as far as possible, the expenses both of handling by that branch and of production and other incidental expenses by other branches. The Division of Films is acting not as an independent unit, but as an integral part of the Government Service. Any financial return to the treasury from the product distributed by this division should, therefore, be credited against the expenses, not alone of the Division of Films, but also of all other branches of the service concerned.

"At a time when the appalling cost of war has placed a greatly increased financial burden upon the Government and people of the United States, it should be gratifying to us all as American citizens that through efficient management in the Division of Films, the distribution of motion pictures produced by the Government for the purpose of keeping the public informed of events, combating German propaganda, increasing and conserving food supplies, and in other ways helping toward victory and permanent peace, has been made to pay for itself and also to contribute toward the cost of production.

"The joint committee takes this opportunity of adding its acknowledgment to the acknowledgments already made by the President and the members of his Cabinet of the excellent assistance given by your industry to the Government in its time of need, so well summarized in your resolutions, and to express the hope that the mutual co-operation already established may continue through the crucial period of reconstruction and thereafter."

The statement is signed by David K. Niles, Don Carlos Ellis, Rufus Steele and Captain C. Roy Dickinson.

Parker Read to Arrange Trade Show for "Sahara"

FIRMLY convinced that he has produced the picture sensation of the season, J. Parker Read, Jr., long associated with Thomas H. Ince, leaves the Coast for New York in a few days with a print of "Sahara," for a New York trade showing and premiere in one of the houses on Broadway.

"Sahara," starring Louise Glaum, has just been completed by Director Art Rosson under the supervision of Allan Dwan. The production is a visualization of a dramatic story by C. Gardner Sullivan, also associated with Mr. Ince for years as principal author and head of the Ince scenario department. It is a modern story, dealing with a young woman who falls in love with an engineer and is taken by him to the Sahara desert, where he is engaged in building a water project.

The husband is played by Matt Moore and the Russian baron by Edwin Stevens. Charles Stumar had charge of the photographic department.

SHEEHAN TALKS OF GERMAN INTRIGUE

Fox Official Describes a Heavily Capitalized Teuton Company That Aimed at Screen Control

HAD Germany won the war the motion picture business of the whole world would have been monopolized and the process of Prussianizing would have been undertaken on the screen."

That the German military authorities had realized the all-powerful influence of motion pictures upon the popular mind is the contention of Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, who is on a tour of the Fox offices throughout the United States preparatory to a long visit abroad in the interest of his company.

Mr. Sheehan made his statement in an interview at Portland, Ore., and backed it with data which had come to his knowledge and which at the time was turned over to the Government. The advent of peace now makes it possible to give the public this additional information of Prussian plotting.

"Early in 1918," explained Mr. Sheehan, "there was formed in Berlin a corporation with capital stock of $25,000,000 which not only had the approval of the high military command, but was virtually under its direction, since the corporation was to have been subsidized by the Government. We discovered through our foreign representatives that Germany had already sent films by submarine into Spain, and that these had been taken to Mexico and South America. Others were sent to the neutral northern countries. It is not unlikely that propaganda films formed an item of the cargo of the submarine Deutschland when its sudden appearance at Baltimore caused a world-wide sensation.

"Thousand of pictures were to be spread through the conquered nations after the war. 'Kultur' was to be their keynote. German science and art and German standards of morals were to be preached under various forms to the people of the Allies."

"The Kaiser and his ring," explained Mr. Sheehan, "did not awaken fully to the vast possibilities of the motion picture until their fall was approaching, and as the hammer blows of General Foch increased during the summer the autocrats had other things to interest them.

"That American producers and exhibitors were not slow to meet any attempt at Prussian propaganda is proved by the release of many patriotic subjects and photoplay stories based on all that is the opposite of Prussian Kultur and its barbarities. In 'The Prussian Cur' William Fox placed before the public an expose of German intrigue from the days of Wilhelm I, grandfather of the present ex-Kaiser. That this machinery for evil has not even yet ceased operation is the opinion of many Government officials.

"The hammer blows of Foch put an end to this twenty-five-million-dollar German plan; but its conception is another proof of the importance of the film industry in molding public opinion. And the foreign department of the Fox organization is doing much to spread American ideals of manhood and womanhood with pictures of patriotic and democratic appeal."

In the reported organization of a "League for the Protection of the Personal Liberty and Life of the Kaiser" William Fox sees a reflection of the box office drawing power of the Fox production, "The Prussian Cur." He contends that the ex-Kaiser is not yet out of the running; that there is undoubtedly a large royalist party still busy in Germany, and its leaders may attempt to reseat their later ruler.

STAGE WOMEN MAKE TWELVE PICTURES

Profits from Exhibition To Be Used to Erect Theatre in Which to Entertain Wounded Soldiers

AMERICA'S foremost stage stars who have heretofore refused to act for the camera and many screen favorites are featured in a series of twelve two-reel photoplays produced by the Stage Women's War Relief and to be released shortly. Five productions have been finished and the remainder will be completed within a few weeks.

Its work in providing for wounded soldiers, refugees and orphans in Europe having proved such a great success the Stage Women's War Relief has secured permission from the Government to erect and maintain a theatre in the Grand Central Palace, New York, where Debarkation Hospital No. 5 is located, and to provide funds for this theatre the series of films has been made.

The film committee of the relief society realized that to obtain enough money to provide the proper theatre and entertainments for the wounded soldiers and sailors it must obtain stars of the first magnitude for its films. The response to the call for volunteers not only brought some of the best known screen stars before the committee, but some of the foremost stage stars, producers, playwrights and writers of fiction offered their services.

David Belasco is featured in one of the productions and he assumes the role of a theatrical producer, building a play and a star, in the film. The tentative title for the Belasco production is "A Star Over Night." Calder Johnstone wrote the scenario for Mr. Belasco's vehicle and George W. Terwilliger produced it.

"Fighting Mad" is the temporary title for the second photoplay featuring Maclyn Arbuckle. This film is adapted from a story by Samuel Hopkins Adams and in support of Mr. Arbuckle are Percy Haswell, J. J. McGraw and Dana de Harte, a well known aviator.

The film committee of the Stage Women's War Relief has been holding daily meetings during the holiday season for the particular productions yet to be filmed. The seven remaining casts will be selected from among John Drew, Otis Skinner, Lillian Russell, Julia Arthur, Ruth Chatterton, William Collier, H. B. Warner, Alice Brady, Daniel Frohman, Florence Nash, Mary Nash, Leo Ditrichstein, Robert B. Mantell, Henry Miller, Ann Murdock, Willard Mack, Blanche Bates, Edith Wynne Matthison, Adelaide and Hughes, Florence Moore and Minnie Dupree.

The Stage Women's War Relief has selected the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., to act as distributing agent.

It is understood that the Universal and the Stage Women's War Relief were brought together through the efforts of Tarkington Baker, Universal's director of publicity.

Photoplay Screen Supplement Issued.

The first number of James R. Quirk's Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement is pre-released by the New York Rialto, week of January 12, and three days later is available for immediate showing throughout the country from the sixteen branch exchanges of the Educational Films Corporation. Vice-president Hammons of the Educational will have twenty prints in work immediately, and the number of these will be increased in accordance with the many hundreds of exhibitors' requests that have poured into the Photoplay Magazine office and the office of the Educational.

"The Stars as They Are," as the series is alternatively named, admits the motion picture spectator into the innermost secrets of studio production, together with intimate views of the home life of public favorites. In the first number are Douglas Fairbanks, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Mary Miles Minter, Montague Love, Mary Charleson, John Emerson, James Kirkwood, Anita Loos and others. The spectator is transported to a California studio, the workings are explained, and the secret of making a "double exposure" is laid bare. The finale of this novel one-reeler satirizes in animated cartoon the foibles of the socalled "movie pest."

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

YULETIDE is on the ebb in Filmland. The dense veil of smoke, resulting from the conflagration of gift cigars, that has been hovering like a pall over the beetling crags of the Hollywood foothills, has begun to lift.

Evergreen trees, once resplendent with tinsel and lights, now repose in wilted, dejected attitudes on back lots.

Whiskers and wigs, borrowed from costume departments and prop rooms by various persons putting on impersonations of S. Claus, have been returned, and movie plays requiring whiskered characters are being cast once more.

Players who have been arrogantly puffing at cork-tipped cigarettes are now rolling their own, as they did before they found their Christmas socks filled with tailor-made smokes.

Of course we still have many signs to remind us of the gladsome holidays. There are ink spots on the inner side of index fingers that speak eloquently of the never-leak fountain pen—the scarred countenances that mark their owners as recipients of safety razors.

Many of our prominent players, erstwhile, heretofore and hitherto impeccable as to their sartorial adornment, are seen on Hollywood, Sunset, Vine and other of the Rue de Movies of Filmland with strange and weird haberdasherial effects embellishing their manly chests and swanlike necks. In other words, they are wearing the shirts and ties their wives gave them—shirts and ties of such hue and pattern as to astonish the natives and seriously interfere with the chromatic arrangements of our sunsets.

An Invitation Delayed.

Christmas was good to many of the colony. Personally, we are the recipient of sixteen assorted Christmas cards and an invitation to a banquet, which arrived the day after the banquet.

Harry Northrup, the villain, is sporting a new and sinister looking cane. Someone sent Billy Parsons a pair of military hairbrushes. Doug Fairbanks has a brunette bear, alive and kicking.

Bill Hart played Santa Claus at his studio and remembered everyone. Frank Keenan got a turkey—of which, more later; and the police judges of several nearby towns were presented with cash donations from motor car owners who allowed the Christmas spirit to get ahead of their caution.

The studios are all working, but in a sort of languid and lackadaisical manner. Nobody seems to want to set the woods afire with activity.

I went out to Brunton, but everybody was just between pictures except Jack Pickford and Dustin Farnum, and they were both out on location. Howard Hickman and his better half, Bessie Barriscale, had just got back from an old-time Christmas party at Howard's folks at San Jose.

Overcoats Popular in Official Row.

I took a walk along Official Row, where all the business offices of the firms producing at Brunton are located. Most of them were empty of officials, but when I peeped in at the last office I was rewarded by the sight of two overcoats seated on a couch. I entered and scraped my feet to announce that there was present a visitor who would have speech with some one. The coats stirred, and Robert Brunton and Frank Keenan emerged, but with little enthusiasm.

"You look," I remarked, "as if you were giving an imitation of two sick men."

"One of the best little imitations that has ever been staged," they both agreed.

"How did you enjoy Christmas?" I asked.

"Enjoy!"

Mr. Keenan's tones were of hollow mockery. I have never had the pleasure of seeing Frank Keenan in a spoken play—a fact I have deeply regretted, but I believe I have seen him in one of his big dramatic moments when he made an entirely extemporaneous dissertation upon a turkey.

A Christmas Tragedy.

"I had a turkey," he said, "a noble bird—a veritable king of fowls—a cock of the walk of the barnyard where he grew to his majority and to an exceeding fatness. He was cooked with all of the rich and rare tricks of the culinary art, roasted to a turn, dark meat and white like unto the breast of a dove for tenderness. Luscious stuffing reposed in his bosom. Roundabout him was a sea of gravy, heavy with turkey juice and more stuffing.

"Picture this, if you can. Think of this noble member of the turkey family ready for the carving knife, the fork, the tooth—and I, alas!"

Here Mr. Keenan's voice sank to the pitch used by Hamlet in addressing Horatio and the grave diggers:

"And I unable to eat therof because of this accursed rheum that hath beset me."

I had no answer for this, so made my exit softly and in silence.

Keenan's gastronomic sorrow over his lost gobbler set my thoughts in sober channels. Christmas dinners made me think of the people who were here from the East. Were they lonely at being away from their dear New York?

And What of the Easterners?

Was Samuel Goldfish—he was still Goldfish then—sad when he donned his nightie and hung his sock on a mantelpiece three thousand miles away from where it was usually suspended?

Did tears gather in the eyes of Rex Beach when he looked out of the window and saw sunshine and flowers instead of snow on Christmas morn?

Did Colonel Selig miss the lake and pellucid waters of the Chicago River and the softly lapping wavelets of the drainage canal when Yuletide dawned?

Did Maxwell Karger sign for an Eastern Santa Claus? Did Winfield Sheehan—and finding myself in front of the Peggy Reads Everything in the World. Director Gilstrom and the Lee Kids Thinking Up Smiles.

What the Rubbernecking Man Saw at the Fox Studio.

Fox studios, I stepped inside to ask Mr. Sheehan about it.

"No," he said. "I might have found it sad anywhere else, but the climate is so fine out here that it makes up for everything. I've had a good trip across the country, stopped off at a number of cities and found Fox Films prospering and everything lovely."

There was no sad stuff here, so I went out on the lot and found Peggy Hyland.

"How do you like being this far away on Christmas?" I asked. "Aren't you lonesome for New York, for Broadway, for the Eastern studio?"

"No," said Miss Hyland. "As long as I have this magazine to keep me informed on what is going on in picture circles, I am not a bit lonely, and I don't miss New York at all."

The Rambler Swells Right Up.

The shrinking modesty that is present in the system of all good reporters will not allow me to give the name of the magazine Miss Hyland was reading, nor the page therein, as it might cause a writer who conducts a department called "Rambles Round Filmtown" in said journal to get all swelled up to discover that he has a reader way out here on the West Coast.

I began to think I was not going to find a single star that had missed New York until I saw Little Jane Lee, who stated that no amount of sunshine or no number of palm trees could make up for a New York Christmas. Her sister Katherine was not so sure, but Jane was—she was positive and emphatic!

Director Arvid Gilstrom was working out a scene in a bathroom for the Lee children's new picture, "Smiles," and while he was getting the plunge in the center of the room filled with water Jane and Katherine told me about the picture—and it's going to be some picture! Charlie Chaplin, Henry Lehrman, Mack Sennett and Fatty Arbuckle had all better watch out for their laurels.

The Lees Give Kewpie a Bath.

"We fall in the water in the bath room," said Jane, "and we push Kewpie Morgan into the plunge. That's what Mr. Gilstrom is filling it for now."

"We have stamps put on us like letters," said Katherine, "and we get put in a mail sack and sent away in the mail, and we get grabbed by a grabber that reaches out and grabs us as the train goes by at sixty miles an hour; and we put mice in a man's hat and do—oh, all sorts of the loveliest things!"

Katherine was catching her breath to tell me more when Jane broke up the party by crying:

"Come on, we've got to push Kewpie in the bath plunge."

I went along and watched them push Kewpie in the plunge, and it was some splash!

Kewpie is a sizable sort of chap, big enough to fill almost any bath plunge without the assistance of water. This plunge was full of water, and as there was not room for both Kewpie and the water, the water had to go somewhere, and it simply jumped up and out of the plunge and splashed itself all over everything.

Arthur Kane Visits Boston.

Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures Corporation, was in Boston recently conferring with Charles P. Rogers, branch manager of Select's Boston exchange.

Charles F. Stark
Sales Manager, Spoor-Thompson Laboratories.

Spoor-Thompson Sales Head Meeting With Big Success

ONE of the most efficient and wide-awake men connected with the film business today is Charles F. Stark, sales manager of the Spoor-Thompson Laboratories. Previous to taking up his duties with this concern he had a number of years' experience in the moving picture business, having been advertising manager with the Chicago branch of the Edison Company and head of the commercial department with the Essanay Company.

At the present time Mr. Stark is spending his time between the New York office and the laboratories, which are situated in Chicago. One of his latest accomplishments is the putting through of a contract for the work of the United Picture Theatres. As the representative of the newest processing method, the details of which were covered at length in our issue of November 30, Mr. Stark has an easy road to travel because of the efficiency and time-saving attributes of the Spoor-Thompson processing machine. The turning out of 8,000 feet of film an hour, developed, fixed, washed and dried is an accomplishment not to be sneezed at.

Oklahoma Exhibitors to Meet.

The Oklahoma Exhibitors' Association meeting was scheduled for Oklahoma City January 6-8 with headquarters at the Lee Huckins Hotel.

The meeting was a most important one and was attended by exhibitors from all parts of the State. Exhibitors discussed the results of the recent closing mandate and made plans to see that in future emergencies they will not be discriminated against and that their rights will be protected.

Many Dallas film exchange officials attended the meeting, including Lew Remy of Goldwyn, LeRoy Bickel and Louis Pelleran of Metro and First National, Al Bartlett, Dave Prince and Al Russell of the Lynch Enterprises, and Jimmy Hill of Pathe.

A Hustling Theatre Manager Is Buffalo's Jim Wallingford

ABOUT the most unusual type of showman one would want to meet is Jim Wallingford. He is the capable and efficient manager of Keith's, the Little Hippodrome and the Penny Arcade, all on Main street in the heart of Buffalo. Jim started in as manager of the Little Hipp. When a vacancy occurred in the management of Keith's, right next door, Jim assumed the job and also the salary. Later he annexed the Penny Arcade under his direction—and also the salary that went with it. Jim handles the three jobs to perfection. The big fellows say that Jim is well worth three salaries. He further heightens his altogether pleasing personality by a broad brimmed sombrero and a flowing tie.

Jim is perhaps the busiest man in Buffalo. In order to gain his ear the usual method of reaching him is about like this: You visit his office in the Little Hip, are informed that he is somewhere in the house and traverse the building from gallery to basement, when the doorman tells you that he is next door, at Keith's, you chase upstairs in that house, back to the main floor, then downstairs and up again, to be informed that he has departed for the Penny Arcade, down in the next block, arriving at that abode of delight for the kids—and some grownups—you are just too late to catch Jim as he has returned to his twin theatres.

Perhaps, if you are lucky, by this time you will find him in his spacious outer office, calmly indulging in one of his favorite pastimes—otherwise weighing the harvest of pennies from the arcade. But when you do finally reach Jim you are well rewarded with a cheery "Hello, there," and a hearty grip of his manly paw. You like Jim—you never doubt that for an instant.

Jim's repute as a showman is unique. Films are the bill of fare at his two theatres, but he never screens a film, 'tis said, but screens the "paper." For paper means everything to Jim. The approaches to his theatres are decorated with the most varigated array of paper that human ingenuity could devise.

Food and Fuel Care in Official Films.

Motion pictures are going to help to feed a hungry world. This statement is made by officials of the Department of Agriculture, who add that the motion picture work of the Department has been redirected since the signing of the armistice to help more directly in meeting the needs of the world for food. The motion picture branch is rushing to completion productions that cover the care and handling of dairy and beef cattle and poultry. A series of films also are to be made showing the control and prevention of grain rust and other plant diseases.

Films are also being prepared as part of the campaign which the Forest Service is making in co-operation with the Fuel Administration for increased wood fuel production and the substitution of cordwood for coal in regions where coal will be scarce this winter. Many features of the Department's work which received little or no emphasis during the war, such as game preservation and the development of recreation in National Forests, will also be featured in new films to be released during the winter months.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By A. H. GIEBLER

Zukor in Town.

Adolph Zukor, accompanied by John C. Flynn, arrived in Los Angeles from the East on December 29 on his annual business trip. Mr. Zukor will confer with the producing forces of the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Hollywod upon a number of big productions to be made during 1919. On his way across the continent Mr. Zukor stopped at several important places, taking note of the motion picture situation as it was affected by the influenza epidemic and the closing orders put upon the theatres of the country. He says he found business picking up everywhere, and he thinks the outlook is very good for the coming year.

Mr. Zukor will remain in Los Angeles about three weeks.

Christie Returns with New Contracts.

Charles H. Christie, who has been away from Los Angeles for more than six weeks, returned just before Christmas with contracts to make a number of two-reel Christie special comedies, to be released once a month through the Independent Exchanges now handling the Christie output.

The new comedies will feature "story" above "star," although the chief players will be selected with great care and regard as to ability as well as a certain popularity with film audiences. Al E. Christie will have personal charge of the new comedies.

Shirk Now Lasky Publicity Head.

Adam Hull Shirk, who came to Los Angeles a year ago as assistant director of publicity for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on the West Coast, assumed the duties of head of the department on January 1.

Kenneth McGaffey, former head of the office, has been transferred to the scenario department, and will devote his attention to the writing and editing of sub-titles for special productions.

Mr. Shirk is well known in newspaper and magazine editorial circles, and served in the capacity of photoplay editor of the New York Morning Telegraph and the Dramatic Mirror prior to his connection with the Famous Players-Lasky Company. He is also well known as a magazine writer, and has a wide and enthusiastic following among the readers of a number of the popular fiction magazines.

Pat Kearney, who came on from the New York offices of the Lasky corporation, will occupy the post of assistant director of publicity, made vacant by Mr. Shirk's promotion.

Metro's Laboratory Chief Arrives.

Ray Smallwood, chief of Metro's photographic department, arrived the latter part of December from New York to assume charge of the camera and laboratory work at the new Metro studio in Hollywood. Mr. Smallwood's family is expected early in January.

New Motion Picture "Fund" Organized.

Now that there is no more need of the Motion Picture War Service Association the members of that organization have decided to form a new "fund" to take care of old and indigent photoplayers and to perform other charitable duties.

At a meeting held to disband the war service association and to create the new fund Frank E. Woods, of the Lasky directorial force, was elected temporary president and organizer of the new order, and Mary Pickford was made honorary president. All except a small portion of the money that had been subscribed to the war service fund was returned to the subscribers, who immediately put their names down as members of the new organization. D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, William S. Hart, Dustin Farnum, Mack Sennett and Douglas Fairbanks each subscribed $500.

The new society has not been given a permanent name as yet.

California Theatre Wins Prize.

The California Theatre was represented in the Rose Tournament, held in Pasadena on New Year's Day, by sixteen ushers, all wearing the uniform of French army officers and carrying the insignia "California," made of carnations and marigolds, as they marched along the line of parade. The boys made a striking show and elicited much applause from the crowd. The California Theatre was awarded a prize for having one of the most artistic units in the pageant.

Welcomes Her Regiment.

Mary Pickford, honorary colonel and godmother of the 143d California Field Artillery, was notified by telegram from Mayor Rolph of San Francisco that "her regiment" would arrive from France on New Year's Day and that she was invited to be present to welcome the soldiers at the ferry and to proceed with them to the presidio, where the regiment would be disbanded. Miss Pickford and her mother left Los Angeles in time to be present when the 143d arrived.

New Year's Eve Party at Brunton.

A watch party given at the Brunton studios under the personal supervision and direction of Robert Brunton was one of the social successes of the season in the local photoplay colony.

The big glass stage of the studio was elaborately decorated with light clusters and streamers and flag decorations amid the natural green of growing plants and the fountain playing in the very center of the immense stage. A soda fountain in personal charge of Mr. Brunton was one of the most popular features of the entertainment, although solid refreshments served buffet style received particular attention.

At one end of the stage was a replica of a typical western bar, gaily ornamented, but looking very realistic.

The Brunton jazz band furnished music that tempted the heels and toes of all the guests to dance, and the party that had gathered to watch the little new year come in remained until several hours had passed over its head and the newcomer was assured of a warm welcome.

Representatives from every studio on the Coast were present.

Hal Cooley Married.

Hallam Burr, known to the film world as Hal Cooley, was married the day before Christmas to Miss Elizabeth Bates, of Columbus, Ga., by the Rev. J. Myers, the same clergyman who officiated at the marriage of Charles Chaplin and Mildred Harris a few weeks ago.

Hal Cooley, or Burr, as he wishes to be known hereafter, has only recently discovered the identity of his father, his mother having deserted her husband when Hal was a mere baby. She never told her son his real name nor anything about his father. In looking over family papers not long ago Hal stumbled upon the name of George Burr of Brooklyn, whom further inquiry proved to be his long unknown father.

Burr is now appearing in support of Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs," and will later take an important part in a Goldwyn production.

Watch Party at L. A. A. C.

The watch party given on New Year's Eve at the Los Angeles Athletic Club was attended by a large number of prominent film players, many of whom entertained guests at the dinner and dance. The program consisted of singing and dancing by professional entertainers. Among those who made early reservations were Charles Eyton, of the Morosco studios, who entertained a party of eight, and Fred Niblo, of the Thomas H. Ince forces, with a party of twelve. The club is the home of a number of prominent bachelor film stars.

Playwright Wintering in Los Angeles.

Bayard Veiller, author of such notable plays as "Within the Law," "The Thirteenth Chair" and others, with his wife, Margaret Wycherly Veiller, are in Los Angeles for the winter.

At the Theatres.

D. W. Griffith's picture, "The Fall of Babylon," made from the Babylonian episode of "Intolerance," and showing a number of entire scenes and action that was not included in the "Intolerance" film, will have a week's run at Clune's Auditorium following the engagement of "The Greatest Thing in Life."

Julian Eltinge's production at the Mason Opera House, which is partly spoken and part pictures, is breaking box office records during its two weeks' run.

Studio Shots

CHARLES CHAPLIN received $250 for a kiss from Lady Stewart McKenzie, a visiting noblewoman from Scotland, on New Year's Eve at the Alexandria Watch Party. Lady McKenzie stipulated that the money be given to the Red Cross.

Winfield Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, left town a few days after New Year's to resume his journey to the principal film distributing centers of the United States.

Blanche Sweet, who went east recently to do a lot of Christmas shopping, has returned to Hollywood, and expects to begin work on a new picture within two weeks.

Henry King has returned to Santa Barbara with the William Russell company from San Francisco, where he went to make scenes for "Brass Buttons."

Norman Kerry has been discharged from the army and has returned to Los Angeles, where he will take up the work of acting before the camera.

Bert Lytell spent Christmas on his ranch at Napa, Cal.

The Mitchell Lewis company became snowbound while they were making scenes in the Yosemite Valley, and Bessie Eyton, star of the company, became chief cook of the camp and cooked the dinner on Christmas Day.

Madge Kennedy's husband, an officer in the army, obtained a leave of absence and spent Christmas with his wife in California.

Mabel Normand, who had to lay aside her Sis Hopkins make-up for a few weeks while battling with the flu, is able to be at the studio again.

Tully Marshall is playing in support of Madge Kennedy in a Goldwyn production.

Bessie Love has begun work on "The Wishing Ring Man" at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood.

A real old-fashioned English Christmas dinner and a huge Christmas tree were the chief attractions at the home of the Charlie Chaplins in Hollywood on Christmas Day. Mr. and Mrs. Sid Chaplin were the guests of honor.

Mae Marsh has so far recovered from her recent illness that she plans to begin on her first Goldwyn production, to be made in the Culver City studio early in January.

A baby girl arrived on Christmas night at the home of Florence Vidor, leading woman in a number of recent Lasky productions. The baby's father is King Vidor, managing director of the Brentwood Film Corporation.

Sydney Ainsworth, formerly of the Essanay Company in Chicago, has recently arrived on the West Coast, and is taking an important characterization in a Tom Moore picture for Goldwyn.

Kitty Gordon is working in "Platonic Love," her third picture to be made in the West.

Marie Walcamp was visited by a burglar at her home in Hollywood one evening recently, and Marie—daredevil of the screen that she is—acted just like any other girl scared by a burglar; she screamed.

Ethel Clayton and Monte Blue, her leading man, visited Camp Kearney and Camp MacArthur during the holidays to make scenes for "Private Pettigrew's Girl."

Suchet Singh
Editor of "The Twentieth Century", Bombay (India) Motion Picture Magazine, spent a day recently in Pathe's Jersey City studio, watching the making of an American serial. He is shown posing with Pearl White and Bertram Millhauser, star and author of "The Lightning Raider," Miss White's newest serial.

Universal Offers to Give Jobs to Crippled Soldiers

EMPLOYMENT of crippled soldiers in film inspection departments is suggested by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, in a letter sent to all film producers and distributors recently.

Film companies have already stated that they will willingly restore all soldier workers to their former positions, but Mr. Laemmle is of the opinion that the industry can go a step further by offering employment to the men who received leg wounds necessitating amputation upon their discharge from service.

A bureau to provide vocational training for armless and legless soldiers and to secure for them employment that will not tax their strength is being considered by Government officials at Washington at the present time, but so far no definite plans have been announced. The Universal's offer to provide positions for crippled soldiers was forwarded to the surgeon-general of the army January 6, and President Laemmle is of the opinion that if other distributors adopt his ideas that the film industry can lend valuable assistance to Government officials who have found difficulty in solving the soldier employment problem.

Universal film exchange managers all over the country have been asked to send to Mr. Laemmle at once reports on the work of their inspection departments so that an idea of just how many crippled soldiers could be employed by the company might be obtained.

Mr. Laemmle has pointed out that work of film inspecting does not necessitate the use of the limbs in any way; that it will not tax the strength of the employe, and will pay him a salary in excess of that in other lines of work.

Violet Mersereau Honored.

Violet Mersereau, Universal film star, has been commissioned a colonel and given the position of honorary vice-president by the executive staff of the American Cadets, an organization of over 100,000 boys. Miss Mersereau received her honors, due to her activities during recent Liberty Loan and war fund drives, in which she solicited subscriptions as a member of the American Cadets.

KEY WEST IS A BUSY PICTURE SPOT

Screen Theatres the Principal Amusement of a Town Remarkable for Its Romantic Features, Its Queer Customs and Its Wonderful Climatic Advantages

By Clarke Irvine

THIS summer I had got nearly all information for a story on the picture situation in Key West, that Gibraltarlike speck at the southeastern point of the United States, but owing to the Kaiser and his submarines I was whisked off to Galveston, of which I have written lately. Now Key West will have its day in the world. I remained here long enough this time to gather the remaining facts, and so I will present them, as of December 20.

To start with, Key West is the busiest spot I have been in for some time—when it comes to pictures. There is practically no amusement in this small cigar manufacturing place except the biweekly dances and some special events now and then, mostly then. The main theatre is the Monroe, an old house, but since the influenza rage, repainted, cleaned and enlarged. It is located on Duval, the main street, which runs two miles from the waterfront to the beach—Gulf on all sides.

Senor Juan Carbonell, a pleasant and well informed Cuban, is the owner and manager. J. F. Fleitas, his house manager, likewise is a hospitable man and knows the picture game from all angles. They are progressive exhibitors, using much newspaper space in their promotion of the best pictures, which include Paramount, Artcraft, Fox, World, Mutual, Goldwyn, and special makes. The Fox and Vitagraph comedies and current news fiims fill up the program. Changes are made daily for 15 and 20 cents, with tax included.

Carbonell Uses Street Car Ads.

An exclusive publicity scheme which brings home the box office bacon is street car advertising cards, hung on the ends of the cars. A few big stands about the city also render first aid to the box office. This house seats 720, but recently Mr. Carbonell took out the front half of the large stage and put in 100 more seats, with 20 on the sides for "waiters" who desire to sit close to the screen until seats are available. The stage can be replaced in a few hours. It is the management's intention soon to import big time vaudeville here, which will be quite an added attraction for this little city.

This house is ventilated by twelve large hurricane fans and sixteen big windows, which are kept open all the time. Simplex and Power's mercury arc is the projection. The throw is over a hundred feet, with but a five-degree angle, on a Mirroroid screen. Music is by a seven-piece orchestra. The greater population being of Spanish descent, those romantic and thrilling films which the Panamanians so enjoy likewise are desired in this city, but at the same time the modern society play is highly appreciated. The audiences vary; at present the service men show conspicuously, with civilian whites and Cubans in the lesser majority.

Key West a Romantic Spot.

Key West is a little piece of the Old World transplanted to America. If it were not for the post office, one would say it was either Manila, Havana, Panama, or most any out of the way place. The traditions are numerous, and the customs queer and interesting. Being in Florida, there are many flowers here, and as for tropical beauty, Key West is almost unexcelled. The breezes from the Atlantic and Caribbean that sweep gently over this island hamlet are most wonderful. The moonlit nights are most beautiful, and the climate seldom is other than even.

It would take ten pages to make an exposition of the other side of this tiny dot of an island, but it is enough to say that one may travel far and wide and see no more interesting sights. The habit of the milkman, for instance, who delivers his product at your door each morning—from the cow's own udder to your milk pan; the quaint streets with domino players, and children of all hues engaged in marbles, hop-scotch, and little ones' games; a baby here with but a garden-of-paradise garb; the old "cochero" with his "seagoing hack" or carriage is a familiar sight, and when one closes his eyes and hears the "ding-dong" of this antiquated vehicle he remembers the Escolta in Manila, or the Central Plaza in Panama.

Old-Time Atmosphere at San Carlos.

To return to modern things, the other downtown theatre is the San Carlos, an unmodern house where once Pavlowa played when en route to Havana; where the very air tingles with the spirit of the past, but where up to the minute naval aviators bring their dark-eyed beauties to see the pictures. This house was only recently taken over by the Monroe management. It shows big features of like programs, in addition to a girl show, which draws well with the sailors, soldiers and marines stationed here.

This house is of the old type. Its entrance is by a dozen steps, the lobby being on the walk level. Loges extend from one side of the stage around the horseshoe to the other side, and the balcony is just above. The seats number over 800, and the mechanical equipment is similar to that of the Monroe.

The Unforgettable Baron.

Business is good all the time. Every night at all houses the crowds gather, and it is a job to keep them out—it reminded me of the Coast, where Baron Long used to hold the people back with chains and Bill Jones' cheery voice would call: "Come on in, children, and make yourselves welcome."

Key West, with its burden of antiquity and sluggish city spirit, is going ahead. A big hotel is now under construction at the beach, and in time, I think, Palm Beach and Miami will have to look to their own welfare, for Key West is certainly a beautiful resort spot—the swimming is grand; clear limpid waters, with no tide and no big surf.

A. Aurilio Torres, who recently gave up the San Carlos house, has put about $15,000 into the Amusu theatre out at the beach. It is a semi-airdrome, seating 2,000 now, but with a reserve capacity of an additional 2,000. This house opened to fine business November 16. Here Mr. Torres runs musical comedy and five reel features from Metro, Triangle, World, Paralta and Goldwyn, with all of the First National products, filling in his bill with old and new Chaplins, L-KO comedies and the Al Christie "sure firers," as he says.

Business Good Even with Roof Off.

Business has been very good, despite the fact that no roof was on. The dew kept many people away, but when the covering was completed the fans flocked to this place, as seats are always available and the atmosphere is comfortable.

The Amusu building is a large one, near the La Brisa dancing hall, skating rink and bathhouse. On either side of the lobby are stores which bring in part of the return on the investment; one an ice cream parlor, and the other a lunch room.

Mr. Torres is optimistic and thinks the city will be a Mecca for winter tourists and summer vacationists when the new "East Coast" hotel is completed. The Key West Athletic club is just a block away, and many come to his show before going there to the dances.

Of this place more to say would be immaterial, and only for a travel magazine, but if you want a vacation that will take you far away and still be in the states go to Key West.

JAPANESE BUYING SMALLER THEATRES

Now Own Ten in Seattle's Downtown District—Learn American Business Methods Quickly

THE feeling of alarm with which the news of the purchase of theatres by Japanese was first received in Seattle film circles is gradually dying out, since ten of the smaller downtown theatres are now owned and operated by members of the Nippon race who have consistently shown an attitude of fairness and honesty in their competitive methods and in their dealings with exchanges and with their employes. The Japanese exhibitors are adapting themselves to American business conditions rapidly.

E. Fujitomi, the man who acted as purchasing agent and is supervising the management of seven of the ten theatres now owned by Japanese in Seattle, during an interview with the World correspondent seemed anxious that the trade should understand the attitude of the Japanese owners.

Have Welfare of Business at Heart.

"Japanese living in Seattle want to invest their money here," he said, "but there are only three business lines open to them, truck farming, the hotel business and the motion picture business. In entering the motion picture business we are not trying to take away from Americans as much money as possible and give nothing in return. We are interested in improving the general conditions of the business, and we want to give our employes, who are invariably Americans, a square deal. We always co-operate with the unions, and our operators will be found to be as well if not better satisfied than those working in American-owned theatres. Neither are we trying to dominate prices of film. We realize that the producer must be paid according to scale, if he is to continue to produce good pictures, and we are willing to pay our share."

The ten theatres owned by Japanese in Seattle are the Class A, the Palace, the Occidental, the Bison, the Jackson, the Flag, the High Class, the Victory, the Electric, and the Atlas. All of these except the Class A, the Flag, and the Victory are in the lower downtown section of the city. These three are near Pike street, the main cross street of the upper shopping section of the city. The first seven named are those supervised by Mr. Fujitomi. He organized a different corporation for the purchase of each house, and a different house manager looks after the daily routine at each one.

Movement Began Last Autumn.

The theatre buying movement began among the Japanese in Seattle only last autumn. Before that only one or two of the smallest downtown theatres were owned by them. The Class A, with a seating capacity of 600, is the largest now owned by them. The Atlas, a description of which appeared in these columns a few weeks ago, is the newest and finest. It is owned by Messrs. Yamada and Kaita. The Victory is operated by Fred K. Nagaro, who converted a store building on Third avenue into the theatre just a few months ago. This house is excellently located just off Pike street and is already a success.

Koerpel Praises Japanese.

Japanese theatre managers have recently been accorded no small amount of praise from J. A. Koerpel, manager of the Seattle World Film Exchange, for their cordial co-operation with the Government in showing official war films. Mr. Koerpel states that, with the exception of James Q. Clemmer and Joseph Danz, the only Seattle exhibitors who have booked the official pictures, "America's Answer," and "Under Four Flags," are Japanese. He declares that they take the attitude of showing these pictures because the Government wants them to do it, not stopping to ask each time if the subjects will pay. Their experience with the war pictures justifies their business judgment, however, as well as showing their loyalty to the Government. They have invariably made money on the official pictures.

ANDERSON.

Ashley Miller

Producer and director of "Made in America," published and distributed by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, appealing to some of "the boys" in camp to "play German" in the series. It took Miller some time to convince these sturdy doughboys that it was necessary for some of them to don the hated field gray of the Hun warrior. Needless to say he got his quota, but the Yanks were mighty glad to get into their khaki after the shot.

Strand to Show "The Better Ole."

The first booking of "The Better 'Ole," or "The Romance of Old Bill," in photoplay form will be in the Strand Theatre, New York, where it is underlined for the week of February 16. This will mark the first time in the history of motion pictures in New York City where a current play is being presented at the same time in pictures. World Pictures, which has the rights of distribution of the picture version of this one of the big theatrical successes of the season is able to offer this attraction to exhibitors by arrangement with Charles B. Cochrane, who produced it as a play in England. "The Better 'Ole," or "The Romance of Old Bill," is a screen adaptation of Bruce Bairnsfather's celebrated cartoons assisted by Arthur Elliott. It was directed by George Pierson and made by the Welsh Pierson Films.

To show the marvelous box office value of this feature picture, it is only necessary to point to the fact that the play is now running to capacity audiences at the Cort Theatre, New York City and is also being played by five other companies routed to cover the United States.

Franklin to Direct Mary Pickford.

By permission of Joseph M. Schenck, president of the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation, Sidney A. Franklin left for Los Angeles January 8 to direct Mary Pickford in "Come Out of the Kitchen." It was intended that Chester Withey should direct Miss Talmadge's next film vehicle, but owing to his severe illness—he has just had an attack of influenza and is not expected to be up and around for at least four weeks—Mr. Schenck has engaged Robert Leonard to make one picture with Miss Talmadge in the absence of both Mr. Franklin and Mr. Withey.

VITAGRAPH CHIEFS HOLD CONVENTION

Hundred Per Cent Attendance at Three-Day Session Discuss Matters of Great Importance

LAST week witnessed a concentration of Vitagraph enthusiasm and energy in New York City that was unique, not only in Vitagraph history, but that probably will be far-reaching in its results.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, called to New York all of the branch managers and division managers of his organization and held a three-day convention, at which the out of town representatives of the Vitagraph company conferred with the executives of the home office and the officials of the Vitagraph studios.

The convention began on Thursday morning, January 2, at the Hotel McAlpin, when John M. Quinn, general manager of the Vitagraph sales organization, called the first business meeting to order with a hundred per cent. attendance from every branch of the big Vitagraph organization. The entire day was spent in a business session and was followed by a banquet at the Hotel McAlpin on Thursday evening, which Mr. Smith gave to his sales force and his studio heads, thus bringing together both branches of his organization in a happy gathering.

On Friday the branch managers visited the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn in a body and after a tour of the big plant, meeting the stars and directors, they went into a business session.

Look Over Twenty Reels of New Stuff.

Returning to New York Friday evening, the entire gathering met in the projection room at the Vitagraph home offices and about twenty reels of new Vitagraph product was screened for the first time.

All day Saturday was occupied by the final business meeting at the McAlpin, and Saturday afternoon the convention adjourned, the branch managers returning immediately to their exchange.

The immense importance to the Vitagraph Company of this convention cannot be overestimated and the interchange of ideas is certain to result in a more intensive co-operative effort between the producing and the distributing ends than has heretofore been known in any organization in the film business.

Mr. Smith was enabled to get at first hand the reports of his branch managers from every center of the country and they were able to get from Mr. Smith, at first hand, his plans and projects.

John M. Quinn, who recently became general manager of the Vitagraph sales organization, met each one of his lieutenants personally, told them what he counted on in the way of accomplishment from the sales organization and received their assurances that 1919 was going to be the biggest year in the history of the company.

Just Who Were Present.

All of Vitagraph's branch managers were present—George R. Allison, C. W. Sawin, F. E. Tarbell, J. R. Johnson, C. L. Kendall, J. H. Baylsy, A. G. Edwards, J. M. Duncan, F. F. Nine, W. H. Hepburn, E. S. Holmes, J. A. Gagnier, Frank P. Bryan, Joseph Partridge, L. A. Getzler, J. S. Hebrew, F. W. Redfield, K. B. Quive, F. A. Wagner, D. E. Boswell, L. M. Cobbs, R. Romnay, F. F. Hartich, W. F. Barrett, E. Wilson and A. M. Wilbur, being the twenty-six Vitagraph exchange managers from the important centers in the United States and Canada.

Mr. Smith's studio staff attending the convention with him included Wilfrid North, production manager; R. A. Reader, business manager; Eugene Mullin, of the scenario department, and Frank Loomis, studio manager.

Mr. Quinn headed the home office delegation, which included A. W. Goff, assistant general manager; E. Auger, division manager; T. W. Chatburn, division manager; Paul N. Lazarus, advertising and publicity director; J. Lawton Kendrick, sales promotion manager; A. I. Siegel, head of the purchasing department, and Richard Hildreth, chief auditor of the company.

In addition to all of the foregoing, the other guests at the banquet on Thursday night included Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, Cyrus Townsend Brady, Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, James P. Hurd, George Randolph Chester, Harry T. Morey, Dwight Cleveland, J. B. French, M. Henry-Houry, George Balsdon, Jr., William Wright, Walter Bunyon, Tom Mills, Joseph Gleason, Don Bartlett, Tom Terriss, Graham Baker and Philip Lang.

Herbert E. Hancock.

Hancock To Be Manager of Producing Company

HERBERT E. HANCOCK, director of the motion picture bureau of the Y. M. C. A., has resigned from that post to accept the position of managing director for a new producing company soon to make its debut in the motion picture field. Mr. Hancock's final act for the Y. M. C. A. was to produce a special feature taking in the shipbuilding activities at Hog Island, which is to be released through the exchanges of the Educational Films Corporation of America on January 31.

The film is entitled "Bringing the Boys Back Home," and besides showing the benefits received by the skilled worker it carries a human interest story throughout, which centers around a shipbuilder, his wife and his baby.

Myron Selznick Travels to the Coast.

Wednesday evening, January 9, Myron Selznick departed for Los Angeles. Mr. Selznick goes to see for himself what can be done in the line of advancing his own producing company. Whether he would produce his pictures in the West or in the East Mr. Selznick did not say. Probably his trip will decide the matter.

MAY GIVE LOCAL OPTION TO NEW YORK

Possibility That State Legislators Will Take That Step to Eliminate Confusion of Situation

WITH a decision from the second department of the Appellate Division legalizing Sunday motion picture shows and with a diametrically opposite decision from the third department of the Appellate Division, and with Justice George McCann recently handing down a decision vacating an injunction restraining the police from closing the motion picture houses in Binghamton on Sunday, and with every prospect of an attempt on the part of the state organization of motion picture men to secure statewide legislation which will serve to remove the confusion of the present and permit Sunday movies throughout the Empire State, those interested in the business are today wondering what the outcome will be when the Legislature finally gets down to work and to a consideration of the many hundreds of bills that will be submitted.

There is a strong belief now that the matter will finally be so adjusted that it will be a question of local option, leaving it to the residents of each municipality to decide whether or not they shall have Sunday movies "in their midst." Already the city of Watertown is looking forward to the time when it will be able to entertain its 30,000 residents with Sunday shows. During the last few days petitions have been left in many of the business places and in the lobbies of motion picture houses of that city, with the result that over 3,000 signatures have been secured as the first move toward showing the attitude of the city in general.

Would put on Best Shows for Sunday.

"We are endeavoring to give the residents of this city the highest type of pictures," said one of the owners of a large motion picture house in Watertown a few days ago. "We believe that if permission is given us to operate on Sunday we can perhaps furnish a higher grade of picture and entertain the men and women of this city on the Sabbath in a way that will soon convince the city fathers that Sunday movies are no more harmful in Watertown than in Syracuse, Troy and other cities throughout the state, where actual statistics reveal the fact that Sunday motion picture shows reduce immorality and associate crimes."

There is no question but that the Sunday motion picture proposition at the present time is a complicated one. For instance, in New York City, the houses are running under what is termed the "Gaynor opinion." The Bender case, a test case to determine whether or not Sunday movies could prevail in this city, is still hanging fire in the Court of Appeals, and up to the present time there has been no notice for argument. Sunday movies prevail in Troy as the result of action on the part of Justice Hasbrouck in granting an injunction which restrained the authorities from interference and which in a way is still pending.

As matters now stand, exhibitors in some cities are reaping a financial reward and looking at the question from the eye of the public, tens of thousands of persons are being given a good, wholesome and clean entertainment which is deprived to others through the complexity of legal decisions.

Legislature Would Treat Cities Alike.

It is reasonably certain to expect some effort will be made in the Legislature to clear up this tangled condition of affairs. "We feel that whatever is right for one city is fair for other cities of this state," said one of the exhibitors of this city who has been closely identified with legislation. "We want the enactment of a law which will cover the showing of pictures Sunday, rather than the slipshod way that now prevails. We want it for all or for none."

Just who will sponsor the bill which will come before the Legislature is still a question. Senator William Carson, who has been identified to a considerable extent with motion picture matters during the last two years, has no intimation up to the present as to who is drafting the discussed bill or its scope. The expression is made, however, in both houses, that an attempt will be made this year to relieve existing conditions with a law which will either give Sunday movies in every city or will make it a matter of local option, or will prohibit them altogether. Whatever is done, however, and whatever action is contemplated by the motion picture organization, it now seems certain that such will come on the one hand early in the session, and on the other hand, if effective, the dilatory methods of the past two years on the part of the motion picture men, must be replaced by early and concerted action.

State Legislators Favor Local Option Movement

A NUMBER of New York up-state exhibitors received special invitations to the inaugural of Governor Al Smith at Albany on January 1 in acknowledgment of the use of their screens in his recent campaign. Among those who attended were Jules Michaels of Buffalo, Mr. Dillon of Ithaca, W. H. Linton of Utica, Morris Solomon of Schenectady, Fred Elliott and George Roberts of Albany, Sidney Cohen, president of the New York Exhibitors' State League, Charles O'Reilly of New York City and Samuel Berman of Brooklyn.

During and after the inaugural reception the exhibitors took occasion to feel out the general sentiment of the senators and assemblymen who were in Albany at the time concerning Sunday opening and the advisability of presenting the bill for local option. The consensus of opinions expressed was in favor of it, and it was determined by the exhibitors, in caucus assembled in the evening, that the bill must be purely and exclusively an exhibitors' movement, based on the desires of the communities in which they are doing business. It must be free from the pecuniary benefits to be derived from the favorable passage of such a bill. No other interests but those of exhibitors and of the public must enter into it. In other words it must not have the semblance of gain or profit. It must be introduced and determined entirely upon its merits.

It was the opinion that much care and judgment must be exercised in the selection of the men in presenting and discussing the subject before the senatorial committee, if a hearing is granted. Without doubt the majority of legislative representatives are convinced of the influence of the screen upon the public mind and they are willing to vote on its power for good on Sunday as well as the other six days of the week.

Convertible One-Sheet for "Little Women."

The Famous Players-Lasky advertising department has issued for general circulation to exhibitors a one-sheet, lately mailed to every address on the theatre list. It is designed both as a direct "sales talk" to showmen, and is folded in a manner to give eight pages for various arguments and "boosts" for "Little Women," the release they have ready with Louisa M. Alcott's famous juvenile story. When the sheet is finally unfolded to its full extent there is shown a one-sheet advertisement suitable for posting on a lobby-board or framing as an announcement with proper dating.

EARNINGS DEPEND ON WHOLE PROGRAM

Ricord Gradwell of World Film Says So-Called "Filler" Must Be Highest Grade Entertainment

SOME of the reasons why "Kinograms," the new twice-a-week news reel, to be released beginning February 1, was created and the point of view behind it are set forth by Ricord Gradwell of the World Film Corporation in a discussion issued this week.

Mr. Gradwell draws an interesting parallel between the development of the quality idea in dramatic film and in topical film.

"We are just now entering the period of real art production in one-reel and short-length pictures, including the news reel," says Mr. Gradwell. "The exhibitor was early to recognize the higher value of the 'feature' dramatic film and its star values.

"Meanwhile, with all of his attention on the somewhat exaggerated importance of the star and the 'feature,' the exhibitor continued to buy his short lengths, including the new reels, with the indifference of the old-time nickelodeon days, when so many reels were so many reels of show regardless of everything but age.

"Now with the leadership of such men as Rothapfel, McCormick, Grauman and others before them the nation's theatres have come to a recognition that the repute of the house and its earnings depend quite as much on one reel as another. They are beginning to demand that what they once called 'filler' shall not be filler, but high-grade film of the highest possible entertainment value.

"This situation gives to 'Kinograms' its greatest opportunity. Kinograms cannot and will not compete with the producers concerned in making news reels for the sake of volume only down to a price instead of up to a standard. The exhibitor is no longer able to afford a cheap news reel. The difference in price is little; the difference in box office and in institutional value to the theatre is great.

Day of News Reel De Luxe Is Here.

"The days of the news reel de luxe—a reel which will bear comparison in its treatments and qualities with the best that the screen has done in dramatic art and spectacle production—is here.

"Exhibitor and public alike have been educated to an interest in topical film by the war to a degree which indicates at least a 30 per cent. wider market for the news reel than in 1914.

War Pictures Glorified News Reels.

"Theatres which never before played a picture of topical character and which looked upon drama and comedy as the sole entertainment elements of the motion picture have run the big war pictures—which are, indeed, but glorified news reels—and have found great box office value in them. The war pictures also have brought to the theatres a patronage previously untouched in show merchandising methods. People who previously could ignore the motion picture could not afford to ignore the motion picture's report of the war. They have gone to the theatre and they will continue to go to the theatre if they continue to find there film which appeals to their intelligent topical interests.

"In this connection the international character of Kinograms with its important foreign connections is of special value. America has come out of the war a new nation—a world power instead of an insular people. America is interested in all the world today, with a feeling of kinship and intimate interest that replaces the tourist curiosity of other days. 'Yankee Doodle' is learning, as the song goes, 'to parlez vous Francaise,' and millions of homes have a heart interest in all the world beyond France, Italy, England, Germany, Siberia. No land is outlandish today. The news pictures from all the world are now and henceforth a matter of America's immediate concern."

Mr. Brunton Makes a Statement.

Robert Brunton of Los Angeles sends a message to the Moving Picture World which we print herewith, with an expression of regret for the mistake to which he calls our attention.

"In a story about Miss Alma Rubens published in your issue of January 4 Charles Greenberg and Franklin Hutton are referred to as 'controllers of the Brunton studios in Los Angeles,'" says Mr. Brunton. "Such statement about those gentlemen is without the slightest foundation. Mr. Greenberg has no financial interest whatever in Brunton studios, while Mr. Hutton is interested only in a nominal degree in the organization. The stock control, management and determination of policy of the Brunton studios rest with myself, as has been the case ever since the inception of the studios."

January 5 Attractions at New York Theatres

RIALTO.—Dorothy Gish in the Paramount production, "The Hope Chest," from Mark Lee Luther's book of the same title, was the film star at the Rialto the week of January 5. The support includes Richard Barthelmess, George Fawcett and Sam De Grasse. A new Robert C. Bruce scenic entitled "The River Gray and the River Green," a comedy and the Rialto animated Magazine were also shown. Gladys Rice and Vincente Ballester were the soloists.

STRAND.—Fred Stone in his second Artcraft production, "Under the Top," headed the program at the Strand. John Emerson and Anita Loos are the authors of the story. Ella Hall is a member of the cast. Other screen numbers were a Herbert Lloyd comedy, the Strand Topical Review, and "Analysis of Motion." Lona Laske and Charles Formes were the vocal artists.

RIVOLI.—Norma Talmadge in "The Heart of Wetona," taken from the Belasco stage play, was the featured screen favorite at the Rivoli. The picture was directed by Sydney A. Franklin. Thomas Meighan, Gladden James and Fred Huntley are the leading support. The Rivoli Animated Pictorial, a Prizma natural color picture and a cartoon were also on the program.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET.—First half, Billie Rhodes in "The Girl of My Dreams." Latter half, Maurice Tourneur's "Woman."

BROADWAY.—Third week of "The Heart of Humanity."

"FIGHTING ROOSEVELTS" NOT HELD UP

Frederick Collins Says Death of Great American Won't Interfere with Release of Screen Biography

IN view of the sudden death of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt the question has naturally arisen among motion picture exhibitors as to what effect the colonel's death will have on "The Fighting Roosevelts," the authorized film based upon the life and works of Theodore Roosevelt.

Frederick L. Collins, producer of the Roosevelt picture, feels the death of Colonel Roosevelt profoundly, and is naturally reluctant under the present grievous circumstances to express himself. But in response to nation-wide inquiries, and in recognition of the fact that the trade is justified in wanting to know what his plans are in regard to this authentic picture of the life of the great ex-president, he has given out the assurance that there appears no probability of a hold-up in the issue of the film.

From information issued by McClure Productions before the death of the colonel was announced it is learned that in this Roosevelt picture the motion picture field is fortunate in possessing the latest, most complete and authentic biography of this great American now in existence. Much will be published in the newspapers and magazines concerning the life of this man, who, in spite of his early physical handicap, fought his way up to be the most dominant personality in American life; but nothing will equal in sympathetic interest this film production that, based on material furnished by the colonel and his close friends, dramatically reproduces his career from birth to death.

Colonel Suggested Finishing Touches.

In Mr. Collins' possession is the colonel's personally dictated memorandum, suggesting the finishing touches that will make the film exactly as he wanted it produced. Now that these have been incorporated in the film they give the picture the colonel's final stamp of authenticity.

Interesting, too, in this connection is the following extract from a letter now in the possession of Frederick L. Collins, by which Colonel Roosevelt gives his unqualified approval of the scenario:

"Dear Mr. Collins: I approve your production of a scenario and picture based on my life and works. Moreover, I authorize you to state that this is the only scenario which I have approved, and that I will not for twelve months from this date consent or agree to the production, or advertising, or distributing of any other film based on my life or any of my works, or in which I am made to appear in my own person, or as represented by another person, or in which my name is in any way connected, except under your supervision and with your consent. Yours sincerely,

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

Closest Friends Collaborated.

Another interesting fact in regard to the Roosevelt picture is that it was a labor of love on the part of his close friends and warm admirers. The scenario was based in part on the colonel's own literary works and in part on dramatic incidents in his own career that have never appeared on the screen or in the printed page. The adaptation of this material to picture purposes was the work of an editorial board, headed by Mr. Collins, and the significant fact is that each well-known writer who served on this board knew the colonel intimately and was expert in translating the ex-president's own words into a sympathetic and yet dramatic and entertaining motion picture.

Another main point of interest is that William Nigh, director of "My Four Years in Germany," a man noted among exhibitors for his remarkable skill in selecting characters and in faithfully reproducing historic settings, has directed the Roosevelt picture and has fully lived up to his previous successes in picturing the various stages of Colonel Roosevelt's career. Always in close touch with the writers and those in charge of the production of the picture was the colonel himself.

Late Head of "The Fighting Roosevelts"

Thoroughly characteristic of the patriotic and noble-hearted Roosevelt is the fact that Colonel Roosevelt made the express provision that his share of the profits in the production of this picture should go to the Red Cross and other war activities.

Announcement of the release date of "The Fighting Roosevelts" will be made shortly.

On Wednesday, January 8, the day of the funeral of Colonel Roosevelt, the McClure offices were closed out of respect to his memory.

Exhibitors Pass Resolutions of Regret.

A meeting of the Exhibitors' League of New York City for the election of officers for 1919 was called to order by the president, John Manheimer, Tuesday, January 7, at 3 p. m. The following resolution was presented and unanimously adopted:

"WHEREAS, We learn with profound regret of the sad loss sustained by this nation in the death of Theodore Roosevelt, one of its former presidents and most beloved sons. Therefore, be it resolved, that this organization go on record as expressing the sympathy of its members to the bereaved widow and family of our late lamented and beloved ex-President, Theodore Roosevelt, and that all the members of this organization be, and they hereby are, requested, as tribute to the memory of the said Theodore Roosevelt, to place at half-mast the national emblem on their theatres, and as a further mark of respect this, the annual meeting of our organization, stands adjourned for one week; and that a copy of this resolution, duly authenticated, be forwarded to the bereaved family."

Labor Federation Aid Asked in Warm Censorship Battle

ASSISTANCE of the American Federation of Labor has been asked by President Percy W. Wells to help fight the North Carolina censorship movement at the session of the General Assembly, which opened in Raleigh January 8. President Wells has addressed a letter to Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, requesting that he issue an appeal to all labor organizations within the State of North Carolina to actively oppose the state censorship of pictures, and action from Mr. Gompers is expected before the week is out.

Realizing that the state censorship idea only gives opportunity for various interests to bring influences to bear to further their particular propaganda to suppress pictures to which they may be opposed, and having on record some notorious cases of German influences being brought to bear during the war to suppress pictures which were opposed to German interests, the Federation of Labor has become opposed to any legalized censorship of pictures. They were very active in fighting the recent movement for censorship in Virginia.

The National Board of Review has been furnished lists of the North Carolina Senators and Representatives for the new legislature and is bombarding them with direct letters and literature upon the censorship proposition.

Representative L. Clayton Grant, prominent in legislative circles, and the representative of Mr. Wells' district, is out flatfooted as opposed to any censorship of pictures. Mr. Grant is prominently mentioned for speaker of the House of Representatives at the coming session of the General Assembly, and will be in a position to wield a powerful influence.

Gunning Removes to Los Angeles.

Fred (Wid) Gunning will leave New New York City about January 15 with his family for Los Angeles, where he expects to make his permanent home. He will take charge of the Coast office of "Wid's." The publication of "Wid's" will continue under the present management in New York. It is "Wid's" intention to make a trip East every four months.

Musicians secure employment and managers are provided with competent orchestras or piano players through The World's Classified Advertising Department.

REPORTS SHOW INFLUENZA WANES

Many Cities Lift Restrictions on Seating and Ban on Children—Kansas District Houses Reopening

THE week's reports from the correspondents of the Moving Picture World on the influenza situation show that the scourge is rapidly on the wane, and indicate that business with the exhibitors will soon be restored to normal.

In Spokane the restrictions on the seating capacity of theatres has been lifted, while in many Kentucky and Ohio towns the ban on the attendance of children has been removed. St. Louis rescinds the order prohibiting the operation of theatres, and the houses in Kansas and Missouri, which were closed again on account of a recurrence of the malady a few weeks ago, are reopening rapidly.

Business with exhibitors in the San Francisco district is improving materially. The report from the Southwestern territory shows that the influenza has vanished, leaving only two small towns in the states of Oklahoma, Texas and Arkansas still closed on account of the disease. In Indiana the epidemic is practically a thing of the past, with only one town still in its grip.

There was a jump in the number of new cases in Seattle, but the situation is not serious enough to cause a closing. In Oregon it is estimated that twenty-six towns are still under the ban.

Restrictions Lifted in Kentucky.

While the influenza epidemic tarried a trifle longer in some of the Kentucky towns across the river than in Cincinnati, and while some of the health authorities on the other side thought it best to keep their restrictions in force a little longer than Cincinnati did, all are permitting moving picture theatres to admit children as well as adults. Dayton and Bellevue, the two towns furthest east on the Ohio, being just across from the East Walnut Hills section of Cincinnati, were the last to lift the ban, and they made the situation 100 per cent. free from the moving picture standpoint.

Spokane Lifts Restrictions.

So far as the theatres were concerned the second influenza quarantine ban, which limited the capacity of Spokane houses to every other row of seats, was raised January 1, and all theatres were filled to capacity at every performance. The ban on dances has not been raised.

Southwest Clear of Influenza.

Influenza vanished from the Southwestern territory as suddenly as it made its second appearance. Only two small towns in the states of Oklahoma, Texas and Arkansas are closed on account of influenza, according to reports available from Dallas film exchanges. These two towns are Menard, Texas, and Alvah, Oklahoma. Openings have been coming in rapidly during the past couple of weeks, and exhibitors from all parts of the Southwest report that the public has finally lost all fear of theatre attendance and that the shows are crowded.

Indiana Practically Free of Grip.

Although the epidemic of Spanish influenza is just about a thing of the past in Indiana at the present time, there is one city in the state that is having a dreadful time with the disease and that city is Connersville. Although a rigid quarantine has been established in the hope of preventing further spreading of the disease, the health authorities have not ordered the theatres to be closed.

Instead of closing the shows the health authorities have ordered the exhibitors and theatre managers to use only 50 per cent. of the seating capacity of the houses. The patrons of the houses have to take seats given to them by the ushers, and as a result the audiences are seated in a checker-board fashion, every other seat being vacant. This same rule has been put in force in the churches and at all public meetings. The Vaudette and Auditorium theatres are alternating with each other in keeping open.

San Francisco Business Improves.

The influenza situation in the San Francisco territory has improved materially of late, and it is believed that the closing of theatres is about at an end. No more towns have been placed under quarantine during the past week, while in several places theatres have reopened after having been closed most of the time for the past two months. In San Francisco business is showing a steady improvement.

Children Barred in Louisville.

Due to a return attack of influenza, principally among children, Louisville theatres have not been permitted to admit children under fourteen years of age for the past two weeks or more, and have been forced to limit attendance to seating capacity. This has been a blow to the outlying theatres, and has interfered with business in the downtown houses. Tickets are sold for actual seating capacity only. When four or six persons enter a theatre as a party they are not permitted to stand until the desired number of adjoining seats can be found, but must take seats wherever they are to be found. This has caused much trouble and numerous arguments. However, the doorman announces the number of seats and admits that many people. In addition inspectors have been placed in the theatres by the board of health, and any person apparently suffering from bad colds are asked to leave. The theatres have had to pay the salaries of the inspectors assigned. Locally the situation is much better than it has been, and indications are that all regulations will be lifted shortly.

Far West Reports New Cases.

Nearly all the cities and towns of Western Washington and Oregon are reporting another increase in new influenza cases and in deaths resulting from it. In Seattle a jump from 80 new cases on December 30 to 103 on December 31, accompanied by reports of 10 deaths, brought forth a warning from the city health commissioner that unless people took more precautions he would again have to resort to drastic measures to stop the continued spread of the epidemic.

At present there are not more than a dozen towns in the state closed, but the situation in Oregon is more serious, the number of closed towns in that state being listed in Northwest exchanges at 26. Salem, the capital, was closed during the holiday week.

Kansas District Houses Reopening.

Kansas and Missouri picture theatres are gradually getting out from under the influenza ban. About half the theatres in these states are now operating again, and the prospects are that this list will be materially increased by the middle of January. The subsidence of the epidemic in Kansas City has been rapid. Business is coming back slowly.

The order issued in Kansas City prohibiting the admission of children under sixteen years old was observed for a day or so and then disregarded, as it was in Kansas City, Kan. The exhibitors took the position that they would allow the board of health to bar a child from the show, or ask him to leave the theatre.

The board of health did not provide inspectors to see whether children entered shows or not, and gradually normal conditions were restored. It is worth noting that the exhibitors did not surreptitiously disregard the order. One of them frankly told the board that he would admit children, and other exhibitors would do the same, since stores were not required to bar children.

St. Louis Lifts Ban.

The influenza ban, which has been in force in St. Louis for several weeks, has been lifted following a consultation between Dr. Max C. Starkloff, health commissioner, and his assistant, Dr. G. A. Jordan. Under the new order schools will be opened, there will be no restrictions on crowds in stores or theatres and permits for large gatherings will be unnecessary.

Large crowds should be avoided when possible, Dr. Jordan says. He also pointed out that theatre owners should keep their places well ventilated and restrict their crowds to seating capacity. Children may now attend theatres and may enter stores.

Gerard to See "Heart of Humanity."

"The Heart of Humanity," the Jewel super-drama, has begun its third week at the Broadway Theatre, New York, and the film continues to attract capacity crowds to each showing. Manager Kashin of the theatre has invited the commanders of the Atlantic Fleet to a showing of the film January 10, and James W. Gerard, former ambassador to Germany, will view the film during the week, as have also Secretary of the Navy Daniels and other high governmental officials. Manager Kashin stated that the film played to 40 per cent. more business the second week of the showing than it did the initial week.

Miss Alissa Franc Marries.

Miss Alissa Franc, secretary to Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, went over to Philadelphia Saturday and came back Sunday as Mrs. Joseph Keir. The marriage culminates a romance of excellent motion picture quality, beginning with the end of the world war and the assignment of Captain Joseph Keir, of the Motor Transport Service, to New York. Captain Keir is a motorist and automobile authority of note in civil life.

Miss Franc, incidentally, is a magazine writer and the author of a number of books.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

THE latest word that comes from Albany is that there will be action at the present session of the New York Legislature designed to remove the mixed situation that exists at the present time. Just now exhibitors in different parts of the state are operating or not operating on Sundays under three nonconforming judicial decisions. It would seem that the proponents of local option, who would give to each community the power to say whether pictures shall be shown on Sunday, have the best chance of getting favorable consideration on the part of the legislators. Owing to the discussions of the past two or three years Senators and Assemblymen are far better acquainted with the views of their constituents on this subject than they were formerly. Also it is likely they will be as glad as any one to have removed from their legislative path an obstacle which has given them much concern.

ENCOURAGING reports continue to flow in on the epidemic situation. Influenza cases are declining. Scourge it has been, in every sense of the word. It has taken from us notable men in the trade; it has stopped the income or materially lessened the profits of practically every branch of the motion picture industry. In the passing of the grim visitor we may all breathe easier and express the hope that his return will be long delayed.

* * *

THE resignation of Samuel L. Rothapfel from the managing directorship of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres will arouse lively interest, and speculation as well. The militant figure of Broadway has done much to popularize motion pictures, to bring to their support a larger clientele. He has done this directly through his own work as a theatre director. Perhaps his influence has been largest, however, through his advice delivered in many talks to his fellow-managers in all parts of the country. The sum and substance of this has been: Feature your house first and the individual units of your show afterward; in other words, blend the performance. The announcement of the details of his future activities will be awaited with interest. The congratulations of the trade will go to the new director of the Rialto and Rivoli, Hugo Riesenfeld.

THERE is material for real satisfaction in the report that comes to the World from its Chicago correspondent that the two former exhibitor organizations will work in harmony. If there cannot be a getting together on the part of all branches of the industry the next best thing is that there shall be no division in the exhibitor branch. The suggested title of National Exhibitors' Association has a businesslike sound, and, come to think of it, there is no body of men in the world—not even novelists—who have a keener appreciation of the value that lies in a title than do the exhibitors. The working out of the plans of Messrs. Schaefer, Frank and Rembusch and their associates will be watched with close interest by all exhibitors.

PRODUCERS may be interested in the decision of the Kansas board of censors to sharpen their scissors for the cutting out of phrases verging on profanity. One of the woman members of the board announces that many expressions that passed while the war was on will in the future be banned. "There is not the same necessity for keeping strung up to a high pitch of emotion with reference to the war and foreign and domestic affairs," she says. God bless her innocent and well-meaning soul! If it is for the returning soldiers that she fears, her good intentions are wasted. To the soldier profanity is part of the air he breathes—and the habit is so strong that language not popular in mixed society is said to be even more in use when that air is strained through a nose-pinching gas mask. War always popularizes profanity—it is bound to do that where men are gathered in large numbers without the restraint of the society of women—even as it brutalizes; even as it ennobles men; it makes the laying down of one life for another all in a day's work, many times not even seen, or, if observed, not considered worthy of special report.

RED CROSS PICTURES

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THIS is an era of human comparison. Under the softening influences of united effort and common sacrifice our native kindness of heart has shown itself plainly, our sympathies breaking through the husk of commercial selfishness, and the right sort of Red Cross picturings may do much to crystalize this sentiment to the end that it shall endure in our future relations to one another. Whatever broadening and elevating influences have emerged from the brutality of war should be preserved in our national character.

Why not take advantage of this state of public opinion?

Why not show that public interest is supreme in peace?

We are not as we were—the war has changed us.

The Red Cross organization stands in evidence of this—it is a great ideal which war has materialized and perfected, a beautiful dream that came true because it represents more truly than conquest what is deep in our aspirations—it has become an expression of ourselves. We have all given it support, most of us at a time when we could least afford to do so, but none the less willingly on that account—now it is coming to exhibitors with a series of releases to be shown all over the country.

The exhibitor must be considered in making these pictures.

His public depends on him for entertainment and enlightenment.

His public will stay away if he exhibits an inferior product.

That public is today the American people, a large percentage of them accustomed to think along progressive lines. Those who have not reached a development where they can think for themselves are always ready, almost eager, to consider what is practical and timely, so audience receptivity is not at fault if these Red Cross offerings fail of their object.

It is a fine art to stir people up to a great forward step.

It cannot be done by anchoring to the conventional.

Appeals for economic betterment should come from high intelligence.

Notwithstanding the fact that the purpose of Red Cross picturings is obviously unselfish, that fact is too commonly known to need preachment at this late day, hence mere propaganda is liable to prove far from satisfying to motion picture audiences. They have been surfeited with that sort of thing. In order to solidify the present humanitarian tendencies such realism as the Red Cross care of orphan children argues its own case.

There is a great thought involved in those childhood pictures.

They will be studied with deep interest wherever shown.

They shape public opinion with the plain truth.

Wherever it is possible to entertainingly and instructively illustrate how the future generation of France is being shaped along sane and progressive lines by the Red Cross organization, where it is clearly and forcibly pointed out how early environment formulates the human being, his soul even more than his body, there will be silently argued the necessity of guiding our own little ones away from ignorance and false education.

The Red Cross thus solves the problem of government paternalism.

It may become the guardian of little unfortunates in our own land. Therein lies a suggestion for what is known as "educationals."

The methods of instruction, whether those of Montessori or of other modern kind, when pleasingly set forth, the manner of presentation counting heavily, will deeply interest women, children and thoughtful grown-ups as well, but idealizations are quite another matter. There are dramatic principles to be considered and audience conditions to think about.

Vitality of subject matter is a prime requisite.

Old subjects are completely outclassed by modern demand.

Use AFTER-THE-WAR characters and action as far as possible.

Avoid harrowing scenes of material and human destruction, leading to the dawn of a new day instead of back to the clouds now fast disappearing, this for the sake of those who have suffered enough quite as well as for the sake of carrying our thoughts brightly and encouragingly forward. Also remember that dull moments weary the silent watchers of moving pictures. These Red Cross releases can be made powerful factors in our progress and in helping us to meet the coming test of our democracy.

HEALTHY! LIVING! GROWING!

By Robert C. McElravy.

"A HEALTHY, living and growing art, full of curiosity and fond of exercise, has an indefeasible mistrust of rigid prohibitions."

Henry James might have been speaking of moving pictures when he wrote the above sentence in "Partial Portraits." But he doubtless had no such thing in mind as the egotistical and upstart screen, even though his words may well be applied to it.

Curiosity! Can there be any better employment for an art than an inquiring interest in everything going on in the world? Clayton Hamilton, in his compendum, "A Manual of the Art of Fiction," calls attention to "curiosity" and "sympathy" as two of the most valuable assets in the artist's kit, and doubtless much of the best creative work of the ages has been directly traceable to these. To be curious about life and to remain sympathetic with it when one's curiosity has brought forth knowledge—that is almost a summary of artistic striving!

Fond of exercise! We might now be almost certain Henry James was referring to moving pictures, were it not for the deplorable fact that "Partial Portraits" was first published in 1888 and the pictures did not come along to cheer us for another decade. But almost anyone will readily agree that the screen has furnished an unquiet art.

Has there ever in the history of the world been such a tremendous stirring of intellectual deadwood as moving pictures have brought about? How they have shaken and disturbed the settled order of things! The youth with his eye glued assiduously to the screen has knowledge today that makes his grandfather tremble with a sudden sense of deprivation. When he starts to tell the boy of the trip he made to the Ozark Mountains, back in 1879, he is astounded to find that the youth has been climbing Mont Blanc and the Himalayas; the movies have carried his winged imagination to the islands of the sea and the uttermost parts of the earth. There is nothing for grandfather to do, in the chagrin of such a discovery, but to tell the boy he must stay away from the movies or he will ruin his eyes.

The screen is ubiquitous, it permeates almost every field of human interest—education, travel, drama, literature, art, industry, science, journalism. Its activities would be insufferable, were it not for the fact that it actually transplants and displaces nothing. It simply adds its fillip of interest and passes on to the next thing.

It would seem that the chief mission of the screen is to publish knowledge of all things to an expectant world. It amplifies the work of established forms of instruction and entertainment. In certain ways it has gone them one better, for its contact with the public is intimate and direct. It has startled the existing order of things tremendously and drawn new lines of demarkation. Education has received a tremendous spur and a new outlet for its teachings; travel has broadened in interest but become at the same time something less of an actual necessity; drama and literature have found a competitor to be reckoned with in the films, but one that should inspire them to better things; art, industry and science find themselves nearer and more comprehensible to the people through the influence of the screen; journalism has found a helpmate of untold value.

Drawing from and lending to each of these great sources of human interest as it does, there is small danger that the moving picture will ever suffer from "rigid prohibitions" of any kind. Its field of activity is apparently an all-embracing one and there should be no fear of lessening interest in the "fierce, white light" that beats upon a screen.

SCRAPPING THE OLD RULES

By Edward Weitzel.

GIVE anything a bad name and it is very apt to stick; give anything a nickname and it sticks forever. Applied to anything or anybody by the general public the nickname is the sign manual of success. It shows a personal feeling toward the thing so designated that corresponds to the friendly regard expressed by curtailing the name Albert to Al. The new Governor just sworn in at Albany is an example in point: He is known universally as Al Smith. Men in every walk of life of his own political creed and out of it speak of him by his nickname. He has earned the respect of all kinds and conditions of men. His dignity has not suffered any loss from the use of the shorter and more familiar first name.

Several years ago the writer was taken to task by the director of a moving picture corporation for alluding to the product of the screen as "the movies." The gentleman thought the use of the term in bad taste, and regretted that the daily press persisted in nicknaming so important and dignified an art. The mass of screen fans took a different view of the matter, and "Let's go to the movies!" became the most popular way of suggesting a visit to a moving picture theatre. The English, who have a curious and everready gift for intimate and iconoclastic slang, have been known to word an invitation after this fashion: "What do you say, old dear, to a visit to a piccy-pal?"

* * *

In the United States we are content with but one nickname for the moving picture, but "the movies" has come to stay. And now the name has received the sanction of no less an authority than the staid and highly respected Harper's Magazine. An article in its February issue, written by Harrison Rhodes, bears the title, "The Majestic Movies." The tone of the paper is gratifyingly laudatory and will make interesting reading to the laity. It is also bound to stimulate recruiting in both the acting and the scenario writing branches of the industry. The monetary rewards are not undervalued in either of the two pursuits. Referring to the latter recipients of the weighty pay envelope the information is given that " . . . if you are good enough at it you can get a salary of a thousand dollars a week through the whole year and need only provide about ten scenarios for one of the queens. It looks easy, but it may confidently be asserted that it is not. There are stories of well-known playwrights who have slaved for weeks at the studios, trying in vain to master the odd, intricate technique of picture-play construction. All the old rules must be thrown upon the junk-heap."

* * *

This closing sentence contains the sort of misinformation that will lead the beginner astray. And it is through the same erroneous theory, or a want of familiarity with the old rules of play construction and the unchanging laws upon which they are based, that many a promising piece of screen fiction comes to naught. Men and women who have exceptional literary ability and understand story writing have taken up the making of scenarios under the delusion that they must pitch the art of the dramatist into the discard. They point to the misshapen and bungling specimens of screen drama that were fashioned from recognized stage plays when photo fiction was in its infancy and contrast them with the leading screen novels of today. There is no argument as to the superiority of the best examples of the newer form of moving pictures. But these pictures are still under the rule, to a greater or lesser degree, of the old laws. It depends upon how near they come to the definition of the word drama as it is comprehended by the practical playwright. However much the form of construction may vary between the stage play and the screen drama, the end sought is the same; and this cannot be attained after all the old rules have been thrown upon the junk-heap.

Kansas Exhibitors Aided by Censors' Co-operation

DURING the past year exhibitors and exchangemen in Kansas territory have for the first time been able to effect such relations with the state board of review of moving pictures as have made the operations of the "censorship" of least disturbance to the industry.

The co-operative spirit has had this result: that the board is inclined to study new ways to help the exhibitor and the exchange, to simplify the procedure of reviewing, to reduce the expense, and to increase the business of exhibitors.

As one exchange manager put it:

"We are not approving censorship—the idea is as repugnant to us as ever. But since the law is on the Kansas books, and the board has to obey it, we can see that our best interests lie in assisting the board in the administration of the law in the best interests of the industry. We are saving ourselves a lot of grief that would be involved in hopeless efforts to secure the annulment of the law and the elimination of censorship—and also avoiding wasted nerve energy.

Renovate Fifty-sixth Street Studio.

The Famous Players Lasky Corporation has decided to renovate the Fifty-sixth street studio by tearing out the old floors and laying a cement flooring on the ground. The offices will be fixed over and made more convenient with added improvements, and a new ventilating system will be installed in the main studio. The decision for altering and making the old place more attractive came after deciding that it would be more convenient to remain at the Fifty-sixth street location than to get a new place farther uptown.

Red Cross Films Cover Varied Subjects—Russian Pictures of Unusual Interest

THE photographic department of the Red Cross, which includes about twenty cameramen, is doing a work of which the general public may not be totally aware. It is busying itself not alone with the making of a photographic record of its own work abroad, but also with the filming of historic records. Many of these pictures will be exhibited in the theatres, and as we have already told our readers, are being released through the General Film Company. They will not, however, be given any regular schedule of release, but will appear at intervals in accord with the material which comes to hand and its adaptability to theatre exhibition.

We must not run away with the idea that the Red Cross films are all about the Red Cross. On the contrary it is getting together a vast quantity of material from all over Europe, which will be not only of educational value, but will be at the same time entertaining. For instance they have on hand at the present time six reels of moving pictures taken in different parts of Russia which contain scenes of varied interest from the riding contests of the Cossacks, in which they rival if not equal the feats of our western cowboys, to the farm yard with its two and four footed inhabitants. One of the subjects which will interest those who see it takes the spectator to the camp of the Battalion of Death, showing the sturdy peasant women at drill, receiving their mail, or practising mimic warfare. Then there are pictures of Moscow showing the Kremlin, the cathedrals and other edifices of architectural interest. Scenes at Kiev are included. There are also the markets to be seen, and some of the industries such as the fishing industry are covered. Workers in a chocolate factory leaving on little ferry boats which transport them over the river to their homes is an interesting sight. Vegetable gardens, which were established by the Red Cross in different parts of the country to help meet the food shortage, are guarded by soldiers in dugouts. Women busy at work in them caring for splendid samples of cabbage, onions, beets and other vegetables can also be seen. In fact if one is lucky enough to see these pictures of a country with whose civil life we are not especially conversant, he will learn considerable that he did not know before.

A couple of films of unusual interest which have been made by the Red Cross, and which have to do particularly with the war work, are "Rebuilding Broken Bodies," a film which reveals the wonderful work which is being done for those who have been unfortunate enough to lose legs and arms, and "New Faces for Old," which shows the method originated by Mrs. Maynard Ladd in her art studio in Paris of replacing by artificial methods portions of faces that have been destroyed in battle. This remarkable thing is done by making a light form of metal gauze over a plaster cast of the face which has been filled in from a former photograph of the maimed person.

We find also that the funds which accumulate from the rental of the films made by the Red Cross are being used for the maintenance of their photographic department here and abroad.

Pictures Show Work of Salvationists in France

AN opportunity to learn of the wonderful work of the Salvation Army behind the front line trenches in France presented itself on the evening of Dec. 27 when about six thousand feet of film photographed by Col. Edward J. Parker during the summer of 1918 was exhibited in Memorial Hall at the Army's headquarters, 122 W. 14th street, New York City. Interspersed with the reels of film were lantern slides which conveyed many scenes of interest which had not been caught by the moving picture camera.

Colonel Parker opened the exhibition himself, and after pointing out on a map of the seat of war the exact route which was followed in reaching the front lines, and the various places near which the Salvation Army's work of mercy was carried on, continued to address to his audience at intervals during the run of the pictures remarks of interest and enlightenment.

These pictures are remarkable for their freedom from scenes of actual battle with which the public has been surfeited. In them we come in touch with the strictly human side of the American doughboy, we learn of the splendid type of womanly womanhood from the ranks of the Salvation Army which responded to the call of mercy and brought within reach of those front line trenches a little bit of home which helped our American boys to weather the strain of the trenches. Portable ranges were set up beside the road, in the fields or anywhere that they happened to be most needed and griddle cakes were cooked and were devoured by passing soldiers as fast as they came from the fire. At headquarters, which might be in a wine seller, a barn or a deserted house, thousands of doughnuts a day were turned out and handed to the boys as they passed to and from the trenches. Pies, too, that might be the envy of many of those back home were made by those splendid women who worked unceasingly from morning until night in improvised kitchens. While at their work, so busy that they could scarcely be induced to stop long enough to let the camera man photograph them in repose, these pictures were taken. They present a record which the Salvation Army may well be proud of, and at the same time one that might be expected of an organization that is always in service in the neediest places, and above all one that answers the call of mercy and supplies the needs of the sufferer, dispensing with the cold ceremony of investigation.

The work of the Salvation Army shown in the pictures was principally in connection with the Chateau Thierry, Argonne Forest, St. Mihiel and Verdun drives. These pictures are to be used for lecture purposes by Colonel Parker and also by Commander Evangeline Booth.

Rivoli Exhibits Prizma Distributed by World Film

ONE of the most startling spectacles in modern photography and which is now being presented by means of the Prizma natural color method encompasses views taken in the crater of the Hawaiian volcano Kilauea. This picture was exhibited at the Rivoli Theatre, New York City, during the week of Dec. 29, and was met with storms of applause. It is not the first time that the natural color presentation of Kilauea has been shown in New York, but it is the first time under the perfected Prizma method which gives as clear a vision of the objects photographed as does the black and white process. The red hot lava breaking at intervals through the partially solidified crust on the lava lake deep down in the crater is one of the most remarkable spectacles that could be witnessed. At other times rivers of lava with fiery crimson edges flow fretfully through gorges created by the eruptions of the volcano.

A series of pictures of educational value made in natural colors by the Prizma, Inc., will be released through the World Film Corporation. These pictures will be issued in one-reel lengths, and judging from what has been seen of the Prizma pictures, each will furnish not merely a "filler" but a one-reel feature which the public will learn to look forward to seeing.

"Vacation Land" at Rialto.

One of the most attractive of recent scenic pictures entitled "Vacation Land" was exhibited at the Rialto Theatre during the week of Dec. 22. This picture was made by Rothacker and is being released through the Exhibitors-Mutual Distributing Corporation. Colorado and the Rockies claim the beauties of this number. Well photographed scenes including panoramas of the mountains, deep vistas of remarkable charm, mirrored lakes and gushing waterfalls. The film is nicely toned and makes a pleasing addition to a theatre program.

Strand Shows Scenes at Versailles.

Scenes at the palace of Versailles, where the peace conference is to be held, were shown at the Strand Theatre during the week of Dc. 29. These scenes, although not new to many of us are always pleasing because of their beauty, and are especially appropriate for exhibition at this time. This picture which is owned by the Educational Films Corporation of America contains various views of the palace and includes the most beautiful spots in the grounds of the palace. The fountains of Versailles as presented in the picture are indeed things of beauty.

Meeting Demand of Package Shipping.

Pictograph No. 6098 contains a complete illustration of barrel making as it is carried on by one of the largest cooperage concerns in the country. The average person will be surprised to know that the separate parts of these barrels such as heads, staves and hoops are made in plants located miles apart, one in Oklahoma, one in Tennessee and one in Ohio. The film follows the story of the barrel from the time the log leaves the forest to the cutting and shaping of the various parts in the mills.

A Trip to the Leeward Islands.

In the 6,098th number of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph the speetator is taken on a trip to the Leeward Islands. While the scenic grandeur of these tropical islands furnishes a number of delightful scenes, one of the most interesting portions of the picture will be found to depict the quaint customs and characteristics of the natives. Here is found a mixture of black, Indian and white blood, with the tendencies strongest toward the racial traits of the negro. Many strange customs practised originally among the primitive tribes of Africa and brought to these islands by the blacks imported when slavery was still practiced in the New World, are still evident. One of the strangest sights to be seen is the turning out of a whole village at the beating of tomtoms to do the "bambaloo," a dance dating back to their jungle ancestors.

Screen Magazine Subjects.

The Universal Screen Magazine No. 100 released Jan. 11 contains the interesting topic: "History in Miniature for American Museums," which shows some of the accomplishments of Dwight Franklin, museum artist and historical expert, with the aid of wax and plaster. The subjects include Lief Erickson, Britons in Caesar's time, Valley Forge, where Washington's army stayed during the icy winter of 1777, and the zero hour in the trenches of historic France. "Better Babies" presented in an interesting manner will please mothers and those intrested in the little folks. "Screen Oddities" show the owner of the largest service flag in the United States, his log cabin in which he has lived since the Civil War, and eleven of his sons in khaki. "What Women Did to Win the War" presents some exclusive pictures of our sisters in Italy cultivating rice behind the trenches, making shoes for those back from the war, and performing various other tasks which helped to win the war.

"The Storm"—Unusual Sea Studies.

A beautiful picture of the sea, storm-tossed, was shown at the Rialto Theatre during the week of Dec. 29. The Educational Films Corporation of America owns this picture, which is entitled "The Storm," and which has been photographed by one who knows how to get the best angle on his subject. It opens with a ship making its way through a turbulent sea. Scenes which follow show the increasing intensity of the storm, and finally we reach an old pier over which the waves are rushing with the violent fury. The photographer has focused his camera on the scene in such a way that each rush of the surf seems to rise like a geyser at least forty or fifty feet above the pier. The picture is an unusually attractive one.

Pathe Has Films of Singapore.

Scenes from Singapore show both the island and city of that name. Chinese population predominates, but there is an odd intermingling of many nationalities on the streets. The various forms of street amusements are novel and interesting, and there are some good humorous views of the way the native barbers perform their work. This proves one of the most interesting plaees visited by the cameraman in this series.

Mollie King, Serial Star, Again To Be Seen on Screen

MOLLIE KING, former star of vaudeville and photoplays, including two Pathe Serials, and who has achieved the biggest theatrical success New York has known in years at the Century Grove, will soon return to pictures. It is understood that she will shortly make connections with one of the largest film companies.

Her work in pictures will not interfere with her engagement at the Century Grove. Her success there has been so marked that nothing could induce her to leave there. Morris Gest has made her the star of his entertainment. Miss King will combine the two engagements by working in a studio in the heart of New York every afternoon and every Sunday and all day Monday.

Miss King has also been offered stardom in three musical comedies, with her brother Charles, and appears almost every Sunday night at the New York Winter Garden as the headliner.

Personal and Otherwise

JOHN F. PRYOR of Pryor Brothers, who control theatres in Danville, Va., Greenboro and Charlotte, N. C., was in New York City holiday week. The Pryor Brothers are associated with R. D. Craver, of Charlotte, and they are about completing one of the largest theatres in the South at Richmond, Va., called the Broadway, opposite Murphy's Hotel. Mr. Pryor says this past year had been the biggest of their business career, irrespective of the "flu" and the general shut-down in Virginia.

Film Club Entertains Mrs. Miller.

Mrs. Myra K. Miller, of New York City, was given a reception by the Film Club of Boston recently at the Hotel Brunswick and made an address. Mrs. J. Wentworth Brackett, the new president, received, assisted by the club founder, Marion Howard Brazier, who told of the inception and growth of the club in four years and more. There were several male guests, some excellent music and a social hour. Mrs. Miller is chairman of the Better Film Committee of the National Council of Women.

SCENARIO WRITING COURSE A SUCCESS

Composition Taught by University of California Along Practical Lines—Earle Snell, Instructor

UNDER the exacting scrutiny of higher education scenario writing has established the authenticity of its credentials to rank among the illustrious literary arts. Last April the University of California, through its extension division, made photodramatic composition a part of its regular curriculum, announcing the course as intended primarily for students ambitious to write and market manuscripts, and consequently devised along essentially practical lines. This university, the second largest in the United States, is one of the few to pay attention to scenario writing, but it is eminently fitting that this should find a place in its course of studies since 75 per cent. of the moving pictures produced in this country are made in California.

To insure the practical side of the course the university authorities chose as instructor Earle Snell, who broke into moving pictures a number of years ago as press agent for Beatriz Michelena, and from that point worked up from post to post, including that of cuting room editor, until he was writing all of her scenarios. Although still on her pay-roll, he has had some successful free lance experience, and a baseball story, which he recently sold, is now being filmed at the Ince studios with Charles Ray in the stellar role.

Course Heavily Attended.

Some years previous to his picture experience, and while a student at the university, Mr. Snell made a record in the English department and this was accepted by the college authorities as sufficient to add the academic touch to his practical experience when they selected him as instructor.

After a lapse of eight months, the scenario course is now reported to be the most largely attended, next to navigation, on the entire University Extension curriculum, and it ranks as unquestionably among the most successful. Classes are now conducted in both San Francisco and Oakland, and the extending demand for the work argues the advisability of early expansion to other California cities. In Oakland the tea room of the T. & D. Theatre serves as a class room. In San Francisco classes are held in the University Extension class room in the Lick Building, in the new City Hall and in the Tivoli Theatre. Exhibitors in both cities have been free in extending assistance to the university, expressing the opinion that anything that improves moving picture stories is of direct benefit to them.

The general scheme of the course is a combination of lecture and laboratory methods, and the ultimate end of it is to give the aspiring author an understanding of the kind of material that is best screenable and the essential technique for best presenting it to the scenario editor. However, there is no attempt to encourage false hopes or to exaggerate the fruitlessness of scenario writing as a chosen field of endeavor. Particular emphasis is placed on the fact that a plot for the screen must be just as painstakingly constructed as one for the stage and that, while the genuinely good story is sure of a market irrespective of who writes it, there is no longer a place for the mediocre scenario from the free lance writer.

What Comprises Early Lectures.

In his first half dozen lectures the instructor endeavors to fix a working foundation of technique, with emphasis upon the contemporaneous development of several story threads toward a common crux through cut-ins and cut-backs, probability in basic situations, suspense, tying up the plot for compactness, provision for elapsed time, the establishment of background, the creation of atmosphere and comedy relief without interrupting the forward rush of the narrative, action as the chief medium of screen expression, the screen exposition in character development, the general plan of a photodramatic plot, etc. After these preliminary lectures, the course devolves into an analytical study of successful manuscripts and of photoplays selected and projected for the class.

Earle Snell.

A considerable percentage of the registration in the classes comes from writers who have already met a measure of success in some other field of literary endeavor and are interested in the particular technique of the photoplay.

Harry Garson Commuting Between N. Y. and L. A.

HARRY GARSON, after batting out a hot one toward the C. K. Y. and Select Corporations by announcing that Clara Kimball Young would not make any more pictures for the former concern, which releases Miss Young's pictures through the Select Pictures Corporation, hopped the train for Los Angeles to witness the premiere of the Garson-Neilan production, starring Blanche Sweet in "The Unpardonable Sin" at Clune's Auditorium in that city. At the same time, the other Blanche Sweet production will be seen at Grauman's for the first time.

As soon as both are fairly launched Mr. Garson will hie himself eastward again to superintend the launching of the big ten-reel production, "The Unpardonable Sin," here in New York. Mr. Garson has had several New York theatres offered to him, two of which are Broadway houses of the first calibre.

Blanche Sweet will soon begin work on her third production under the Garson management, about the 20th, the name of which has not been divulged yet.

Miss Young, who has just finished "Cheating Cheaters," which will be the last picture she will make under the present arrangement, is having a much needed rest after a strenuous year, and is with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Kimball, at their home near Hollywood.

No announcement is made as to Miss Young's future plans.

Storey to Exploit Educationals.

A. D. V. "Alphabet" Storey has resigned as publicity manager of the William Fox circuit of theatres to devote himself to the field of educational pictures, having been elected president of the Screen Review Company and also of Boys' Life Productions, with offices at 1493 Broadway. The Screen Review Company will distribute the output of Boys' Life Productions, authorized producers of motion pictures for the Boy Scouts of America.

The first production will be a single reel news-educational weekly screen magazine, "Boys' Life Screen Review," deriving its title from Boys' Life, the official monthly magazine of the Boy Scouts of America. This will be followed by juvenile features, comedies and serials and also a companion release, "Girls' Life Screen Review," for regular theatres.

The Screen Review Company will also conduct a department for the reviewing and recommending of proper photoplays and educationals for schools, churches, etc., from the releases of all producers, and encourage the installation of projection machines in schools, churches, community centers, settlements, etc., with the assurance of an adequate supply of the proper pictures to show in this field.

Mutual Promotes Joe Merrick.

Joe Merrick, who knows every exhibitor and most of the exchangemen and studio folk on the Pacific Coast, has been promoted from Pacific Coast supervisor to assistant sales manager of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing corporation and transferred to New York.

Merrick came East with the removal of the executive offices of Exhibitors' Mutual from Chicago to New York City and has begun his duties in the new Mutual general offices at 1600 Broadway. Joe Merrick's connection with the industry dates back twelve years. His experience covers all angles of the business—exhibitor, distributor and producer.

Exhibitors in small towns are just as important in their individual communities as are the managers of the "Picture Palaces" in big cities. The small town manager makes his bread and butter out of his theatre, and needs just the help The World brings to him with every issue.

Smiling Bill Parsons Considering a Round-the-World Comedymaking Trip—It Sounds Pretty Good

WILLIAM H. ("SMILING BILL") PARSONS, president of the National Film Corporation of America and star in and creator of Capitol Comedies, has entered the lists against Samuel Goldwyn for the sustained long-distance commutation record between New York and the Pacific Coast. Bill is back in the East on business, and by the journey has added another lap to his total of round trips against the mark set years ago, when Mr. Goldwyn, then Samuel Goldfish, flitted from coast to coast with the unvaried monotony of the man who makes the 8:25 every morning and the 5:15 every night. This is Mr. Parson's third trip to the metropolis in less than as many months.

Business brings "Smiling Bill" here, of course. And if he closes a deal he has under consideration a little cross-continent jaunt of 3,000 miles will become as nothing. Mr. Parsons proposes to take his comedy company on a picture-making tour of the world, visiting every country that makes more than a spot on the map and making a Capitol Comedy in each.

Mr. Parsons has under consideration a suggestion that the locale of the comedy to be made in Holland be Amerongen, where Wilhelm Hohenzollern is a guest. Smiling Bill thinks a comedy with Scowling Bill at the business end of a slapstick ought to be a great hit in the civilized countries of the world and expresses the belief that even the German Bolsheviki might find a laugh or two in it.

Parsons is quite serious about his proposed world tour. He believes it would be made a unique cinema record of comedy manners and customs in other countries. His own company would be supplemented in each country visited by a bevy of native beauties of the stamp Parsons has made famous in films on this side of the water.

Motion picture devotees are asked to look forward to the day when "Smiling Bill's" cameras begin to crank on the vampires of some of the dark countries—say the Congo Free State.

Allen Holubar Ill.

Allen Holubar, producer of "The Heart of Humanity" the Jewel superdrama now in its third week at the Broadway Theatre, New York, has returned to Universal City and is now confined to his home because of a severe attack of influenza which he contracted while en route to the West. Mr. Holubar became ill while traveling through Kansas, according to telegraphic reports from his wife, Dorothy Phillips, and upon his arrival at Los Angeles he was so weak he had to be taken to his home in an ambulance. Mr. Holubar's illness will delay production of a feature he was scheduled to begin January 8.

Association's Activities Are Recounted in Annual Review

THE publicity department of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has issued a detailed statement of the achievements in 1918 accomplished by the N. A. M. P. I. in its various activities. From the long ducument we select these references to the principal accomplishments as noted in the statement:

Membership campaign resulted in a continuous effort, lasting throughout the year, and totaling a considerable increase in members.

Co-operated with the War Industries Board in securing regulations to eliminate the use of tin containers, saving money for the industry and conserving an enormous amount of metal.

The Matter of Expositions.

The matter of conducting two proposed expositions, one for New York and another in Boston, was handled by the association, and the determination to have but one exposition (that in New York last October) was the result. This exposition, becoming largely an exposition of war work in various Governmental departments, was not a financial success.

Legislation in New York State to permit local option on the question of Sunday picture shows was considered by the N. A. M. P. I. and, it is claimed, action that would be unfavorable to the exhibition business was headed off and the bill allowed to slumber in committee of the whole.

The resignation of William A. Brady, as president of the N. A. M. P. I., and the action taken by Peter J. Schaefer in withdrawing the exhibitor organization from the N. A. M. P. I. is noted in the statement.

N. A. M. P. I. Has Been Busy.

The association is declared to have been instrumental in tiding the industry over a condition that threatened disaster when the five weeks' layoff was put into effect last fall. This action is declared to have been the only way to save a situation that was further imperilled by the epidemic of influenza.

Food conservation, advocated by slides in picture theatres, had the hearty co-operation of exhibitors and the association. Four-Minute Men, the great "boosts" for various Liberty Loans, Red Cross Drives and kindred efforts on the part of the Government to win the victory are referred to in the statement.

Eight full pages of mimeographed information are required by the N. A. M. P. I. publicist to recount the many and various activities of the association. The principal points, however, have been reduced to the foregoing references.

Interested readers will be able to get from Secretary Elliott a detailed report.

UNIVERSAL REORGANIZES DEPARTMENTS

Berman Made Manager of Exchanges—Schnitzer Appointed Sales Head—Publicity Staffs Increased

THE coming of 1919 has brought a reorganization of various departments at the home office of the Universal Film. H. M. Berman, for the past eighteen months sales manager for Jewel Productions, Inc., has been appointed general manager of Universal exchanges, and in addition to directing the work of the distributing branches he will maintain his executive capacity with Jewel productions.

Mr. Berman, while at the head of the distributing organization of Jewel Productions has made a big success of these films. Much of the success of "The Kaiser of Berlin" and "Crashing Through to Berlin" has been due to Mr. Berman's untiring efforts and executive ability. Several years in the exchange business at Kansas City and trips around the country on which he has met many exhibitors and exchangemen have made Mr. Berman particularly fit for the post to which he has been assigned.

Joseph Schnitzer, Central States district manager for Universial, with the Indianapolis, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit and Buffalo exchanges under his jurisdiction, has been appointed general sales manager and will supervise the distribution of Universal features, short reel dramas, and comedies.

Became Exchangeman in 1907.

Mr. Schnitzer became an exchangeman in 1907, opening the Des Moines office for the Pittsburgh Calcium Light and Film Company. Later he went to the Mullen Film Service at Minneapolis, thence to Syracuse and New York City where he sold the first films not controlled by the old Motion Picture Patents Company. Mr. Schnitzer was prominent in the fight against this company and later opened an exchange at Toledo for P. A. Powers. When this exchange was sold in 1912, Mr. Schnitzer became manager of the Central Film Company's office at Indianapolis, another Powers holding, and remained at this post until Universal took over the office, when he was made district manager for the Central States.

Ralph Abbett remains as manager of the Indianapolis exchange. No successor to Mr. Schnitzer as district manager has as yet been appointed.

Joe Brandt remains assistant treasurer of Universal and will also have specific charge of serials and news reels. Mr. Brandt will not only look after the distribution and exploitation of serials but will also keep in close touch with those producing serials. Mr. Brandt is now in Universal City, and in the future he will divide his time between the production center, visiting exchanges, meeting exhibitors and the New York offices.

H. M. Berman
General Sales Manager, Universal.

Publicity Department Built Up.

In building up its sales organization Universal has not overlooked its publicity department. Tarkington Baker, head of the department, has added to his New York staff Margaret Oettinger, formerly with the "Hearts of the World" company; Elizabeth Benneche Peterson, formerly with World and Paralta, and J. L. Johnson of the Minneapolis Universal exchange. Also on a recent tour of exchanges he appointed divisional publicity men.

The Universal Bulletin, a newspaper press service, makes its appearance weekly. A policy of providing editors with star cuts free from art work or type matter of any kind has also been inaugurated, and cuts, mats and photos illustrating interesting magazine and newspaper features are also being supplied editors regularly. To provide better still pictures and portraits of stars a new still studio-laboratory in charge of Mr. Fuerlich, formerly of Underwood & Underwood, has been established at Universal City. The Coast studio publicity staff also has been materially increased.

Kansas Censors Use Surplus to Lower Educational Fees

THE Kansas Board of Review has been using some of the surplus revenue which has "piled up" during the past year or so. There was not much to "pile up," but there was enough to carry the board's establishment through the period of several weeks, when no prints were sent to it for review. Another outlet for the surplus has been the inspection, without cost to anybody, of the war pictures released by the Committee on Public Information. The fact that the board is operating on a basis which does allow a surplus to accumulate, at $2 a reel for inspection, has resulted in a reduction in the charge for certain classes of pictures. Educational films and other films that can be similarly classified are inspected for $1 a reel. The Kansas board makes no charge for reinspection, and as a matter of fact sometimes does review a print two or three times at the request of exchanges.

Thousands of exhibitors in every state in the Union are paying $3 a year for The World and receive benefits that repay their investment over and over again. Their desks may be loaded down with unopened and unread circulars, posters, house organs and "promotion" letters—but they READ The World because they pay their money for it and find in its pages the help they need in conducting their business.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Sell Quality.

THERE is nothing to prevent your opposition from selling as good pictures as you have to offer. There may be a chance to beat him on quality. Sell quality along with the pictures and make it real quality—good pictures plus well-chosen music well played, a clean and attractive house and courteous service. Perhaps you can beat him on this proposition, and beat him so badly that you can raise your prices and starve him to death. But it must be good music and really courteous service and genuine cleanliness.

Simple but Good.

There is nothing much to brag about in this advertisement from the Princess, Colorado Springs. It offers no fancy type display, and there is little rule work, but it is a good example of what can be done in any small town office by any average compositor—if he is started right. In default of cuts or other attractors—other than the Artcraft trade-mark—it is the message which is trusted to do the selling. Below the title is, "Produced by Mr. Hart, himself—his latest picture. First showing in Colorado Springs." In the panel there is a simple description of the play worded to rouse curiosity. The text does all the selling, but it does sell.

Tack This Up Somewhere.

How much space should I give this subject?

Will a cut or the title sell this best?

Will the star or the play sell the better?

Does this demand sensational or high-brow methods?

Can I spend an extra $5 and get $6 back?

If you know the answers to these questions, you can write your advertising far more intelligently.

Read Up.

You can't write a decent advertisement of a picture of which you know nothing. You can read up, and then people will be more apt to believe you because you are so convincing.

Their Proper Place.

Keep superlative degree adjectives in the dictionary until you get a picture so big you simply have to use them. Then they will be believed. If every picture is the best ever, no picture is better than any other.

Underlining.

The Allen Theatre, in addition to taking big spaces for its current show, advertises coming features by means of scattered ads. A recent example shows three fifteens for the today and a two fours for an attraction listed for the following week. This is no more than a portrait cut with a single eight point line below, but it prepares the patron for what is to come.

Providence Problems.

J. Fred Lovett, of the Royal, Providence, sends in a new batch of displays for comment. It will be remembered that he has a neighborhood house which is advertised on a page of local news from that section and not in the regular theatricals. His three fives covers a generous advance notice, and usually a portrait or scene cut of two or three columns. He advertises his entire bill in the Sunday paper because he finds that pays him best. Mr. Lovett's problem has been to get proper display for a three-change bill in a three fives. He might take a single fives for each change, but he likes the drawn design. About the largest type he ever got into an advertisement is the thirty point shown in the first reproduction. He even gets three of these lines, and still has room for an 18 point underline, with plenty of space for a seasonal cut. This works so well that we should feel inclined to work the changes on this idea, but Mr. Lovett likes variety. We have already suggested a permanent characteristic frame to be used each week, but Mr. Lovett does not like this idea either, though he occasionally uses a frame, as the second illustration shows. Here the house signature does not show up well because of the arabesque effect around the letters. With this layout, Mr. Lovett gets one big line and has his choice between the first and last bill. Here the stronger show would seem to be the "Riders of the Purple Sage," because of the popularity of the book. But the star and book title are buried. If we were laying this out we would put the title of the comedy down to an eight point, along with the screen magazine. Then we would be able to use a 24 point condensed for the star and two lines of eighteen point for the play. We would do the same thing on the other side, only here we would use an eight point bold for the article in the title and get a 30 point in two lines for "Model's Confession," for the title is what will sell that play. We like the idea of using all the show instead of merely saying, "A good comedy," but the titles should be smaller than the feature. The frame is a bit too heavy. It is not needed where the advertisement is on a page with no other display matter. It would be sufficient to use a 24-point border on the sides and bottom, with a deep drop for the top, or a 24-point top, with a house signature set in and ears on either side to carry special comment. The third example returns to the straight across make-up, but here star and title have to go on one line about 1¾ columns wide in a three column space. Here the single reels are better displayed as regards proportion, but the day lines are too heavy. By dropping these to eight point and using eight point for the underline for the features, it would be possible to add six points to the headline type without increasing the space. The days are better handled in the last example, and there is a better display of the titles, but a little white space would help, and this could be gained through cutting down the filler titles and staggering them for the last two lines. Mr. Lovett would probably find it to his advantage to get together with his printer and arrange certain general lines along which to work, such as the invariable use of eight point bold for days, the staggered titles, and keeping down the sub-features. If he can get in touch with an intelligent man he will get better results with no greater effort than is involved in making out a pass occasionally.

And if he likes variety in his frames, he can get up a collection of eight or ten and use them in rotation. Ten frames would mean that only two of them would be used more than five times in a year, and that ten weeks apart. It will save art work, worry and time, and gain in effect.

Real Hustle.

Goose Creek, Texas, is only a small oil field town, as this picture taken on Main street will suggest, but it has a theatre and a real live manager in the person of C. Triffin. He cannot afford to play any very fancy advertising stunts, but he can load a pair of V boards onto a lumber wagon and let the town know what he has, and instead of regretting that he cannot afford something better, he uses the best he can get. That's the right spirit and if some of the large houses had the same proportion of hustle there would be more money in pictures. We presume that it is Mr. Triffin, who is seen on horseback alongside the wagon, but he doesn't say so. We think that Mr. Triffin is headed for a larger town than Goose Creek after he cleans up there.

How About It?

We think it is up to the Universal to give Mildred Harris a specially nice wedding present, for her marriage to Chaplin certainly boomed her bookings. Here is the way S. Barrett McCormick advertised ness went over the top for the remainder of the engagement. It was at a time when the talk of extraditing the former Kaiser was at its height and the timeliness of the suggestion largely helped to pull the business. It makes no difference what your show is. If it is not advertised properly, it will not do the business of which it is capable, and in paying extra for a special, you must also figure in an extra appropriation for advertising in order to clean up on the extra drawing power of the film. You cannot pay extra for film and expect it to sell itself automatically. The more you spend in rental the more you should spend in advertising.

Used Door Knobs.

H. M. Addison, of the Oneonta Theatre, Oneonta, N. Y., writes in response to a recent comment that he is still using door knobs with the usual success. The one we reproduce was used during the flu epidemic. It is unusual in that it does not list the theatre by name, but merely refers to the title with a decidedly appropriate allusion. These are printed on ordinary baggage tags with loops of common pink cord for attaching to the door knob. It is a piece of distributed advertising impossible to lose, even in a high wind. The recipient does not have to stoop to pick it up off the porch or sill and it is held well above the wet and dirt, getting to the reader in clean and presentable condition. It was at one time a favorite form of distributing programs, particularly in Winter, but lately has been so seldom seen that we asked recently if anyone still used them, and Mr. Addison very promptly replied that he did. If you use them regularly your printer can get a punch to work on the platen at the same time the impression is made, and the stringing can be done after school for the price of a few free tickets. To cut the strings, take a board and set in a couple of four-inch nails the same distance apart you desire the strings to be. Wind you ball of cord around and around these nails, then cut midway between the nails, or set the nails only half the distance apart and make a single cut down one nail. It is worth the little extra trouble to make certain that your advertising reaches your patrons in the best possible condition, and with proper text the door knob can be made into a hanger for regular reference. You can work the one-piece coat and suit hanger idea in connection with this, advertising that hangers for your hang-ups will be given as souvenirs at a certain performance and handing out envelopes enclosing a common one-inch wire nail. To get a laugh you might add some fake instructions, working in the Will Irwin instructions to avoid pounding your thumb, which is done by grasping the hammer in both hands.

Book Tickets.

The Elmwood, Buffalo, has revived the book ticket scheme, starting it before the holidays and advertising it as an ideal gift, adding that it is "Christmas Cheer that lasts." The book ticket is another old idea, seemingly neglected. There is no reason why it should have been dropped, particularly as it formed an ideal stunt for the tax-paid ticket, saving time and small change to patron and box office alike. You can afford to make some small concession in price to sell in advance because the holder of a book ticket will use ten tickets in the same time he might buy six or seven individual tickets. If you have a sliding scale for different nights, use a straight coupon and advertise that the admission is two or three or four coupons. It not only gets you your money in advance, but it will increase your patronage well beyond the price concession. Get the books up attractively and they will be useful for gifts the year around.

Not Bad.

A recent program of the Elmwood, Buffalo, announced "Just for Tonight!" and added "The title of this feature is a trifle misleading. The Elmwood will show 'Just for Tonight' for two nights. It can be done, Eh! What!!"

Dayton Doings.

Mark Gates used a pretty four eights for Mildred Harris in "Borrowed Clothes." It is all hand lettering, but the lettering is held to a large face and so is more readable than would be a smaller line. It is well drawn, though we do not quite like the placement of the cut. It would have worked better on the other side of the space and we think that we would have painted "Mrs. Charles Chaplin" on the face of the cut just above the bottom border, that a person attracted by the cut alone could have seen at a glance the identity of the player. This is a small matter, perhaps, but would have helped. If it was not possible to cut in the lettering, it could have gone in white in the black border. Mr. Gates seems to like the type addition to his spaces, for this feature was underlined the preceding half week in this fashion:

Tying Up to a Drawn Design with a Type Addenda.

This comes at the bottom of a two elevens and gives a sharp contrast to the drawn advertisement. We think that Mr. Gates will eventually come to a combination of drawn design and type inserts. It works best and he is too shrewd an advertiser not to realize this fact. A ten-point type line equals in legibility a clear 18-point line in hand lettering; a gain of almost 50 per cent.

It's a Promise.

Francis M. Kadow, of the Mikadow, Manitowoc, Wis., writes that we have not heard from him lately, but that in future he will be more regular, "as the boys are taking more interest in your department." We hope that Mr. Kadow keeps his promise, for the Mikadow advertising is generally above par. One of the contributions is a three sixes advertising "Brown of Harvard." This trusts to the big "zowie" and the college boy rather than to selling talk to get the crowd, but it makes a capital starter, and it keeps in character. The prices are given as "fifteen cents (one bit), Children 6 cents (half shilling)," which will get a smile and still emphasize the prices. We don't exactly like the empty panels on either side of the house signature. They appear to have been put in to fill the space, and it would have been better to have used an extended face for the name, getting it pretty well across the space. That is what extended letters are for. The second example is a strip three inches across the rather narrow page. It speaks for itself. It might be argued that the message is too flippant for the subject, and it is probable that a more dignified phrasing would have had more effect. It seems to be an effort to work into a ready-made cut. That is one danger of these catalogue cuts. Sometimes it takes too great an effort to match the text with the illustration. With so much space at command, we think it would have been effective to have set the title in a two-inch letter, working the selling talk from the title and not from the attractor.

Wrong Cuts.

The Parkway and Peabody, Baltimore, are using a joint program, with the Parkway getting three of the four pages. In a recent issue some of the cut work looks bad simply because the paper is too good for the cuts. The latter are coarse screen, for newspaper stock, and worked on a better grade they show up very poorly. Most companies offer only the coarse screen cuts, because this is what is most in demand. This being the case it would be better to use either a cheaper stock or no cuts at all. It often happens that line cuts can be used instead, as was done in one instance by Mr. Depkin.

All Dolled Up.

This reproduction of a four twelves from the Circle, Indianapolis, does not appear to be much out of McCormick's ordinary, but you should have seen the original. The reproduction is made from the black and white master cut which Mr. McCormick thoughtfully sent for reproduction, but it ran in the paper with black and pink, yellow and blue, which also were worked in combination to get the effect of many colors in the ornament around the head, which appears to be studded with jewels of a dozen different hues. There is a wash of yellow inside of this frame, while the face is in natural tint with reddish brown hair. The house signature and some of the white in the lower part of the frame are also printed in yellow tint. It is the most elaborate daily newspaper advertisement we have ever seen used for a theatre, either picture or spoken drama, and we think it was worth all of the extra money it cost. Two colors were being run for the regular dramatic section, so that the special cost was for the yellow impression only, apart from the additional charge for any color work. Mr. McCormick has set a standard which will take some beating. The same idea is also used for "Under Four Flags."

Questions relating to the writing of photoplays and photoplay synopses will be replied to by mail where a return envelope, properly stamped, accompanies the inquiry. No attention will be paid to questions relating to the market, nor can manuscripts or parts of manuscripts be criticized.

The Market.

APPARENTLY some writers find it difficult to understand why their admittedly good stories do not sell. If they are good, why do companies refuse to buy? And usually there is the hint, more or less veiled, that the reason for not buying is because they have taken the substance of the idea.

That is all wrong. Companies cannot buy all the good scripts they see. Some may not be suited to their production needs and others may not be needed, though in line with that company's productions. A script does not have to be purchased merely because it is a good script. It sells when it is a good script that the person to whom it is offered wants.

Suppose that you stood in front of a window filled with shoes. They are all good shoes, well made, attractive in design and cheap at the price. They may be—all of them—just the sort of shoes you like, but you are not going to dive into the store and buy the entire stock merely because they are good shoes. If you need a pair of shoes, you will pick out a pair that most suits your fancy, but you will not take the entire stock. You may have other pairs at home. You may even have so many that you purchase a pair now simply because you cannot let a bargain go by, but you are not interested in the wholesale accumulation of bargains.

It is the same way with scripts. They may be good scripts. They may be just what the company desires, in a general way, and yet a sale may be lost merely because the company is overstocked with that particular style of story at the moment, just as you may pass over a lot of dress shoes for a storm boot because you have many pairs of dress shoes and need something for wet weather.

Your best chance of making a sale lies in writing something so much better than the higher average that an editor feels that he simply must take your particular story even though he may have a dozen others more or less like it and nearly as good.

A script does not sell merely because it is good. It sells because some company wants to buy it and you might have sold that same script to that company had you come in two weeks earlier or six weeks later. That is why it often pays to send a script out a second time, after a decent interval. The second call may be made at a more fortunate time. The editor knew it was good the first time, but he did not buy it because he did not need it. Now he buys because he is in need of some stories of that type.

Surprise Climaxes.

The other afternoon we ran through O. Henry's The Four Million again just for the pleasure we got from his surprise climaxes. He almost always brought the surprise climax, and we was unusually clever at getting his effects. Get the book from the library and look it over, and note how seemingly casual his climaxes are. There is always preparation for them, but they are never prepared for in such a manner that you can see the thing coming. The same thing can be done with your picture plots if you study long enough, but most authors work the preparation so elaborately and follow such conventional lines that the average spectator can tell the climax of most stories by the end of the third reel. Study for surprise, but do not distort your plot to get it. Make it rise naturally from the very nature of the plot.

Character Drawing.

Be particular in your synopsis to give your chief characters identities and not merely names. Make them real people and not merely John or Jessie. Draw for the director a word picture of their personalities, using as few words as possible. But a word picture does not mean telling that your heroine has brown hair and blue eyes and a sunny disposition. Tell the traits of character that make the real person. Don't make your characters mere dummies, make them real flesh and blood people. Give them character and then make them act in consonance with that character, doing things because of their characteristic traits. Don't write a story of a girl who is a coquette one moment and an amateur saint the next. Make her all coquette, with flashes of real feeling, or made her demure throughout, and avoid those sudden complete changes of character that come all too often in photoplay. If your heroine is an empty-headed, silly little heart breaker through the first four reels do not seek to get a happy ending through a sudden great change in her character through some slight happening or no happening at all. None of this means to write character sketches instead of plays, but to give personalities to the people in your plays. The time has gone when the mere fact that there was a story sufficed. Now there must be story plus personality if you would turn out really good plays. You do not say that Mary refuses John because his father is a pro-German. You must make her first an ardent patriot and then, as the natural consequence, she will have no use for John. She does not refuse John merely to create a situation for your plot, but rather the plot gives characters the natural reaction of whom gives the situation.

Suiting the Market.

"I'll write what I darned well please," announces an anarchist, "and if the editors can't see it, they don't have to. I'm satisfied." Then he wants to know where the good markets are. There are no good markets for a man who writes what he pleases, unless it happens that he writes just what some one wants. It's all right to be independent if you are independently rich, but if you have to pay board out of what you earn it is better to write what "they" want rather than what you want and want them to want. Don't write what one specific company wants, but try to write along the motion picture style rather than something so new that the editors can't quite see it. Lots of editors would appreciate novelty, but they do not dare to suggest too radical a departure from the general style, knowing that doing so will only result in trouble. If competent editors had the say so in the purchase of scripts, we should have much better stories, but editors are merely slaves to the stars and the directors. The director will not take a story that does not appeal to him, and few have the intelligence to see the merits of what lies off the beaten track. There is slowly growing up a class of directors of which Maurice Tourneur is a shining example, and when these men come into their own we shall get better stories, for they will demand something worth while and be willing to give their time and their effort to the production of a worth-while story from a script of merit, but until they come into the majority, the safest plan is to write along general lines, giving the story as much individuality as you dare, yet not departing too markedly from the general run of plots. Write what is wanted and what will sell if you want to sell. If you want to be a literary I. W. W. you must be one at your own cost.

Training.

Almost every business has its apprentices, but the writing of photoplays seems to require the authors to be self-trained. This, we think, is a mistake that some day will be rectified. There will not be a large field of motion picture writers developed until some arrangement is made to train writers in the technical side of the production end. This has been done with success by Bannister Merwin in England. He took some of the best known writers on the floor and showed them how pictures are made to the end that they might write stories that are producible without too elaborate change. Over here nothing of that sort has been done save in isolated instances. It is possible to "go through" the producing plants in Los Angeles, but this gives merely a bird's eye view, and no effort is made to explain the details of picture making. The script staffs have been developed from the men who wrote fair continuities in the days when there were no staff writers, and nothing has been done to augment this little group, with the result that a very few men practically control the writing end. In time we believe that the development of new writers will be as much a part of the business of film companies as the making of plays. S. S. McClure based his early magazine success on the policy of developing promising writers, and today the Saturday Evening Post, Munsey and others are doing much the same thing. Most large magazines have "correspondence editors," or some such official, whose sole duty it is to keep in touch with and develop those who show promise. The photoplay writers of today are mostly those who were developed by the early editors. And these same men who were helped to the jobs they hold are doing their best to keep the work a close corporation. It is wrong. The companies should spend time now developing the writers of tomorrow.

TECHNIQUE OF THE PHOTOPLAY

By Epes Winthrop Sargent

A book replete with practical pointers on the preparation of stories for the screen, answering the hundred and one questions which immediately present themselves when the first script is attempted. A tested handbook for the constant writer of picture plots. "Straight-from-the-shoulder" information from an author with a wealth of real "dollars-and-cents" experience.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Important Notice.

OWING to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

New Simplex Revolving Shutter and Lens.

The motion picture industry has now to thank the Precision Machine Company, manufacturers of the Simplex Projector, for the development of a revolving shutter built along entirely new and heretofore condemned lines. We have witnessed ample tests of the new shutter, which will be known as the "Extra-lite" shutter, and are prepared to say that the screen result is good. The shutter gives, according to Professor M. F. Weinrich, Ph.D., of Columbia University, from eleven and five-tenths to twenty per cent. more light than the ordinary shutter in every day use, the smaller percentage being where it is compared to the two-wing shutter, and the larger percentage where it is placed in competition with the standard three-wing shutter.

Personally, we are ourselves prepared to say that the difference in screen illumination as between the ordinary shutter and the "Extra-lite" shutter is quite visible to the naked eye, and a test which we shall presently describe proves that the extra light secured actually projects a picture almost as well illuminated as we have seen in some small town theatres.

And now that we have got you all fussed up with mysterious mystery we will tell you the secret. The "Extra-lite" shutter is nothing more nor less than a shutter having all three of its blades perforated, as per cut. The cut, however, does not tell the whole story, because a shutter perforated in that way would, if there was nothing else to it, as you all know, product halation and a grading of the blacks. The perforated metal from which the shutter is made is in two sheets, between which, more correctly speaking, between a portion of which, is a filler material which absorbs a portion of the light striking on that part of the shutter and, so far as the human eye can discern, eliminates all halation and all greying of the blacks. With two pictures projected side by side, one with the "Extra-lite" and one with the ordinary shutter, the editor was unable to determine which was which insofar as the values of white and black are concerned.

This shutter, it seems to me, marks a very distinct advance in the optical equipment (the revolving shutter is properly an individual part of the optical train of the projector) because by its use we shall affect a saving in light, which means electric power and coal, amounting certainly to considerable and which the learned professor sets at the figures already given.

We witnessed a very interesting test of this phase of the matter when Mr. Edwin S. Porter filled in the opening spaces of the shutter with opaque cardboard and projected a picture with only the light passing through the perforations of the blade. I might add that projectionists receiving these shutters will find the open spaces blocked with cardboard. I would advise them to conduct their own little demonstrations by projecting a picture without having first removed the cardboard. The instructions going with the shutter will direct you how to do this; otherwise, the installation of the shutter is the same as that of the ordinary shutter.

The Precision Machine Company will manufacture the "Extra-lite" shutter, and it will after January 1 be a regular part of the Simplex equipment. The company will, however, sell the shutter either to the trade or to individual theatre managers.

By its use you can get the same screen brilliancy with less current, or greater screen brilliancy with your present current. From the demonstrations witnessed, we are prepared to give this shutter the unqualified endorsement of this department and to recommend it to projectionists and theatre managers.

The Precision Machine Company are now also in the lens manufacturing business. How they got into it is a story already very well told.

"C'est la Guerre"—It is the war.

By the act of the Government in commandeering almost the entire output of our lens factories, the company was placed in a position where projection lenses were absolutely unprocurable. Instead of sitting down like a dog with a sore tail and howling at the moon, the Precision Machine Company got busy—a habit of theirs. The result is a new lens factory which is right now turning out projection lenses equal, so far as this particular editor is able to see, to anything we have had in that line for low these many years.

Let it not be understood that the Precision Machine Company has hired two old maids and a boy to make three or four lenses. As a matter of fact, they have a thoroughly equipped lens factory, capable of turning out projection lenses in any reasonable quantity at this time, the intent being to increase the plant's capacity until the company can take care of the entire lens consumption of the moving picture industry.

I have examined these lenses and certainly there is nothing better made in the way of a mount. The lens itself projects a picture having sharp definition—certainly as sharp as other lenses of what we have come to recognize as standard makes. Mr. Edwin S. S. Porter, of the company, claims for the new lens a decidedly greater depth of focus than is found in anything else on the market.

This department will have more to say about these lenses in the near future. We can only speak of those things which we have seen, tested, and know, and at this time we have told you all that. The thing looks mighty good to this department.

Projectionists Will Dance.

The International Projection Association, Bronx, New York City, will give a dance at the Burland Casino, Westchester and Prospect avenues, Saturday, January 18. A number of photoplay celebrities have signified their intention of gracing the affair with their presence. Dancing will begin at 8 o'clock sharp. Admission will be three-quarters of a dollar per couple, with the man trying to monopolize more than one lady paying five nickels each for the extras.

The success of the ball seems assured when we consider that Alexander Polin, Morris J. Rotker and Harry L. Cohen hold chairmanships of the various committees, with Samuel Goldfarb as floor manager.

Marvelous New Color Process.

More than a year ago Wm. V. D. Kelley, Technical Advisor of Prizma, Inc., New York City, invited the editor to look at certain films made by the Prizma process, with the understanding that what we there saw was not for publication. Mr. Kelley at that time promised that within a comparatively short time he would show us something really worth while. We warned him that this department would never be interested in any color process that called for anything higher than normal speed of projection. Prizma was at that time working on a normal projection speed color process. I have recently, at the office of the company, viewed natural color motion pictures run at normal speed in which there is, in my judgment, absolutely no eye strain, but very little "fringing" (which will be entirely eliminated very soon), and in which the color values are—aside from an occasional slight tendency to predominance of reds and greens, which I have not the slightest doubt will be eliminated in due time—marvelously perfect. In many of the outdoor scenes in which there was plenty of action it was as though you viewed the actual scene. The color reproduction in many of the scenes seemed to me to be to all intents and purposes perfect. As I before stated, both the taking and projection speed is at normal, or in other words, the same speed at which ordinary black and whites are taken and projected. In so far as the thing is not a trade secret, the process by which this wonderful result is attained is as follows:

Color value negatives are taken in the customary negative form. These negatives are then printed on a positive, both sides of which carry the ordinary black and white emulsion, the registry of the two images on opposite sides being necessarily mechanically perfect. The positive is then developed in the ordinary way, after which it is treated to certain trade secret baths which convert the silver into color dyes.

The projectionist will therefore find the Prizma film to carry photographic emulsion and images on both sides. He must run it at ordinary normal projection speed, and no change of any kind whatsoever need be made in his projection apparatus in order to run Prizma. In other words, you run your Prizma on the same projector you use for black and white, without any change of any kind.

In running Prizma the projectionist will find three important peculiarities—one of which has to do with splicing. In splicing Prizma films the projectionist must bear carefully in mind the fact that each side of it carries photographic emulsion. Cut the film in the usual way for splicing, then scrape one end so that when the scraping is finished the scraped end shows red; scrape the other end so that the scraped end shows green, then, after applying cement of the ordinary kind, in the usual way, put the two ends together so that the red and green come together face to face. The second peculiarity has to do with threading. Looking carefully at Prizma at different angles you will find that one side has a greenish and the other a reddish cast. The green side goes toward the light and the red side goes toward the screen, otherwise all the titles will read backwards. The third peculiarity is of extreme importance, and has to do with the strength of the projection light. Too little light will, of course, have the effect of failing to bring out the details of the scene. Too much light, on the other hand, while it does not injure the film, or the colors therein, does have the effect of lessening the color values on the screen. To put it in another way, a too brilliant projection light will have the effect of overpowering the more delicate color shades by reason of extreme brilliancy. The proper method is for the projectionist to start with what he knows to be not enough light, and bring the light gradually up until full color value is attained. In other words, to so gauge his light that the greatest color value possible will be registered on the screen. Once having accomplished this purpose he will find that all Prizma films will be at their best at that, or about that particular projection light value, or amperage.

And now, I want to caution you very emphatically. Prizma films will be sent to you carefully measured, and you must account for every inch thereof; more than that, the accounting will be at the rate of $1 per foot or fraction thereof. The Prizma people want it distinctly understood that they are not adopting this course from any niggardly spirit. They realize that the projectionist is going to want a sample of the new films, because it shows the colors as you hold the film in your hand. Within reason they are willing the projectionist should have a sample of the film, but they are not willing to have any production injured by the amputation of a single inch thereof. Don't overlook this warning unless you want to pay at the rate of $1 a foot, or in other words, about 10 cents an inch, for Prizma film, besides running the chance of getting into serious trouble. You are warned that if it is necessary to make a splicing in the film you must even return the pieces amputated to the exchange or you will be charged for them.

In order to emphasize the fact that the foregoing is not from any stinginess, the Prizma Company has authorized this department to say to you that any projectionist who is actually running Prizma films may apply for a sample of Prizma to this department and we will send him five frames thereof. Remember that application must be made to the projection department of the Moving Picture World. The Prizma people are very busy and have not time to take care of the matter. They want to accommodate you, and we have agreed to take over that particular matter on their behalf. Please understand it would be impossible to supply all of the 28,000 or more projectionists in this country and Canada with Prizma samples, so they can only be sent to those projectionists who send: (a) Signed statement, on their theatre letterhead, that they are running Prizma, attaching program or advertising matter mentioning Prizma, if possible. The latter is not imperative, however; (b) A self-addressed, stamped envelope. Having complied with those two simple conditions we will send you a five-frame sample of Prizma.

The Prizma films will be distributed by the World Film Company for general use. For the present the release will be confined to five copies of one subject per week, but after February 1 there will be twenty copies of one subject per week, until later, when the number of subjects per week will be increased.

In closing I want to say it looks to me as though Prizma has solved the subject of natural color motion picture running at normal speed. The Prizma proposition certainly has the approval and endorsement of the editor of this department, who personally recommends it to theatre managers as a highly pleasing and novel addition to their program. He only hopes the day will not be far distant when Prizma will cover the whole field of action in the motion picture industry, giving us photoplays of all kinds and description in their natural beauty of setting.

Good Wishes from Hamilton, Ontario.

From Hamilton, Ont., comes a check on the Bank of Pleasure, made to the order of this department, in the sum of Ten Thousand Good Wishes. It is signed: "Hugh Usher and the Boys of 303, Hamilton, Ont."

In this connection let us say to all of the many who have sent to the editor cards of Christmas greeting that their remembrance gave us much genuine pleasure. One works hard from month to month doing one's little best to help the profession, with lots of mail of the ordinary routine sort and an occasional bright spot in the way of a purely friendly letter from some one we perhaps know or perhaps had not heard of before, but who we learn has been helped. Then comes a special occasion, such as Christmas, and a flood of cards and letters to remind us we are not forgotten in the halls of the house of friendship. Verily, it is good. And so, our friends, we thank you from the bottom of our heart for the spirit which prompted you to send it.

Excellent Wire Terminal.

It is a poor year which does not bring to the editor's dask at least half a dozen wire terminals for examination. But most of them, while they have merit, are no better than those which have gone before. What is needed in a lamphouse wire terminal more than anything else is ruggedness of construction, plenty of metal and generous clamping screws or bolts. Such a one lies before us. It comes from and is made by the Leland Theatre Supply House, Montpelier, Vermont. It combines extreme simplicity with generous contact surface and plenty of compression power. Accompanying picture shows how it looks and how it works. We are glad to give this terminal the approval and indorsement of this department.

The Question Booklets.

Here is an amusing communication coming from an Eastern man:

"F. H. Richardson, New York City. Sir: I sent in forty cents of hard earned money for the question booklets you advertise in your projection department, and think I have been swindled out of the money. I have been in a picture booth three months now, working hard to learn to get a license, and your booklets just ask questions and don't give no answers. I thought I could get them and would know all the answers to the questions when I go to be examined next week. I think you ought to send my money back. I was so mad I tore one of the books up, but if you send back the forty cents you can have the other, which aint damaged, only a little dirty."

Inasmuch as I got at least six dollars worth of laugh out of that letter I returned the dear soul's hard earned wealth. Also with it went a letter which I guess will hold him for a while. Muh Gawd! the terrible tragedy of it all! He has been in a "picture booth" three (count em, 1 1 1) whole, long, weary soul racking months trying to learn a profession. Ah, heaven, the weary hill the man has climbed. Me thinks his hair must be tinged with silver from the searing effort of it! And then to think that for forty cents he could not get complete knowledge enabling him to march past the examiner with head held high and the light of wisdom supreme in his eye. Truly 'tis a harrud wurruld!

And lest we wreck another young life with false hopes let us again, for at least the 'steenth time, repeat that the question booklets are QUESTIONS ONLY. They are designed to show the apprentice what he should study, and to point the path to the student projectionist who wants to learn those things he should know and must know to be really a high class man in his profession. The answers must be dug out. Here are a few of the questions selected at random: "Suppose you have a motor generator set and in this set there developes a pounding. What would you look for and what remedy would you apply? Suppose you have a very steep pitch in projection, what would you do to secure sharp focus at the top and the bottom of screen. Can a picture be made sharp all over under these conditions? What is the effect of using condensers of too short focal length? Of too long focal length? Why does a cracked condenser lens show in the stero and not in the motion picture? What is axial spherical aberration, and what is its effect on the screen? Taking the total illumination of the crater as the basis, what losses of light occur between the crater of the carbon and eye of the spectator in the audience?

Those are just a few of hundreds asked. Pretty good stuff to know, isn't it. If the good, but deeply wronged brother could get the complete dope for forty cents it surely would be SOME investment!

New Combination Exit Sign and Perfumigator.

Lewis Swaab, Philadelphia, sends in description of a new device known as the "Predis Perfumigator," which same looks pretty good, insofar as we are able to judge from a printed description and picture. It consists of a metal case somewhat similar to a small panel switch-box, inside of which is a rectangular recepticle filled with a scented electrolyte called "Predis." The composition of this is a secret known only to its inventor, J. J. Humphrey. On top of the recepticle is mounted an incandescent lamp which, I suppose, uses the electrolyte as conductor on one side of the circuit. The electric current causes certain chemical action in the charge and the surrounding air is, according to claim of the inventor, both purified and scented. One charge will last about a week, is the claim, but this sounds rather vague, since the device might be in use ten hours a week in one theatre and seventy or more in another. Recharging is claimed to be easy and the charge comparatively inexpensive.

The door covering the cabinet containing the perfumigator is of glass, in which the word EXIT is blocked out, presumably in black, so that the device serves two very useful purposes.

I also notice that Swaab has what seems, from the picture, to be a simple, practical motor drive for Powers projectors—not a speed controller, but just a drive. It is far ahead of the objectionable belting-to-the-flywheel still practiced by some projectionists.

Wants to Know How Much Has Soaked In.

Clay Callicott, Lula, Mississippi, sends forty cents for both sets of questions, with explanation that he has had a handbook for nearly three years and wants to know how much has soaked in. Friend Callicott further says he has evolved, created or invented a motor rewinder which will rewind the film slowly (20 minutes), exerting an even tension throughout the process of rewinding. Promises us a close-up of the device as soon as the pictures are ready. Say it sure is a lot of help where one man must handle two projectors and do the rewinding, which is precisely what I've been telling you chaps for lo these many moons. With such a rewinder (20 minutes is perhaps an error in the other direction if 1,000 feet of film is meant. Ten minutes is just right and seven would accommodate even the shoot-'em-through-and-to-hell-with-screen-results fiend) it is, once the reel has been looked over and put into proper repair, unnecessary to watch the process of rewinding. The projectionist merely places the reel on the rewinder, threads the end of the film to the other reel and starts the motor. He may then go on about his business and need only occasionally glace at the rewinder to make sure everything is progressing satisfactorially. The speed is low and there is no noise; also damage to the film is so very remote a contingency that it is negligible. Rapid rewinding costs the industry thousands of dollars a day in needless damage to films. Send on your photographs. I shall indeed be interested. If you fix things so that speed may be varied as between seven minutes and twenty minutes to the thousand feet, with seven as an absolute maximum speed, I will, assuming the rewinder to be otherwise well made and of reasonable price, do all I can to boost its sale in the interest of the industry.

Why and Wherefore of the "Fade-Away."

As is well known, with semi-reflective screens (metallic and glass surface), or with some of them at least, there is what is known as "fade-away." This consists of lowering of screen brilliancy as one moves from the center of the house toward either side. Usually it is not much in evidence until a position considerably to one side of the center line is reached. It is very little or not at all in evidence where a non-reflecting surface (the term is of course used in purely a relative sense. There is, and in the very nature of things could not be a non-reflecting screen. As used, the word merely distinguishes the difusing screen, such as calsomine, cloth and plaster from the screen where reflection and diffusion are combined, as is the case in glass and metal-coated surfaces), such as plaster, cloth or calsomine is used.

The reason for "fade-away" is made plain by the various illustrations.

In each of the drawings you will see a ray of light directed to a screen from a lens. There are three screens, D-E being calsomine, plaster or cloth, the characteristics of those three surfaces being essentially the same, in so far as applies to difiusion of light. Screen E-F is a metallic surface, rough and unpolished, such as is had when the powdered metal is dusted on a rough surface cloth, afterward subject to as little polishing as possible. F. G. Screen is a metallic surface on very smooth backing, with the surface polished after applying.

Examining the action from these screens, as roughly indicated by the drawings, we find that from surface D-E the ray is reflected very evenly in every direction to the front of the screen. There is no greater reflection of the ray back to point X than there is at any other point within sight of the screen. Its surface will look no brighter at point X than at any reasonale distance from points D or E. The light is almost perfectly diffused, hence there is no "fade-away" at all, or not enough to be discerned by the ordinary eye. Screen E-F, on the other hand, does not diffuse the light nearly so well. The action is about as shown, intensity of light being indicated, roughly, by the number of lines. This surfaces gives fair results in a tolerably wide angle, hence the patrons of the wide house where it is used will not feel the effects of "fade-away" to any very objectionable degree unless they sit at pretty heavy angle to the screen. Screen F-G is one which may only be used in a very narrow house. Beyond points 1 and 2, or even nearer the central line, the "fade-away" will be very bad indeed, and near points F or G the result would be entirely unsatisfactory.

"Fade-away" has nothing to do with the narrowing of width and apparent elongaton of figures on the screen when viewed at heavy angle. That is due to an entirely different cause. The narrowing illusion is caused by certain laws which cannot be in any way altered or changed. The elongation, however, may be entirely due to the fact that a narrow object looks taller than it really is, in which case the fault cannot be overcome. In fact that is the case if the projection be "level," i. e., the lens level with center of the screen. But if there is pitch in the projection the figures on the screen will always appear taller than they are in real life, because the picture is, under that condition, distorted and made higher from top to bottom than it is in the film photograph. In setting forth these somewhat elementary matters let me call attention of you who already understand them that there are very many who do not, and in such matters I write for their benefit.

Catalogue De Luxe.

The Argus Lamp and Appliance Company, manufacturers and sellers of the Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter for Mazda Lamps and the Argus Crystal Bead Screen, and dealers in general motion picture supplies, have forwarded a copy of what might be called a catalogue de luxe, in which appear several views of their really fine office in Cleveland, O., together with description of goods they make and sell. A description of the Argus plant, which includes a complete laboratory for film production, will appear in this department soon. H. H. Cudmore is president of the company. Presumably the catalogue may be had for the asking.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

The Responsibility of the Exhibitor Toward His Musical Director Is Great

WHEN first the "movies" turned to music for a betterment of performances, the pianist was regarded as a necessary evil and received the same treatment as a magnate accords a ditch digger. To the exhibitor, he was merely a puncher of piano keys, a new toy for display, and a poor reason to raise the price of admission to ten cents.

Those days have passed and with them went the universally poor opinion of the musical director. By the far-seeing employer, he is today a man of importance, an expert in his line, a vital necessity to the theatre presenting pictures. In the larger picture houses he commands a big salary and he has the responsibility of the musical program thrust upon him. Usually he is the conductor of a big orchestra, and when not conducting, he is seeing the next week's picture or putting together the program for the following show. Besides, there are the usual rehearsals necessary to a good performance for which he is held accountable. His duties are manifold and, if conscientiously and intelligently performed, the music becomes a paying feature of the theatre. His technical ability is called into play continually to solve many musical problems. His hours are longer than those of the projectionist; his work more onerous.

As a general rule, these facts are appreciated by the exhibitor and he regards his musical director as an executive head of a department in his business. Many exhibitors buy the music for their leaders, realizing that from the salary of the latter, they cannot afford to invest in a big library. This method is right from every standpoint. It leaves the leader bereft of the excuse that he must repeat numbers owing to his meager assortment of musical selections. If a change of director is necessary, the exhibitor still has a fine library to offer the successor.

Many musical directors have placed at their disposal a small office which contains all the paraphernalia incident to their profession. This is a good policy for it instills in their minds a sense of possession and importance that is a spur to greater endeavor.

The big musician of today is given every help and every comfort in order that his work may not suffer nor deteriorate. But what about the little fellow in a ten and fifteen-cent house?

There are, even yet, a few exhibitors who cannot recognize the importance of music, or musicians. These have the "necessary evil" idea and carry it out in their attitude. They plant a leader in a pit and tell him to go to work for as many hours as possible and demand as much noise from three instruments as possible from thirty. They hire an organist and tell him to "grind" from noon until eleven p. m. If he is a good boy, he may get thirty minutes for supper while the reel-boy relieves him at the consul.

An exhibitor of this class has no right to succeed and, naturally, he stays in a rut year after year, barely gaining a livelihood for himself while his progressive competitor in the next block makes a nice little clean-up.

Every exhibitor owes a duty to his employes and especially to the temperamental and artistic musical director. When treated like a dog, his art is forgotten and his music becomes a drudgery. Nothing can be gained from a disgruntled employe, therefore it behooves the exhibitor, in his own interests, to treat the musician courteously.

Art cannot flourish in a pig stye or a draughty stable. Give your musicians a comfortable place to work and do not expect them to labor by the hour. Insist on quality at all times and allow sufficient rest periods to make that quality possible.

Above all, the exhibitor should see that his musical director is provided with all available musical data furnished for the features he expects to play. Get him the cue sheets, orchestra scores if possible, and any hints found in the trade-journal, reports of the picture presentation in other theatres. Bring him directly into the industry and make him a picture fan as well as a picture player. See that he subscribes to one of the trade journals and give him a list of your future bookings. Thus, he may read the story of the feature to be run the next week. He will note the comments of the reviewers and procure the cue sheet for early analysis. He may also read how the picture was musically set at one of the bigger theatres and be encouraged to suggest special and spectacular stunts to enhance its presentation.

Always co-operate with him. Make him feel that you have his interests at heart and encourage his propagation of new ideas. They may not all be possible, yet one may bring large monetary returns. Treat your musical director as a human being and your music will improve a thousand per cent.

Moving Picture World Will Pay Respects to Musicians

We have, from time to time, called the attention of the orchestra leader to these columns. We have pointed out the fact that "Music for the Picture" is his department and the Moving Picture World officially recognizes him as an important person in the picture industry. We are here to help him in every way possible; to solve his musical problems and assist him in his effort to raise the standard of picture music.

Many musicians have taken advantage of the opportunities afforded them through the Moving Picture World and kindly expressed regret that they did not come into the fold earlier. There are still hundreds of leaders, organists and pianists from whom we long to hear. Tell them about the department that pleases you and point out its labor-saving usefulness.

We are about to send our representative, Mr. Bregstein, to call upon you. Every leader wants to know what the other fellow is doing and, as these columns are run for that purpose, our representative will request an interview with you. Give him all the programs. Tell him how you present your pictures. Show him your library and don't keep your ideas a secret.

It is not our intention to filch from you a formula which you consider peculiarly your own, but your fellow musicians need your suggestions and co-operation. If you have a photograph to spare, let us see what you look like, that you may become known—not only for your brilliant mentality—but for your physical lines of strength.

America is a large country and he may not reach you for some time. Don't wait for him. Send in your story at once. Let it be short, concise and helpful. You may start something. If you do, so much the better. No progress is made in any art by continual and quiet acquiescence. These columns will welcome discussions where personalities are absent.

Picture players are trying to get along in a new profession by individual effort. This is a slow process at best and cannot be productive of great results. Co-operation should be their pass-word and good music for the pictures, their slogan. Let us help you.

Welcome to "Our Rainbow Soldier Boys."

When the Rainbow Division returns, laden with laurels and resplendent in glory, they will bring with them an augmented band that number eighty-five musicians. This comprises twenty-five French buglers and drummers. The musical efficiency of this corps is beyond question. It has distinguished itself abroad and will prove a pleasant surprise to the folks here.

Betty Tillotson, a versatile Red Cross nurse, has written a marching song dedicated to the Rainbow Division, entitled "Our Rainbow Soldier Boys," which is popularly hailed as a true tribute to this regiment. The Rainbow band will play it and the soldiers will sing it. The words are catchy and the melody is tuneful.

The Harp an Instrument of Antiquity.

Among the musical implements whose strings are set in vibration by the fingers, the most important is the harp. This splendid instrument is of great antiquity, antedating the earliest records of civilization. It was doubtless suggested by the taut strings of the bow, as the ancient relics bear a striking resemblance to that primeval requisite of warfare.

The only authentic evidence that we have of the great antiquity of the harp is, with few exceptions, handed down to us through the Egyptian sculptors. One instrument carved on a tomb in Thebes gives us data reaching back over three thousand years, as the history of the burial place has been traced to the thirteenth century before Christ.

A few years ago, a sculptored tablet was discovered in Babylonia, which archaeologists dated 2500 B. C. One of the figures carved on it was represented as playing a harp of eleven strings. This instrument had no front pillar, and the early Egyptian and pre-Christian Irish harps were of similar construction.

The harp, in a crude form, was a favorite with the ancient Britons. The old laws of Wales mention it among the things necessary to distinguish a gentleman from a slave. Indeed, the laws forbade a slave from touching a harp, and it was exempt from seizure for debt, as a man who had no harp lost caste and was degraded to the rank of a slave in the public esteem.

In the old diatonic form, the performer could only modulate by the use of his thumb when he desired to stop the vibration of the strings or alter the pitch. A Bavarian, named Hochbrucker, invented pedals to overcame this difficulty. True, they were extremely crude and awkward, but they paved the way for later and more satisfactory achievements.

The modern harp was practically the work of Sebastian Erard, who perfected it in 1810. The instrument had been changed from Hochbrucker's day until it possessed two pedals, and the tuning was changed from Eb to Cb, making it possible to play in thirteen keys. This fact, and the added advantage of simplicity of fingering, which was the same in every key, made the instrument extremely popular.

The foreign harps were never very successful in America. The musical tastes of our country called for perfect workmanship, and the vagaries of the climate here were too great a strain upon an instrument made for more benign atmospheric conditions.

Realizing the shortcomings of the European instruments, Lyon & Healy, of Chicago, put out a harp which they did not intend for a money-making proposition, but as a splendid advertising medium. The first harp they produced cost them $15,650; but through it they acquired a world-wide reputation, the action in their harps being famous everywhere. The firm of C. H. Ditson & Co. are the agents in New York. If one aspires to be wafted instantly from Manhattan Island to the court of Louis Thirteenth, there is no surer way than to enter the fascinating Ditson harp room, where there is on display instruments ranging from the crude harp with no pedals to a most impressive and exquisite instrument valued at $10,000.

At the present time, notwithstanding the graceful lines and the great beauty of tone of the harp, it has been practically supplanted in the home by the piano. Several causes have contributed to this regrettable condition. A harp of superior quality entails great expense, the tuning is beyond the powers of the average amateur, and a great many selections possible on the piano are not playable on the harp.

But, whereas the use of the harp has declined in domestic life, the contrary is found in the orchestra. The first record of the use of an orchestral harp occurs in an account of the "Ballet Comique," on the occasion of the marriage of Mary of Lorraine in 1582. For many years, the harp was not used in any but grand opera or symphony aggregations. But now, it is frequently met with in the smaller orchestras. The color and beauty of tone possessed by it have won the appreciation of the masters of music, and the scores of Meyerbeer, Gounod, Berlioz, Liszt and Wagner are not complete without it.

Some New Numbers for Your Library.

T. B. Harms & Francis, Day & Hunter, one of the strongest music publishing firms in America, and the staunch friend of orchestral leaders, are putting forth every effort to be of service to the motion picture industry.

They have recently issued the selection for Follies of 1918, which should prove interesting to leaders everywhere. "Starlight," a little intermezzo that is whistled on the streets; "Garden of My Dreams in Tokio," a Japanese melody that is pleasing, and "When I'm Looking at You," are three hits that cannot be overlooked. The opening March Militaire is also useful for short scenes of a military character. This number can be used in its entirety with comedies that are dignified, such as the Sydney Drew type.

A splendid love theme published by the same firm is "Night Is for Loving and Dreaming," written by the composer of that popular hit, "Somewhere a Voice is Calling." The piece is in A-flat and lends itself to picture playing because of its short phrases. The melody is insidious, and without realizing it, the auditors will go away humming the tune. This is the kind of new music that the leader wants, and if more of it were published, fitting the feature would lose some of its tediousness.

Exhibitors are beginning to realize that they cannot do without music controlled by the Authors and Publishers' Association if they expect to please their patrons. Almost all the musical hits of the season are to be found in its catalogue and people expect to hear them.

T. B. Harms & Francis, Day & Hunter usually manage to put over some big ones, and this season is no exception to the rule.

The Strand Offers Usual Fair Program.

The Strand rendered the usual program for the week of December 29. It was not what one could praise with any degree of accuracy, but averaged up to the Strand calibre.

"Isabelle Overture" was written by Von Suppe in his younger days and in a lighter vein. It was frothily melodious, not specially pretty, and totally lacking in merit. The orchestra had no difficulty in its performance and the audience showed their good nature.

Miss Claie Aimec, with her violin, held the stage too long for comfort. Her work is very mediocre; intonation poor and entirely too mechanical. She comes to New York with a good reputation as a prize pupil from the Paris Conservatories. It seems a pity that she makes no great effort to add to her laurels.

The duet, "L'Angelus de la Mer," sung by Alys Michot and Von Collignon, in costume, provided a novel touch that gave a little tone to the entertainment. The rendition was satisfactory.

The playing of the Topical Review and the feature was only fairly well done. In the first instance, the synchrony of selections was better than usual, but during the feature, synchrony was absent. At the scene of pre-historic people, the Bacchanalian Dance was started by two second violins and a trumpet because the other instrumentalists were tardy in getting in from the rest period. Decidedly poor; eh, what? Well, rather!

The Strand management must realize that it cannot offer a slipshod performance to the public and retain its patronage. No longer is it alone in the field, and more competition is arising. The Strand has a good orchestra, a fine conductor, and a large library, but its musical program resembles that put together by school boys.

There IS an art in picture playing and concrete examples aplenty to hand; why not in the Strand, tho cradle in which picture music was born?

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q—Once in a while the orchestra is requested to put on an extra rehearsal if a big feature is booked, and a special musical score is provided. Are we supposed to rehearse free, or not?

A—If you are non-union it becomes a question between you and your manager. He has a perfect right to ask you to rehearse free, and if you are foolish enough to accept, it becomes your funeral. On the other hand, if you belong to the A. F. of M., look up your rule book, or consult the president of your local, who will set you right in the matter.

Q. What was the date of the opening of the Academy of Music in New York City?

A. The Academy of Music was opened October 2, 1854, with the opera "Norma," having in the cast Grisi and Morio. The building was burned in 1866, but reopened in February of the following year. The uptown trend of the population and the building of more modern theatres have served to convert this erstwhile show playhouse into a picture theatre.

Picture Music for Our Fighting Boys.

In keeping up the spirits of the soldiers at the front, moving pictures and music—good and otherwise—have performed a splendid mission.

The "boys" learned to smile through every vicissitude, and our own American lads had the reputation of being the happiest of all.

They have all learned to sing, and music has become a necessity in their lives. They will look for it when they get back, and it's up to us to see that it is given them in our picture houses.

After their nerve-racking experiences, they cannot be expected to sit and silently watch a picture. They need the influence of music which shall drive away unpleasant thoughts and lift them out of themselves. Probably, they will not be keen for grand opera stuff just at first. "Over There" will doubtless bring more applause from them than the best thing Puccini ever wrote. But they will surely resent hearing the piano for interminable periods while the orchestra go out to smoke or fall asleep in the pit.

It might be an excellent idea to play a familiar air occasionally and encourage the soldiers and sailors in the audience to lead in putting over one of their camp songs. Picture houses were put up primarily as a money-making proposition, and if they prove places of recreation to the boys coming home—and they must have recreation—the theatres will live up to their chief aim and fulfill an unquestioned duty at the same time.

Music Recognized as a Material Aid to Pictures.

A letter recently received by a prominent production company of New York from a live exhibitor in the West should forever settle any possible doubts existing in the mind of an exhibitor as to the efficacy of music with pictures. It so thoroughly coincides with the attitude being assumed by the more progressive exhibitors all over the country that we are quoting from the interesting letter in part:

"Under separate cover I am returning to you your copy of music. Kindly accept my thanks for the use of the same and permit me to say that special scores like this one, as well as the score for ——, adds much to the musical interpretation of the pictures.

"Our musical director, as well as myself, will appreciate it very much if you will call our attention to any special scores that you have, or get in the future for any of your pictures."

This letter voices the cry that is abroad in the land. Eventually, the call will be so insistent that it must be satisfied.

The War Is Over

We should now sing of our heroes and we offer for your approval the song that typifies the national feeling of triumph.

Our Rainbow Soldier Boys

Written For, and Dedicated To, the Rainbow Division
Words and Music by

BETTY TILLOTSON

Read the words and rejoice with us in the wonderful sentiment that they express.
Your boy will be singing the song when he comes home; why not be prepared to join him in the chorus:

"We are all mighty glad to meet you,
Our Rainbow soldier boys.
We are all mighty glad to greet you:
You fill our hearts with joy.
When we sadly saw the train go,
We pinned our faith to the Rainbow,
And we're all mighty proud of you,
Our Rainbow soldier boys."

Rambles Round Filmtown

The Gold Dust Twins of Advertising Promise to Sapolio Film Adjectives

OUT of the west comes the galvanizing intelligence that film advertising is going to be made clean and pure by the Advertising Club of Los Angeles, per J. A. Quinn, plus the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. "Misleading advertising, the promotion of unknown and so-called stars and the featuring of unworthy pictures" will be duly eliminated. The business of writing words to be printed at paid rates is to be cleaned up—Sapolioed—so to speak, by the Wise Men of Spotless Town.

Now It's Started Who Will Finish It?

"Curley" Welch is to blame for it. It was "Curley" who kidded somebody into believing they were being taken seriously. It was "Curley" who started printing the letters that have been ripping the boys of the A. M. P. A. fore and aft and in the bilge. Seeing these letters in print made somebody imagine they were being taken seriously, and with a chest swelling with super-seriousness off somebody lamms to the Advertising Club of Los Angeles and is forthwith and further taken seriously. Nothing is more serious than the seriousness of being taken seriously—and so we have Allied and Entente Advertising Clubs of the Whole World hopping on to the griddle of adjectives the film publicist has kept red hot for the past several years.

The Prisoner at the Bar.

"You must cool down," orders the World's Advertising Clubs.

"We claim self-determination," retorts the publicists who composed words used to surround enticing electrotypes of stars, near-stars and coming stars of filmdom.

"You must stop writing better advertisements than we can," demands the Clubs Advertising the World.

"You are regular old flatterers," says the A. M. P. A.

Grabbing All the Advertising Honesty.

Speaking of the Advertising Clubs—as a whole or part—did you ever notice how careful and discreet is the copy writer for merchandise advertisements? How he simply hates to put misleading illustrations and text into his work? How he is careful not to boost "unknown" commodities? Everything he advertises was, by some strange method, well known before he started to advertise it! In case you have overlooked the safe, sane, honest and clean method the men who compose advertising for the newspapers and magazines of general circulation we propose to eat up some space with a few word-pictures (or cartoons) to prove that the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World might order in a few packages of Sapolio, grab for the quick-lime, page the Gold Dust Twins and do a little cleaning up on their own account.

Advertising an Automobile.

In the foreground of a double-truck announcement we lamp a car of "shine" beauty. From appearances any fly that tried to park itself on the glittering sides of the machine would commit instant suicide. At the wheel is a girl who would make the prettiest of Commissioner Enright's Motor Cop lassies look like a cross-section of a turnip. The man in the tonneau looks like King George going to his own christening; the ladies who stand in a group ready to hop in look like a billion dollars—but the landscape! Nothing like it this side of Fiddler's Green! The purple sun smiles upon nine kinds of breeze-kissed verdant trees, and grass in seven shades of green fades into distant hills where kindly cows chew the cud of soft deception. Only one person out of a thousand who gaze upon the advertisement can afford to even think of buying a machine—but the copy writer and his art department have certainly fixed it fine and sweet for the thousandth man! The other 999 send their application to Trotzky for membership in the Bolsheviki.

What Would an Honest Photograph Do?

The truthful camera wouldn't start a cent toward the automobile agent. Photographing a machine against the side of a corn-crib wouldn't get anywhere—but a nice, fancy misrepresentation of surroundings makes 'em all want to ride. So with the film publicists. Making a cut from a strip of film and surrounding it with words of one syllable would be quite decorous and honest—but it wouldn't sell a ticket!

Consider Honest Cigarette Adverts.

Ever since America decided to help put the Hunzollerns where they belong, various members of the World's Advertising Associates have been eating up columns and pages of newspapers with "honest" advertisements of the little pill that makes puffs. Jackies, Marines and Gobs, Generals, Privates and Mule-skinners have stood up and shouted (in the advertisements) that the Stinkmost lung-tickler won the scrap at Chateau-Thierry. The battleship Pennsylvania has appeared with giant cigarettes smoking in the foreground as funnels. "Gobs" have climbed shrouds that had cigarettes as the place whereon to plant their "tootsies." And did you ever happen to read in the reports from France that eight horses attached to a caisson had charged into battle dragging a box of cigarettes lashed to the spot where cannons generally ride into combat?

Honesty Is the Best Advertising.

Behold the collar button! The kind that bounces back when it hits the floor under the dresser! It's a wonderful invention—in the advertisement. Once beguiled by the "honest" wordsmith of the Associated World's Advertising Clubs; once the little bouncer is in one's possession—does it bounce? We'll say so. It can find chinks and crevices in secret corners of the room that have remained strangers to the vacuum cleaner ever since the day you first started wearing down the lease.

How Pretty the Neck of the Troy Boy!

The only place in the world they make those birds who skin themselves into a new brand of collars is in Troy, New York. They are half brothers of the Kuppheimer Kids, who loll around page advertisements in clothes that never get into the merchant's stock. As you swing on the strap with your nose close to the face of those Sweet Helens of Troy the fit of their collar is a fascination. You get the dope into your system and get it out when you buy one of the collars they are touting. The "honest" advertising doesn't say a word about the patent shoe-horn that is necessary to clinch them around any neck that is larger than a baby's wrist.

Things That Don't Do as Advertised.

How long have you stood on the cold tiling of your bathroom waiting for shaving soap to lather while you wait?

Did you ever see the lake on which the girls who skate in the advertisements look so perfectly scrumptious?

Did you ever on all the lakes and rivers and ponds where you have skated see such ravishingly beautiful Janes as the ones who do figure eights in the selling arguments of the Clubmembers of the Honest Advertisers of the World?

If you have, speak up and we'll print your lies.

"Native" Opposition for Humorists Like Geo. Ade and Booth Tarkington

AL NATHAN, at present manager of the New York Symphony Theatre, has received a very flattering offer to manage one of the leading theatres in Indianapolis, and he has therefore resigned as manager of the Symphony and will leave that house to become a native of the Hoosier state. Mr. Nathan was born right next door, in Illinois. You can't tell (Hoosier neighbor) who's your neighbor.—Publicity.

Difference Between Butte and Here.

IT'S all right to go to New York," says Ralph Ruffner, "but coming back to Butte is different again.

"Now, for instance, there's the 'shimmi dance.' When I tried to demonstrate the twister to my wife she stopped me in the middle of a neck-spin with the question: "Where did you see it done?"

We have it on the word of Chicot that Ruffner told his wife that the "shimmi" was a movement used by chorus girls on the stage at the Winter Garden.

"Where in the world did they get such a movement as that?" was Mrs. Ruffner's insistent follow-up.

"All chorus girls come from Elgin," said Ruffner.

"They'll Eat What Wolves Refuse."

Writing for publication, as he so skillfully does, Terry Ramsaye makes reference to the story connected with "The Heart of Wetona" thusly:

"As presented in the picture version, the production concerns itself with the kind of Indian found exclusively in the storybooks and not on the reservation."

We venture Terry had in mind at the time of writing the Indians who offer for sale to transcontinental travelers baskets, blankets and moccasins—than whom none might be more unwelcome even so near at hand as in screen representation.

Randolph Bartlett is again officially welcomed to Filmtown. He has moved his traps into the headquarters of Myron Selznick's screen ambitions, and will have first to tell us about Olive Thomas and her photographic doings.

Good Luck the Rope Didn't Break.

Corinne Griffith declares that she never believed in signs or was the least bit superstitious until one day last week. She happened to walk under a ladder just as she entered the studio. It was only a few minutes later when Director Kenneth Webb had her tied to a rope and was letting her down the side of a building.

Tables from Terry Ramsaye's Almanac Reflect Wenger's Rivoli Moonshine

JOHN WENGER, in charge of Rivoli's celestial realms, fears not the threatened banishment of John Barleycorn from the well known U. S. A. and Long Island. A star among directors of stage art, he thrives on moonshine and draws the mellow balm from his own personally conducted stills. The Wenger moon directly influences the Wenger tides. His constellation includes moons that are full, half-full and less full, ready to be drawn upon at a nod. Moons and stars float and twinkle according to the Wenger bent with unvarying optical delight.

Mr. Wenger is, indeed, a solar system unto himself, and Terry Ramsaye is his astral recorder; his bright, lustrous and stellate almanacker. As witness, to wit:

John Wenger's favorite moon fell on Jimmy Orr, the Rivoli's electrician, in a back-stage accident the other day. Mr. Orr will recover, but there will be a new moon.

A Pomeranian pup belonging to Anne Rosner, stock solo soprano, in a back-stage pursuit of the Rivoli cat, lately ran through and punctured John Wenger's moon. The art director contemplates installing, as a consequence, an entirely new solar system.

The Rivoli's anniversary booklet is out and contains no picture of John Wenger's moon; unless a cut of Sam Rothapfel's smooth-shaven countenance may be classified as such.

As we go to press John Wenger has not decided whether or not he will use his favorite moon when the Rivoli runs the screen version of Robert Mantell's "Face in the Moonlight."

John Wenger will introduce his entire solar system in conjunction with the orchestral celebration of Paul Dresser's anniversary when "The Moonlight's Fair To-night Along the Wabash" will be concertized by an augmented force of musicians and song-pluggers.

Much to his own unhappiness John Wenger has been forbidden to yodel "Roll On Silvery Moon" during performances at the Rivoli. His vibrant tones floated out into the orchestra pit and disturbed the cadence of the cymbals. Complaints from patrons became too frequent for Hugo Riesenfeld's peace of mind.

John Wenger, art director, was discovered mooning in the fire alley at the Rivoli one evening last week. Fraulein Wenger was the Columbus. Having but a moment before "set" on his lap, Luna rose so quickly that she knocked over Saturn, who sat by his side, and upset Venus, who leaned on the Wenger left.

No more will Luna Park on Wenger's lap.

Miss Newbro Herpicide, according to an advertisement in the dailies, is going to take into pictures the chap with the "Going! Going! Gone!" hair we have gazed upon while poising gracefully on a subway strap.

Welcome, hairless leading man! You may dislodge one of the actless actors.

—w s s—

Films and "Vaude" Have Affinities.

IF YOU GET an "earful" of what the "hoofers" breathe and thrive on as you pass along the Rialto you'll hear much chatter about "big time," "cut weeks" and "Harry Weber caught my act at the Rivoli." It's all show business and has its affinity in the "gas" that arises from the "curb" in front of 729 Seventh avenue, where film salesmen and "junk brokers" crowd the plebian passerby into the gutter.

There is a further affinity in the ratings of the theatres where "hoofers" thespiate and where romance is unreeled from film-spools. Here's about the comparison:

Vaudeville.	Empy Movies.
Big Time	Pre-Release.
Big Time (Cut Weeks)	First run.
Small Big Time.....	Thirty days.
Big Small Time.....	Ninety days.
Medium Small Time....	120 days.
Small Time	Junk.

Long and Short Film Titles Considered in Solemn Session

THE sign capacity of the small exhibitor has been recording Beulah Livingstone's inmost disposition which has been recording follow the lead of Metro in titling "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser, the Fall of the Hunzollerns." The manager of the Idle Hour, Napanee, Iowa, would have no room to admit the public if he had a sign in front of his theatre that would accommodate anything like that.

With an eye to the conservation of "juice" that the exhibitor may have money enough to spare $3 for an annual subscription to the Moving Picture World—the aristocrat of value in a field of one-dollar rivalry—we suggest some single-word titles that might fit better on short signs:

"Infatuation."
For a dank, vampish romp.
"Indiscretion."
Silly wife, mutt husband, villain "triangle."
"Hallucinations."
Satirical matrimonial comedy.
"Ingratitude."
Elizabethan costume drama.
"Incompatibility."
Seething divorce problem.
"Disappointment."
Greenwich Village scandal.
"Injudicionsness."
For a "wronged gal" story.
"Exaggeration."
Press-agent's confessions.
"Intimidation."
Woolly West "gun-play" thriller.
"Contamination."
Russian melodramatic gripper.
"Fascination."
Drooling mystery-plot clincher.
"Retribution."
A Hun-spy scheme exposure.
"Palpitation."
Throbbing, vibrant, nerve-wracker.
"Inhumanity."
Moonshine mountain melodrama.
"Kleptomania."
Simple shop-girl story.
"Insincerity."
High-society exposure drama.
"Immortality."
A slap-stick industrial.
"Extravagance."
A ship-yards' educational.
"Inspiration."
A grand, old flag-waver.
"Contemplation."
Labor problem; strike-at-the-mines.
"Dissipation."
Laundry-girl's romance.
"Concentration."
Bathing-girl dazzler.
"Consummation."
A light-comedy serial.
"Independence."
Divorce-plot hum-dinger.

Jenny Lind's Old Home Gets New Tenant As Beulah Livingstone Moves Northward

THAT typewriter with an "upper case" disposition which has been recording Beulah Livingstone's inmost thoughts about Petrova, et al., has taken a trip north from Fortieth street and is now a fixture in the office of Norma Talmadge's film studio at No. 318 West Forty-eighth street. Jenny Lind's quaint old home is now in possession of Mabel Livingstone, sister of Beulah, and the Beulah-livingstone line of general publicity will continue to be issued, with Agnes Smith occasionally dotting a "i" and Miss Allison Smith "sitting in" on the tea-pourings.

Beulah Livingstone is to hereafter devote her manifest talents to the advancement of Norma Talmadge in the constantly growing pressure on newspaper space. Miss Livingstone succeeded Frank V. Bruner, who lately transferred his Underwood to Pathe with a special view to exploiting Pearl White, the serial squirrel. And just look what Miss Livingstone has accomplished in the past:

Previous to handling Olga Petrova's publicity she was associated with Thomas H. Ince, for whom she handled the run, at the Criterion Theatre, New York, of "Civilization"; with the Sidney Olcott productions, starring Valentine Grant; and with Lillian Walker. In addition to her various activities in the motion picture field, Miss Livingstone has had varied and valuable experience both as advance agent and as general press representative for many plays of the "speaking" stage, having been associated with the productions of F. Ray Comstock, William Elliott, Morris Gest, David Belasco, Henry W. Savage, Jessie Bonstelle and Elisabeth Marbury. As a journalist, before going into publicity work, the New York Sun, New York Tribune and New York American carried many signed articles by Beulah Livingstone.

Small wonder (and worthily) that she copped one of the nicest personal publicity jobs in pictures.

Pauline Frederick Off to Goldwyn's Coast Studios

HAVING completed her first picture for Goldwyn, under the direction of Hobart Henley, Pauline Frederick is on her way to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, near Los Angeles. She left with her husband, Willard Mack, to make a series of several photoplays in Southern California. Mr. Mack was busy almost until train-time acting in his play, "The Big Chance," in which he made an unquestioned personal success, both as author and actor.

Miss Frederick's contract with Goldwyn is the first under which she has had such intimate co-operation with her husband in her work. Mr. Mack has been in the cast of one of her previous plays, but never until the picture just finished did he collaborate to the extent of writing the scenario, playing the most important male role and assisting in the details of direction. At the Goldwyn studios in California Miss Frederick and Mr. Mack will work together all the time. He is taking several manuscripts with him, and has already begun polishing the scenario of Miss Frederick's next picture. His functions in the Goldwyn scenario department will be advisory and constructive.

The first Pauline Frederick picture that Goldwyn will release shortly promises to be the most novel and interesting of all those in which she has been seen, both pictorially and dramatically. It was made from a successful Broadway play written by one of the four most experienced American dramatists.

The play has a genuine social value of historic significance, full of the American spirit, which is typified by the character of the girl played by Miss Frederick herself.

Mr. Mack's role symbolizes the new type of adventurer and carpet-bagger now at the throat of the world's democracies. One of the other prominent male characters in the piece is played by Wyndham Standing, a member of the famous old English family of actors who have been among the most capable and popular upholders of the dignity and high standards of the theatrical profession for 100 years.

Geraldine Farrar Has Role of Alaska Dance Hall Girl

GERALDINE FARRAR in the environment of Alaska—and a dance hall at that—is not the easiest thing to imagine. Yet not one of her admirers will doubt that she can acquit herself as well, dramatically, there as in a drawing-room or on the desert.

Her new Goldwyn picture, "Shadows," has one important episode laid in the Northland, yet for the most part it is played in New York society, where the star has the opportunity to wear magnificent apparel and jewels. But for that matter, her costumes in the dance hall are of exceeding richness.

In the dance hall scenes Miss Farrar is a dramatic tornado, alive with feeling and expression. Those who have seen her only in opera or as "The Hell Cat" will see a new Geraldine Farrar. The international celebrity does some of the best acting in the production right there. She is wistful and appealing as the girl cast off by the man she trusted and contrives not only to reach a higher summit in her acting, but looks quite unlike her familiar self. All the noise and wildness of the place only seemed to bring out more within her.

Universal Adds Publicity Men.

Three new publicity men have been added to the staff of Universal film exchanges. P. A. Mansfield has been assigned to the Pittsburgh exchange, George H. K. Mitford to the Toronto office and James H. Cummings to the Cleveland office. Publicity men will likely be added to the Minneapolis, Indianapolis and Philadelphia exchanges shortly.

"Horses of War" Shows Importance of Equine HORSES of War," the third two-reeler of the U. S. A. Series, presented by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, and handled by the World Film Corporation, will be released January 20, following the first two successful pictures, "If Your Soldier's Hit" and "Wings of Victory," released December 23 and January 6, respectively.

The third picture of the series shows how the horse still holds his place of honor on the field of battle—the vivid, sweeping, irresistible story of the horses of the cavalry and artillery—which, in spite of motor trucks, tractors and tanks, must still be relied upon to help win the day. Also it shows the marvels of training and development and the magnificent action of thousands of fighting horses on all parts of the front.

"Making a Nation Fit," the fourth of the series, shows how the Government made fighting men out of the thousands who were in no physical condition for the task ahead of them, how the physical instructors whipped them into shape and sent the doughboys over as hard as nails. The fifth picture is "The Storm of Steel," illustrating how the Government expended $2,000,000,000 for munitions and guns, the full and complete narrative of the Ordnance Department, facts and figures that are given for the first time and well guarded until after the armistice was signed.

"Common Cause" Booked Solid.

J. Stuart Blackton's "The Comman Cause," which is being released by Vitagraph, is practically booked solid for an extended period over the entire country.

Numerous first runs are already under way and some few initial showings, as, for example, the New Theatre in Baltimore and the Riviera Theatre in Chicago have already closed successful runs.

A He-Man Cast for Lewis' "Children of Banishment"

THE cast for Mitchell Lewis' forthcoming Select picture, "Children of Banishment," which is now being filmed in the Yosemite National Park Reserve, contains the name of only one woman, Bessie Eyton. The other principal members of the company, all stalwart men, are Herbert Hayes, Arthur Morrison and Tom Bates, in addition to "Big Mitch" Lewis. The fact that there is but one woman in Mr. Lewis' forthcoming picture lends just a hint of promise that "Children of Banishment" is going to be a real he-man picture of the glorious days in the golden West.

Mitchell Lewis needs no introduction. Bessie Eyton, his leading woman, played leads in Selig pictures for seven years, while her admirable work as Helen Chester in "The Spoilers" and as Virginia Carvel in "The Crisis," as well as in numberless other pictures, has made her name a familiar one to moving picture patrons.

Of the men in the company, Herbert Hayes, who plays Allen Mackenzie, has enjoyed a long and successful career both on the stage and on the screen. Arthur Morrison, who has the heavy role, that of Dan Silver, the cook, was in Mr. Lewis' "Code of the Yukon." He played in musical comedy six years before entering upon his screen career.

One of the real old-timers of the stage and screen is introduced in this production in the person of Tom Bates, who is seen in the comedy role of Tom Devon, so-called "cookie" of the camp. In his time, Mr. Bates has been an actor, stage director and press agent. Mr. Bates' recent picture work was as Muff Potter in "Huck and Tom" and as the beggar in Colin Campbell's "Garden of Allah." He had the part of the inn-keeper in "The Spoilers." His most recent work was with Dustin Farnum in "Parson of Panamint."

"The Lion and the Mouse," February 24.

Vitagraph's first big special production of the year, "The Lion and the Mouse," in which Alice Joyce and an unusual cast will be seen, is to be released on February 24.

"The Enchanted Barn," which is scheduled for release on January 27, tells of the grave attempt made by a plucky stenographer in a city to provide her invalid mother with a house in the country. Bessie Love is featured, and the picture was directed by David Smith.

Another Pacific seaboard production is an Earle Williams offering. It is entitled "The Highest Trump," and, according to forecast, contains some of the most fetching aerial scenes ever filmed. The story deals with the adventures of an American ace, with love and duty in an age-old and ever-entertaining clash. James Young directed the production.

Vitagraph has twelve companies at work at present. Its two studios, the Brooklyn plant and the one at Hollywood, are going full blast.

Five of these twelve companies are feature organizations, headed by Earle Williams, Harry T. Morey, Corinne Griffith, Bessie Love and Gladys Leslie, respectively. Two are active at the Hollywood studios, namely the Willlams and Love units.

Melford Builds Cathedral Interior.

A replica of the beautiful interior of St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York has been erected at the Lasky Studio for "Private Pettigrew's Girl," the new Paramount picture in which Ethel Clayton is star, directed by George Melford.

The immense altar and other features of the edifice have been constructed with the utmost attention to detail, and when the film is seen upon the screen it will be difficult to determine any indication of its being other than the actuallty.

Brunet Outlines Features of New Pathe Review

IN ANNOUNCING the advent of Pathe Review on January 19 I feel the pride of being associated with a great constructive, educational movement, which will make for progress and general enlightenment," says General Manager Paul Brunet, of Pathe. "Here the motion picture is fulfilling some of the inspired vision of President Wilson in his Shadow Lawn talk to the representatives of the Motion Picture Industry.

"The Review, as a definite factor, establishes a new era in screen entertainment; and so unusual is what we have to offer that I am moved to say it is a wonderland series, in which the best talent in science and art is employed. It is a constant revelation of the world of the invisible and of the most beautiful things that the ordinary eye may not behold; of enchanted journeys to unusual destinations, glorified by the rainbow; of unsuspected mysteries of ordinary things; of the secrets of the wild, sly creatures of the forest, and the denizens of streams and the shadowy abysses of the ocean—and, through the mechanical eye that gazes with understanding into the realm of the infinitely small, it gives an astounding glimpse of the very beginning of the life of moving things.

"The Review really had its inception eight years ago in France, when Pathe established the first cinematic scientific library. For this purpose a completely equipped laboratory, planned to meet almost any demand of research, was established under the direction of Dr. Comandon, whose miscroscopic researches are now known all over the world.

"He is a man of brilliant mental and technical equipment and an experimenter whose daring has been productive of many marvelous results. With Dr. Comandon co-operated the experts of the photographic division, who followed his microscopic observations, and, finally, a mechanical revealer and recorded was devised which has revolutionized bacteriological research—the ultra-microscopic camera—which has opened up a universe of the invisibly small but potent things.

"The pictures that make an analysis of motion are one of the big outstanding features of the Pathe Review. So quick is the specially designed Pathe camera that takes these photographs that the observer easily may follow the course of a bullet fired from a revolver. The first picture under this class shown in the Review is an analysis of the plays in a baseball game. It was given a private showing recently to baseball writers and experts; they are most enthusiastic regarding it.

"These pictures are taken by the special camera at the rate of 128 a second, or eight times the normal speed of a motion picture camera. They are projected at the normal rate of 16 a second. At this speed it takes eight seconds to project 128 pictures that were taken by the analysis of motion camera. The action, therefore, is slowed down to eight times less than the normal."

Big Demand for Ford Weekly.

Correspondence between Goldwyn, in New York, and the Ford Motor Company, in Detroit, concerns itself chiefly at this time with increasing the number of prints of the Ford Educational Weekly. Under the Goldwyn auspices, the Ford Educational Weekly from the present outlook will soon be working 250 single-reel prints of each weekly release.

Reports from the Goldwyn offices indicate on the basis of prints supplied them that each print in hand has a solid four weeks' booking, and this condition has resulted in a further increase in prints to give the nation's exhibitors more immediate service.

Pre-release of "What Uncle Sam Will Do for Two Cents," the first issue of the Ford Educational Weekly through the Goldwyn organization, was held in various parts of America for the week beginning January 5, and the especial timeliness of this pictorial record of the operations of our federal post-office department at a moment when the entire public knows that domestic postage will return to two cents an ounce made the initial picture challenge interest everywhere.

Critics Praise Screen Work of Bennison.

Louis Bennison has scored on the screen the personal success that marked his appearance on the legitimate stage in New York several years ago in "Johnnny Get Your Gun," when he delighted Broadway by his impersonation of a cowboy with a sense of humor.

The vehicle of Mr. Bennison's screen success, "Oh, Johnny!" was shown for the first time at a week's pre-release run in the Victoria Theatre, Philadelphia. The star's cinema debut drew from critics and public the same enthusiastic praise accorded his work in the stage play, with the added comment that the wider scope of the screen broadens the field of his talents.

Keenan Heads Pathe List in "The Midnight Stage"

FRANK KEENAN heads the Pathe program for January 13 in "The Midnight Stage," an adaptation to a far Western setting of "The Lyons Mail," one of the favorite dramas of the late Henry Irving, and in which Mr. Keenan made a notable stage success. He considers this screen version the most perfect silent picture in which he has thus far appeared. It is released as a Pathe extra selected star photoplay. Directed by Ernest C. Warde, it is interpreted by a special cast, including Mignon Anderson, Maude George, Charles Gunn, Joseph J. Dowling, Thomas Guise, Wadsworth Harris and Ernest C. Warde.

Episode No. 2 of "The Lightning Raider," the Pearl White serial, is called "The Counterplot," and sustains the promise of the first installment in swift action, suspense and physical daring. It is full of unusual surprises.

Harold Lloyd, vivacious Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard have a riotously happy medium in the Rolin comedy, "Wanted 5,000." One of the brightest newspaper paragraphers on the Pacific Coast has cleverly caught the spirit of laughs in writing the titles.

"Wolves of Kultur," featuring Leah Baird, with Sheldon Lewis and Charles Hutchison, reaches its fourteenth episode in "The Code of Hate." It is full of land and water adventures and is speeded up for a big sensational finish.

The Post Travel Series, No. 27, deals with well-contrasting views of Shanghai, the chief port of China. With this release the series comes to an end.

Official War Review No. 29 offers liberal "shots," showing the activities of the four Allied armies and is full of action and excitement. It is one of the best of the very excellent recent releases.

Universal Shows Transport's Stranding.

Universal Current Events, released this week, shows the first pictures of the transport Northern Pacific stranded on the sandy shores of Fire Island and also shows the work of the sailors in rescuing the 2,459 returning soldiers on board. A lifeboat laden with wounded soldiers is seen capsizing and tossing its human cargo into the sea, and the rescue of the men.

Other scenes in the weekly are those of King Emmanuel's visit to the peace parley preliminaries at Paris and views of the receptions given President and Mrs. Wilson in the French capital. The inauguration of Governor Albert L. Smith at Albany, some exceptional aviation views, and scenes showing how the Yanks put the finishing touches to the Hun, complete the weekly's subjects.

Scene of Timely Interest in "Fighting Roosevelts"

THE death of Theodore Roosevelt recalls a strange scene that occurs in "The Fighting Roosevelts," the authorized Roosevelt picture now being released by Frederick L. Collins, through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Director William Nigh, who directed "My Four Years in Germany," in his efforts to obtain novel effects in the Roosevelt picture, portrays a striking scene in which Roosevelt enters the White House to take the chair left vacant by the death of President William McKinley. The film shows a shadow figure of McKinley occupying the chair. Before him is his favorite desk, and he seems to be brooding over the unfinished work he has left.

Roosevelt enters the room. He is deeply conscious of the solemnity of the moment. He paces across the room, and as he comes in front of the chair the shadow figure of McKinley arises and vanishes. Roosevelt sits down as his successor and remains a few moments in deep thought, then, as though inspired by the presence of McKinley, Roosevelt calls in Mr. McKinley's staff and tells them that there will be no changes in the personnel of the White House, that those who were good enough for McKinley are good enough for him.

False Starts Were Corrected.

Little thought of ever being concerned with the making of motion pictures disturbed the serenity of Bertram Bracken and Wellington Playter when the two men began the business of supporting themselves. These two are with Billie Rhodes in the gypsy love story, "In Search of Arcady," in which she plays her third star role for release by the Exhibitors' Mutual.

Bracken, the director, began life in a bank with the idea of eventually wearing a white vest, but the game was too thrilling, so he got a job with the Fifteenth United States Cavalry, with which organization he remained for eighteen months. Playter, who plays an important role in this picture, succeeded in getting himself graduated from the New York Normal School with the view to becoming a teacher, but he was diverted.

Miller Installs Two Power's.

The new Miller Theatre, of Los Angeles, which was recently opened, is one of the most pretentious theatres in the state. Particular attention has been given to the projection, which is furnished by two Power's 6-B Cameragraphs, installed by the Pacific Amusement Supply Company.

Official Review 29 Shows President Wilson Afloat

FULL details of President Wilson's voyage to Europe are shown on the screen in Official War Review No. 29, for release by Pathe January 13. The President is shown aboard the George Washington amid the impressive scenes of his departure from New York. The pilot is dropped as the ship starts to sea, and the battleship Pennsylvania leads the President's ship on the way. Close-ups are shown of Captain McCauley and Admiral Knapp.

The President's ship is shown in a storm, and scenes are given showing that the United States Navy is still full of fight just to illustrate that it stands behind its commander in chief. A lifeboat drill is given on the George Washington, and Mrs. Wilson screens herself behind the President. A demonstration is given of how depth bombs blew up the U-boats.

Upon reaching European waters the American fleet escorts the George Washington to the French coast, and the French reception committee, with General Pershing, comes aboard ship. President Wilson establishes the precedent of being the first American President to set foot on European soil. Scenes are given of the President in the Place de l'Opera, Paris. This will prove one of the most interesting and historically valuable issues of the Official War Review.

Five Notable Selects for January.

Select Pictures Corporation takes occasion to celebrate the advent of the new year by announcing five notable productions for distribution during the month of January. These attractions, and the order in which they will be released, are Anna Case in "The Hidden Truth," a Select Special; Constance Talmadge in "Who Cares?"; Clara Kimball Young in "Cheating Cheaters"; Alice Brady in "The Indestructible Wife," and Marion Davies in "The Belle of New York."

Anna Case's picture, "The Hidden Truth," marks this stars first appearance as a screen artist, after many years of success as the Metropolitan Opera's "American Beauty of Prima Donnas." Miss Case is seen as the orphan of a Western mining camp who through various circumstances and a hidden truth becomes the wife of a wealthy Eastern manufacturer. The picture was directed by Julius Steger, and the scenario was written by S. W. Weller.

Red Cross Reel Shows Russia as It Is.

THE popular theory that Russia is altogether a land of snow and riots meets quite a refutation in the new Red Cross reel entitled "Russia a World Problem," at General Film exchanges.

This reel was photographed during the recent tour of the American Red Cross Commission to Russia, by Lieutenant Harold Wyckoff, who was recently again dispatched to accompany the American troops which entered Russia through Archangel.

The railroad cars in which the late Czar abdicated, the palaces which he occupied, and public buildings which the Bolsheviki stormed in the leading cities of Russia, sidelights on the recreations of well-to-do Russians, with the pathetic contrast of life among the peasants, are graphically pictured as the reel unwinds from its beginning at Moscow until its close on the great Siberian Railroad traveling toward the far East.

The audience is taken down the Volga to Kief and Odessa into the fertile fields of the Ukraine to the shore of the Black Sea, thence through the great so-called granary of the world into Siberia.

Billie Shocks Keystone Censors.

The first shock that came to Billie Rhodes as a first-run star was the report of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors' view of her "Girl of My Dreams." There are some rather attractive scenes in the first reel of the picture, and Miss Rhodes, as a wild sort of a mountain girl, takes an occasional dip in a secluded pool known only to her director and camera man.

The plot depends quite largely on a surreptitious photographing of the girl in the pool by a man who is subsequently proud to be her father. In one scene her brother steals her clothes, and she pulls his overalls off, then puts them on, and chases him up a hill. When they get home there is another case of double and triple exposure.

However, while there are some excellent views of Billie Rhodes, Frankie Bailey and Kitty Gordon, the flashes are so handled as to give no offense, except, perhaps, to the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors.

Veterans with Bessie Barriscale.

Three veterans of the stage of long service and two more youthful actors of tried screen experience comprise the cast of five men who support Bessie Barriscale in "All of a Sudden Norma," released by the Exhibitors' Mutual.

The older men of the group are Melbourne McDowell, Frank Leigh and that tall, white-haired master of a dozen "Southern gentleman" roles, Joseph J. Dowling. Mr. Leigh as the Duke of Duffield surprises the burglarizing Norma when she enters his room in dainty pajamas with the intention of stealing a necklace. It is an important catch.

The suddenness of Norma is a continual source of dismay to Cuthbert Van Zelt, a British comedy role played by Albert Colby; R. Henry Grey plays the other more youthful role out of a wealth of experience in comic opera, drama, stock and on the screen.

"The Lightning Raider (Pathe).

"The Counterplot" is the title of the second episode of Pearl White's new Pathe serial, "The Lightning Raider," and it enables Miss White, as the Raider, to shine in the most exclusive circles of New York in her efforts to secure the dreaded Ebony Block which Wu Fang has taken from her. This episode is scheduled for release on January 12 and is fully as exciting and thrilling as the first chapter.

"Manager Wanted" is an advertisement frequently appearing in The World's Classified Department. Give it a try and better your position. Others have done so.

Circle to Put On Cannibal Picture for Fortnight

MARTIN JOHNSON'S picture, "Cannibals of the South Seas," will attract the attention of patrons of the well-known Circle Theatre of Indianapolis for two weeks commencing January 12.

Announcement of this unusually long booking has created no little comment among leading exhibitors throughout the country owing to the prestige enjoyed by S. Barret McCormick, manager of the Circle.

Always a leader in the Middle West, his selections and advertising methods have recently attracted considerable notice.

This present booking achievement marks a new record for the Circle, with the exception of "The Birth of a Nation" and one or two other super-features of the same calibre, and has brought added confidence to officials of the Exhibitors' Mutual, distributors of the Cannibal feature, that they were correct in their opinion that the film would draw big.

The nature of the picture offers a special sort of advertising. When used consecutively for two weeks it raises several points. That Mr. McCormick will utilize them successively is not doubted, but the manner in which he does it will prove interesting. He will be stimulated in putting over the final installment by the fact that these reels contain the incidents connected with the capture of Martin Johnson and his attractive young wife by the vicious Nagapate, perhaps one of the most notorious Cannibal chiefs of the Solomon group.

Their rescue through the timely arrival of a British man-of-war was decidedly not a "staged" affair.

Mr. McCormick's cleverness in display bills exhibited recently in exploiting "Pershing's Crusaders" can be counted upon to make the most of this dramatic theme of the final installment to the end of registering in the minds of visitors at the first show that the second one is not a return engagement, but something distinctly additional and new.

The splendid orchestra of the Circle Theatre will be augmented, and will accompany the picture with many original themes, including the music especially written for the production.

Ruby De Remer in Lockwood Support.

Screen Classics, Inc., announces that the complete cast selected to support Harold Lockwood in his forthcoming feature, "The Great Romance," numbers among its members Ruby De Remer, Frank Currier, Louis Stern, Joseph Granby, Helen Lindroth, Morgan Thorpe, J. P. Laffey, Franklyn Hanna and Clare Grenville. This striking screen play of New York and a small kingdom in Europe gives the late star one of the best opportunities in years; and those who have had a glimpse of scenes from the picture assert he never has appeared to greater advantage. The production was made under the direction of Henry Otto. The story is by Finis Fox.

In recognition especially of her excellent work with Mr. Lockwood in a previous Screen Classics production Miss De Remer was engaged to play opposite him. Her charm was undeniable as the heroine in Mr. Lockwood's "Pals First."

High Spots In "Who Cares?"

Two of the high spots in "Who Cares?" Constance Talmadge's Select picture for January, in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, are a fashionable display of surf costumes and a brilliant cafe scene copied from one of the most famous places in America.

The beach scenes in "Who Cares?" are numerous, and in them Miss Talmadge introduces several decidedly modish bathing costumes. Unlike the average young woman who makes one bathing suit do service for a whole season, Miss Talmadge in "Who Cares?" has a different suit for every dip in the surf.

The set for the cafe scenes is a replica of one of the most famous resorts in America, and, as a special feature, Margaret Loomis is seen in a solo dancing performance.

The spirit of youth and spring are the motivating forces behind the story, which, despite the fact that it is a problem play, is declared to be beautifully and delicately handled.

Two Novels for Metro Stars.

May Allison will follow up her recent Metro successes by appearing next on the screen in "The Isle of Intrigue," an adaptation of Isabel Ostrander's absorbing novel of love and adventure. Work on the production is now in process in the Metro studios in Hollywood. Another popular novel, "The Blind Man's Eyes," by William McHarg and Edwin Balmer, forms the basis of a recently begun feature starring Bert Lytell, who scored so decisively in "The Spender."

June Elvidge and Frank Mayo in "The Bluffer" (World).

Metro Has Big List of Releases for February

METRO has scheduled for release during February four All Star Series productions and two unusual Screen Classics, Inc., specials. For variety and timeliness and for the excellence in the presentation of screen stars in photoplays especially suited to them, the coming month's offerings by this company surpass precedent.

Bert Lytell heads the list, February 3, in "Faith"; Edith Storey appears a week later in "As the Sun Went Down," followed by "Johnny on the Spot," the 17th, with Hale Hamilton as the star, and May Allison has the title role in "Peggy Does Her Darndest," which is released the 24th.

The two big specials are "Why Germany Must Pay," a stirring, dramatic visualization of the crime which Prussia is but beginning to expiate; and "The Great Romance," starring the magnetic Harold Lockwood, is filled with all the color of youth and love and adventure.

Richard Washburn Child's story, so ably translated to the screen by George D. Baker and A. G. Kenyon for Bert Lytell, is one of the dreams which were not shattered but just worn threadbare by discouragement, and then revived, made to come true by the unswerving faith of two women.

In "Faith" Lytell has the part of George Farrelly, who has run away from school to go to the city in search of the fame and fortune popularly supposed to be there.

The cast includes Edythe Chapman, Rosemary Theby, Edwin Stevens and Nancy Chase. The direction was in the hands of Charles Swickard.

To paraphrase an expression that Frederick Remington, greatest of painters of the life of the West, once used, "As the Sun Goes Down" is a story with the bark on. Never had Edith Storey appeared to better advantage than as the picturesque "Colonel Billy" of Rattlesnake Gulch, a mushroom mining town of the days of '49.

Chief in support of Miss Storey is Lewis J. Cody, and the cast includes Harry S. Northrup, William Brunton, Alfred Hollingsworth, E. A. Turner, Frances Burnham, Za Su Pitts, F. E. Spooner, Vera Lewis and George W. Berrell. The picture was adapted by George D. Baker and directed by E. Mason Hopper and photographed by William Thompson.

May Allison has the most original role yet presented on the screen—that of a tomboy vampire. Robert Ellis again is her leading man. The cast includes Wilton Taylor, Dick Rosson, Sylvia Ashton and Ernest Morrison, a little colored fellow.

In "Johnny on the Spot," Hale Hamilton has a screen part that is expected to score for him such phenomenal successes as his work on the stage Wallingford, in "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," in "A Pair of Sixes," and other big Broadway hits. He is pictured as a young writer, somewhat dreamy and genial in his outlook on life.

As Ann Travers Louise Lovely does splendid work in support of the star. The director is Harry L. Franklin, and the others of the cast are Phil McCullough, Ruth Orlamond, Edward J. Connelly, Hardee Kirkland, Lillie Leslie, E. N. Wallack, Neal Hardin, Oral Humphreys and Fred H. Warren. The scenario was made by June Mathis from the story by Shannon Fife.

It was Maxwell Karger who wrote in novel form the story of "Why Germany Must Pay," an exposition in striking form of the colossal wrong that Prussianism in its ruthlessness has done the world for all time. June Mathis and A. S. Le Vino have adapted the story.

Harold Lockwood is seen at his best in his latest picture, "The Great Romance," as a young man believing himself an American, but really born in a little kingdom in the middle of Europe, and summoned back just as he reaches manhood, to save the native land he never knew from militarism and despotism.

Pathe Photographs Stranded Transport.

The story of the wreck on Fire Island bar of the army transport Northern Pacific is told in vivid detail by the Pathe News, two of whose cameramen were early on the scene after the ship went aground. It is a big picture feature, thrilling with interest as the work of rescue is under way—the great sweep of the tumbling, winter sea, with the disabled giant pounding on the sands which hold her fast; the flotilla of naval vessels, which had been standing by since the Northern Pacific went ashore early New Year's morning and vainly spread oil in an endeavor to quiet the raging sea; the courageous work of the Coast Guard in surf boats, battling in the breakers and bringing soldiers and Red Cross nurses safely to the bleak, windswept beach. This issue of the Pathe News is the release of January 4.

Better opportunities are offered in The World's Classified Advertising than in any other medium known to the trade. Large needs have been supplied by small advertisements. Think it over and then "give it a try." Others find it profitable.

Big First Run Demands For Two Select Specials

REPORTS received by Select from its exchanges show that two of this company's big special attractions, "The One Woman" and "The Cavell Case," the latter in which Julia Arthur is seen as the woman the Germans shot, are in big demand by first run houses.

"The One Woman," which was Select's first special of the season, has been booked solid over the entire Poli circuit in New England, including such centers as Bridgeport, New Haven, Hartford, Waterbury, Springfield and Worcester. It has also been booked for all of Marcus Loew's theatres and in addition will be seen at Lou de Hoff's New Theatre, in Baltimore; Tom Moore's Strand, in Washington; Guy Wonders' Wilson Theatre, in Baltimore; Fay's Theatre, in Providence; the Palace, in Philadelphia; Colonial, in Reading; all of the Commerford theatres in Pennsylvania; the Newark Theatre, in Newark, N. J., and in all of the big Turner and Dohnken houses in the San Francisco and Oakland districts of the West Coast.

The Coast Takes to It.

H. L. Knappen, branch manager of Select's San Francisco exchange, reports that "The One Woman" is doing a big business in all of the coast cities, while glowing accounts from other branch managers are a daily occurrence. Charles Freeman, manager of the Regent, in New Castle, Pa., sent the following wire to Lea F. Levison, branch manager of Select's Pittsburgh exchange: "Congratulations on 'The One Woman.' Best picture ever seen."

"The Cavell Case," which Select claims is in many respects one of the greatest and timeliest special atractions ever produced, has already played a majority of the biggest first run theatres. Late reports show that it has been booked solid over the entire Ascher Brothers and Lubliner & Trinz circuits in Chicago, in all totaling twenty-four houses, not including the Pastime Theatre, also of Chicago, where it played a pre-release of one week.

Altogether, "The Cavell Case" will be played first run throughout forty odd trade zones in the mid-western metropolis.

Mining Town Gets Films by Way of Muleback Post

ANOTHER miracle has come to the Kentucky mountains, the miracle wrought by the motion picture. In the fastness of the hills which only a short time ago were given up to moonshine and feuds Pershing and his Crusaders ride, Ambassador Gerard confronts the Kaiser, Charlie Chaplin shuffles his irresistible feet, Tarzan has his adventures, and soon Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge and all the other First National Exhibitors' famous stars and great productions will be seen.

The pictures are shown in the Recreation Building at Jenkins, Ky., a city which was built in the mountains a few years ago by the Consolidation Coal Company when it developed the coal resources of the Kentucky mountains.

Films Reach "Backwoods."

A. W. Jordan, superintendent of the Recreation Building at Jenkins, Ky., is an enthusiast over the First National pictures, and has booked them through the Big Feature Rights' Corporation, of Louisville, Ky.

Though Jenkins, Ky., is now a flourishing mining city it is still remote. A film is on the road a week going to Jenkins and back. George Starkey, Jr., representative of the Big Feature Rights' Corporation, took some of the first films there for presentation and has had to carry General Pershing, the Kaiser, Gerard and other famous film presentations over the mountains on mule back.

Paramount-Flagg Company to Produce in Jacksonville

IN AN EFFORT to obtain the blessings of sunshine and sufficient footage for some new Paramount-Flagg comedies, the entire organization of Town and Country Films, Inc., has moved to Jacksonville, Fla., for a stay of about one month. By the first of February the company hopes to have completed work on the three scripts which are to be taken on the Southern journey, and will then return to New York to assemble and edit the comedies before beginning work upon another.

Members of the party were Jack Eaton, Mr. and Mrs. James Montgomery Flagg, Saul Harrison, director, and Mrs. Saul Harrison; Harry Gripp, technical manager; Olin Howland, who has been featured in a number of the most successful Paramount-Flagg comedies, and Beatrice Tremaine, who will be remembered for her work in "Tell That to the Marines." Miss Dorothy Fitch, a newly discovered beauty who will work under the direction of Mr. Flagg; Joe Burke and James Harris, two well known actors, and Harry Squire and Charlie Smith, cameramen. Joe Burke will be remembered for his work in "Independence, B'Gosh."

Scenes for "Beresford of the Baboons," one of the three scripts taken south by Mr. Flagg, will be taken near Atlantic Beach, Florida. Another story upon which the company will work is "The Last Bottle," the story of the last bottle of champagne in the world, when the world goes dry. This story will be filmed at Jacksonville. "Pride and Po'k Chops," a Southern travesty, will be photographed in or around Camden, S. C.

Select Builds in New York Big Atlantic City Setting

ONE of the most expensive and elaborate sets for motion picture work ever built was the one seen in Alice Brady's studio on West Fifty-sixth street last week, reproducing the main lobby of the Traymore, in Atlantic City, for one of the scenes in the picture which Alice Brady is making to succeed "The Indestructible Wife," her Select series attraction announced for January. It is being directed by Charles Maigne.

Several location shots on this picture were made in Atlantic City, but owing to the fact that Miss Brady is obliged to be in New York every evening for her regular performance in "Forever After," at the Playhouse, and the inconvenience of transporting the large number of "extras" for the interior scenes, Director Maigne found it necessary to call for a reproduction of the Traymore lobby to be built in Miss Brady's New York studio.

The set, as it stood when completed, was more than 100 feet long and from 40 to 50 feet wide at some places. It took a score of carpenters and scene builders nearly a week to make it, and when it was finally finished persons who are familiar with the interior of the Traymore declared it to be a perfect likeness in every detail.

Shooting in North Carolina.

Sometimes Doris Kenyon thinks she would have made a most successful cameraman. Perched on top of a mountain in North Carolina during the making of her De Luxe picture, "Twilight," Miss Kenyon is pointing out to her director, J. Searle Dawley, what she imagines would be a great "shot."

Next Fairbanks Picture a Speedy Western.

Douglas Fairbanks has decided to follow "Arizona" with a "high-geared, no speed limit" Western comedy drama. After a unique, allegorical opening, there will be an attractive episode in a New York club, at which time Douglas' reason for considering the Horace Greeley bromide, "Go West, Young Man," is explained.

This Fairbanks-Artcraft release should be labeled "a hand-made picture," because of the weeks of time devoted to developing the story. Each episode has been carefully constructed by Doug's staff, which included Elton Banks, Joseph Henaberry, Ted Reed, Frank Condon and Albert Parker, who will act in the capacity of director. There is a great possibility that Wyoming will be selected as the background.

"The Silver King" Is Fifth Paramount-Artcraft Special

"THE SILVER KING," fifth of the Paramount-Artcraft Specials to be released and the vehicle in which William Faversham, the noted English actor and producer, makes his reappearance upon the screen, is declared to be an ideal photoplay, in that it includes practically every element that goes to make up a great motion picture. Suspense, adventure, romance, thrills, Western action and mystery are some of the elements to be found in the screen adaptation of the world-famous play by Henry Arthur Jones which has held the stage for many years. It provides the star with one of his greatest roles of a screen and stage career of international fame.

An exceptional production has been given "The Silver King" by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Not only has the star been surrounded by an exceptionally strong and capable cast, but the story was produced under the direction of George Irving, who has to his credit such successes as "The Conquest of Canaan," "The Witching Hour" and "Rafflles." The scenario was prepared by Burns Mantle, a New York dramatic critic. Among those who appear in support of Mr. Faversham are Barbara Castleton, Nadia Gray, Lawrence Johnson, John Sutherland, Warburton Gamble, Helen Meyers, John Sunderland, Daniel Pennell, Cecil Yapp, William O'Day, Louis Hendricks and Robert Ayrton.

Fairbanks Heads W. S. S. Sellers.

Douglas Fairbanks has been placed in charge of a flying squadron of five hundred of the best commercial salesmen in Los Angeles to put some "ginger" into their limit pledge campaign for War Savings Stamps. Imbued with the Fairbanks "pep" these W. S. S. salesmen are going out after enough thousand-dollar limit pledges to make up the deficit which Los Angeles is facing in her War Savings Stamps quota.

Prizma Continues at Rivoli.

So successful was the experience of the Rivoli Theatre, New York, both from the point of view of the enthusiasm of the audience and the box office with Prizma Master Pictures that the management immediately booked it again for the week following, and will continue each week with these pictures in natural color.

Nazimova's "Out of the Fog" Coming Next Month

EARLY in February, Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger will present "Out of the Fog," fourth of the famous Nazimova productions to be distributed by Metro. It is a powerful, vital and absorbing drama of life along the New England seacoast. In the stage play from which this screen masterpiece was adapted, "'Ception Shoals," by H. Austin Adams, Mme. Nazimova scored one of the greatest of her many triumphs when the piece was presented at the Thirty-Ninth Street Theatre in New York.

Mr. Rowland and Mr. Karger say that "Out of the Fog" will even surpass Nazimova's former productions. This actress' versatility is apparent from a consideration of the diversity of the characters she portrays. In "Out of the Fog" she appears as Faith, Job Coffin's unhappy sister, and again as Eve, her oddly reared daughter. Job Coffin is the grim keeper of a lonely, surf-swept lighthouse off the Massachusetts coast.

The finished picture is described as a masterpiece of production. To get the realism, yet not to lose the sternness, the almost uncanny atmosphere of the early part of the story ending with Faith's despairing leap into the waters from the top of the lighthouse far above, Director Albert Capellani and Eugene Gaudio, the cameraman, co-operated splendidly.

The filming of the lighthouse scenes was done at the very place the story calls for. It was necessary to arrange with Washington for permission to shoot the picture on the original ground. Close-ups of giant waves, the taking of which came near costing Mr. Gaudio his life despite the efforts of a human chain holding him, and some entirely new photographic effects giving a real picture of the fog—something never achieved before—are instances of the thoroughness of the work.

Charles Bryant makes a most manly and pleasing Phillip Blake, and Henry Harman as Job Coffin does convincing work. Included in the large cast are Nancy Palmer, George W. Davis, T. Morse Koupal, Charles Smiley, Tom Blake, Hugh Jeffrey, Dorothy Smoller, J. O'Connor, Harry Weiss, Ada Scovill, Marie Gynt and Lydia Wellmore.

Circus Featured in "Hoopla."

It takes more than sawdust and a few tents to make a circus. This was the principle on which the producers operated in making "Hoopla," a comedy feature starring Billie Rhodes to be released soon by the Exhibitors' Mutual.

There's the matter of the small boy with his willingness to fall through three rows of people to get that bottle of pop the man bought for him, and there's the parade led by the band and the side show with the bearded lady and the living skeleton, and there's clowns and more clowns, and there's the real trapeze performers, and there's the barker with his big horn, and there's popcorn, peanuts an' everything. There's so much regular stuff surrounding the story that one can actually hear the uproar of shoving, pleasure-bent crowds and actually smell the sawdust and tanbark.

England's Queen Featured in "Women Who Win" Film

THOMAS H. DAVIDSON, film agent, of 171 Wardour street, London, W. C., will distribute in America the film that has lately been completed in England as a testimonial to woman's work in winning the war. There are many interesting features incidental to the production, one conspicuous attraction being the Queen of England as a leading player.

Her Majesty has interested herself in woman's share in war work from the very first day of the world war, and her appearance in "Women Who Win" was her final mark of appreciation. The scenes in which she "acts" were taken at Agricultural Hall, London, when the Queen walked into an episode where women were "repairing" airplanes as part of their industrious aid in winning.

The story on which "Women Who Win" is based was written by Miss Almaz Stout, and Percy Nash made the film production. The feature is 6,000 feet in length and, apart from its political and industrial elements, Mr. Davison assures us that there is a powerful domestic story to sustain the interest. Mr. Davison is handling the world's selling rights and expects to find in America a demand that will in some measure reflect the awakened co-ordination the war has fostered between the citizens of the United States and the United Kingdom.

English players of reputable standing enact the principal roles in "Women Who Win," a feature produced under the auspices of Woman's Service, the feminine branch of Governmental war work for the past four years. Miss Unity Moore, Phillis Villiers and Mary Dibley are the "professional" stars of the filmplay in which Queen Mary has the "star billing." C. M. Hillard is the principal male player. J. C. Bee Mason had charge of the photography. "Women Who Win" will be released in the United States and Canada forthwith.

World Making All-Star Picture.

Over at Fort Lee in the studio of World Pictures, work is in progress on the all-star feature, "The Price of Doubt," in which Montagu Love, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley, George MacQuarrie, Jack Drumier and Johnnie Hines will be starred. This photoplay is not a war picture. The scenario was written by Wallace Clifton and Harry O. Hoyt under the direction of Charles Sarver, scenario editor of World Pictures. Del Henderson is directing. It will be the most pretentious offering seen on the World program in several years.

"Fighting Through" Is Story of the South To-Day

W. CHRISTY CABANNE, who is the producer, director and author of "Fighting Through," a story of adventure, for distribution on January 27 by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through the Pathe exchanges, is a native of the South. He received his education at the Culver Military Academy and his early career was spent in the United States Navy.

Mr. Cabanne's idea for the story, which is built around the South of to-day, was not one of those sudden inspirations. Rather it was an idea born of observation during his naval service.

"My service in the United States Navy proved to me that the North and South divided and reunited by the sword of war was the biggest theme an American author could write upon. The theme of a reunited North and South seems fraught with splendid possibilities. Nearly always when an author of the stage or screen goes South for his locale he serves us a dish of Civil War, frequently dragged in, hashed and rehashed until the subject has grown stale and musty.

"Now, as a Southerner, I think we ought, except in a psychologic sense, to get away from that overworked, romantic Civil War period. It seems that everybody began to love us Southerners after we were defeated. Much of what occurs in 'Fighting Through' happened in my own household. It wasn't written—it grew in the Cabanne family."

"Fighting Through" presents E. K. Lincoln in the difficult role of a hero who must sacrifice some of the audience's sympathy in the beginning, only to regain it gloriously in the end. While crammed full of the true spirit of American patriotism, the film is not a war story. Millicent Fisher supports the star as leading woman and others in the capable cast are Helen Dunbar, Hayward Mack, Spottiswoode Aitken and Frederick Vroom.

Pre-Release Bookings Heavy on Vitagraph's New Serial

WHEN William Duncan started work on "The Man of Might" he wired Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, that he was going to make his earlier serial efforts look like "three plugged nickels." As usual, Duncan has made good.

Requests are reaching the home office of Vitagraph from representative exhibitors all over the country that the release date of the new serial be advanced so that they can begin to run it immediately, for they claim that its power at the box-office should be given as an aid to theatres at the earliest date possible.

Vitagraph reports that "The Man of Might," weeks before release date, already is booked to greater business that was written by any of its earlier serials on release. Outstanding among the more important bookings are forty-nine theatres that have never before run serials.

The new serial was written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, the authors of Vitagraph's previous serial successes. William Duncan is the star and director and is supported by an all star cast including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan.

The episodes already screened for the exhibitors of the country show a variety of location and atmosphere and a novelty of thrill and daring that will be an unending delight to lovers of adventure and excitement. In the first episode some of the most remarkable hand-to-hand fighting and wrestling ever recorded by the camera are shown, and these fights take place on shipboard as well as on terra firma.

A national billboard campaign is being launched for "The Man of Might," and a complete plan book and a big set of advertising and publicity aids will be available.

"Made in America" Shows Evolution of the Draftee

ONLY a few months ago they were familiar sights—the straggling groups of draftees off to the training camps. Now they are only memories, but what a picturesque bunch they were, marching through the streets with dress-suit cases, grips and bundles. When they got to camp Uncle Sam took these raw recruits in hand. First out of the nondescript civilian suits and into the neat khaki; then the setting-up drills and the marching and military manoeuvring; these same boys were transformed into snappy, upstanding soldiers, who moved about with heads up and shoulders thrown back, who saluted with machine-like precision.

But the physical training and the military drill were not all. Those same recruits were taught to think. Those who were deficient in education were educated; those who had useful trades were given occupations where their practical knowledge was of the greatest use.

All this and much more is told with realism in "Made in America," the eight-reel motion picture series released one each week, produced by Ashley Miller with the co-operation of the Government and published and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Every American wants to know how it was done, how this peace-loving nation marshalled its hosts from farm, from office and workship and transformed the war material into unbeaten and unbeatable armies. It is all vividly told in "Made in America."

Do Repeat Engagements Pay? Yes, Says Wm. Fox

THE quality test of a motion picture is its drawing power after the first flush of youth. Many pictures do well for a limited period, but the big successes of the business have been revenue producers for indefinite periods—some of them for years.

It is probable, however, that the average exhibitor, though realizing there is a great difference between the box office values even of big pictures, does not appreciate how long some of these productions continue as winners. The picture is played—and becomes part of the history of the exhibitor's house. If he thinks about a return engagement it usually is with respect to immediate playing dates. The fact that other exhibitors are showing the production months or even years later and making just as much money as those who showed it earlier does not occur to him.

One of the contentions of producers with respect to good pictures always has been that it is impossible to exhaust their possibilities locally with one engagement, even if that engagement be for a full week in a house of large capacity. This argument, it is contended, is strongly substantiated by the experience of William Fox with the Theda Bara super-production, "Cleopatra."

This picture has been on the market for so many months that some of the exhibitors who originally ran it class the event as ancient history. And yet, the Fox offices announce, a contract affecting this picture was signed only the other day which is probably the largest ever taken for it, and one of the largest contracts closed this season for any production.

C. W. Eckhardt, a Fox district manager, with headquarters at Chicago, booked "Cleopatra" with eighteen of the largest theatres in Milwaukee for consecutive showings covering a period of thirty days. Among the theatres signing contracts are the Climax, Koscius, Pearl and Grand.

In Pawtucket, R. I., F. G. Hartwick, who operates the Strand, the largest house in that city, booked the film for a three days' run, and has started on an extensive advertising campaign.

B. P. Rogers, manager of the Fox branch office in Washington, has placed "Cleopatra" with the Standard Amusement Corporation, operators of the Palace Theatre, Newport News, Va. This firm will send out the picture as a special road attraction with a symphony orchestra.

William Sievers, who operates the New Central Theatre in the downtown district in St. Louis, has booked "Cleopatra" for a seven days' return engagement. When Mr. Sievers played the picture on its original release to exhibitors he obtained the first run in St. Louis, and played at William Fox's Liberty Theatre in that city to capacity business for a week, and, considering that the New Central is but a short distance away, this booking is worth noting. Other theatres in St. Louis which have contracted for the picture are the Mikado, Lindell, Maffitt, Gravios, Lafayette, Arco, Montgomery and Novelty. None of these has booked the production for less than two days.

Bookings have been coming in strong of late, and every Fox branch office reports a big demand for "Cleopatra." Its drawing power gives no sign of waning. This record is declared by the Fox interests to demonstrate that a big spectacular, substantial picture such as "Cleopatra" can do a profitable repeat business. No matter what the town is, the production has proved to be just as big a card on a second and a third showing as it was on the first.

January 19 Set for "Bonds of Honor."

Announcement has come from the Coast that January 19 has been fixed for the release by the Exhibitors' Mutual of Sessue Hayakawa's double role picture, "Bonds of Honor."

The gifted Jap presents the characters of the twin sons of a nobleman of the land of flowers and tea and strict codes of honor. One of the sons is austere and strong, the other is weak and wayward. In the two characters are all phases of Japanese nature, from the most rigid soldier of morals to the most blithsome and wayward follower of the pleasure paths.

Hayakawa is supported by his handsome Oriental wife, Tsuri Aoki, and two Japanese youngsters, who would be perfect painted dolls if it weren't for their roguish tricks.

Airplane Scenes in "The Highest Trump."

A final ten days were put in by Earle Williams and his company in San Diego, Cal., in making airplane scenes for "The Highest Trump," a production he has just completed under the direction of James Young. Williams plays the part of an aviator-hero. Exigencies of the plot required his embarkation in aircraft several times.

Hall Secures "Suspense" for "10-20-30" Program

WITH great rapidity announcements have been made by the Independent Sales Corporation regarding the productions to be released in their "Ten-Twenty-Thirty" series, the latest being "Suspense," made by Frank Reicher, adapted from a novel of the same title by Isabel Ostrander, who wrote "The Flying Man" and other detective stories. Mr. Reicher is a well-known director, having made twenty-two pictures for the Lasky Company and other features for various companies, and who now makes his appearance as an independent producer. Prior to his advent into pictures, Mr. Reicher was on the stage with Sothern and Marlowe for six years.

"Suspense" is heralded as a title with big box office value, and is said to be an exceptional detective mystery drama filled with action and suspense throughout its six parts. It is an after-the-war story, and deals with the misappropriation of funds collected ostensibly for war charities. Mollie King has a prominent part in "Suspense," while Harris Gordon heads the supporting cast.

The Independent Sales Corporation calls attention to its record at the close of 1918, covering one month's active operation, during which five productions were announced for the "Ten-Twenty-Thirty" series and two special productions, Harry Rapf's "Wanted for Murder" and Carle E. Carlton's "Romance of the Air," which, it is claimed, has never been equalled.

Confer with Foreign Buyers Before Filming, Says Garrett

ACCORDING to Sydney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., fifty per cent. of the present output made for program purposes and released on the foreign market is soon to be supplanted by productions worthy of the name "special." "In acquiring the exclusive foreign rights to the series of S.-L. Pictures," says Mr. Garrett, "I feel I have made an auspicious beginning for the introduction abroad of big features.

"Now that England, France, Italy and other foreign countries are about to resume the manufacture of their own films, a spirit of friendly competition will arise between these countries and America. The production activities of these countries should not interfere to any great extent with the 'special' features coming from this side, inasmuch as the continental producers will more than likely devote their efforts to supplying a large part of the program releases.

"In my opinion, from now on the efforts of picturemakers in the United States should be concentrated on the filming of pictures which can be properly classed as specials. Undoubtedly the showmen of foreign countries will profit by the trend of the industry to turn out big and better attractions.

"Purchasers in foreign markets must look more and more to this country for the source of their film supply. Due to the peculiar circumstances existent throughout the war, America has made a real place for her films abroad. The popularity of her stars in certain countries across the water equals the vogue which they enjoy at home. America is in an enviable position as regards the foreign market for motion pictures.

"In order to fully understand and appreciate the requirements of the foreign market, Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin have held several conferences between their organization and my own before turning the crank on the inaugural picture, and it would be well for all makers of American pictures to follow out this idea and make a special effort to give their pictures international appeal. If advantage is taken of this the demand for special features will grow to such an extent that pictures will be released almost simultaneously in New York and London."

Francis Ford an Inventor As Well As Egyptologist

IT is not generally known that Francis Ford, director and star of "The Silent Mystery," is well-versed in the ancient and mystic lore of the East and that he also has a genius for invention. The mystic and occult has always had a decided fascination for him. He has gone into spiritualism exhaustively and attended a number of seances of Eusapia Paladina, when she was in this country. His fondness for things occult has led him to read extensively works relating to Zoriastism, Buddhism, Shintoism—the weird and marvelous feats of the Mahatmas, the adepts of the plains of Thibet—and regarding other Far Eastern cults of this character.

During one of his vacations he made a trip to Egypt and endeavored in the brief time at his disposal to garner what knowledge he could of their ancient priestcraft and the science of cryptology. The Egyptian locale, with its element of mystery, in the initial scenes of "The Silent Mystery," is the outgrowth of Mr. Ford's knowledge of his subject.

The introduction of some of the scenes and properties, such as the interior of a submarine, an underground gas pit, the Horrible Hand, and the wireless apparatus for torpedoing ships at sea—called for mechanical ingenuity that Mr. Ford didn't know he possessed until he went at the job. In "The Silent Mystery" role of Phil Kelly he demonstrates his capacity for portraying vibrant Americanism.

Louis Burston is the producer of "The Silent Mystery" and Hiller & Wilk, Inc., Longacre Building, New York City, are the selling agents. Messrs. Hiller & Wilk, Inc., declare that the speed with which state rights on "The Silent Mystery" are being sold constitutes a record in the serial market.

Gaumont News Reels Begin the New Year Auspiciously

GAUMONT GRAPHIC NO. 41, the first issue of the new year, shows Premier Clemenceau and Marshal Foch of France and Signor Orlando and Baron Sonnino of Italy in London, and the arrival in San Francisco of the Japanese delegates to the Peace Conference, who are en route to Paris. This number also shows the disaster which has befallen the U. S. Transport "Northern Pacific," which went aground off Fire Island, New York, in a dense fog, with nearly 3,000 ill and wounded soldiers aboard.

Other news events in this issue show soldiers rebuilding roads and bridges as they march into Germany; the surrender of more German U-Boats; how the British camouflage a heavily armored cruiser into the appearance of a defenseless tramp steamer to the undoing of German submarines; also many views of the bursting of the dam in Cedar River Basin, which destroyed the village of Edgewick, Washington.

Gaumont News No. 41, the last issue of the old year, shows the new French tanks which smashed obstacles and helped clear the way to freedom. These are claimed to be the best pictures yet photographed showing how the tanks are able to go practically anywhere, performing the seemingly impossible task of running over rocks and holes, through houses, over trees, and even marching up a river bed. Many other events from all parts of the world complete this issue.

Sawyer Tells Why Theme of First Film Is Kept Secret

IN connection with the policy of secrecy maintained by "S-L" pictures regarding the theme of its first production, A. H. Sawyer says: "Our purpose has been two-fold. After a study of the usual publicity campaign, I have discovered that the available line of ammunition is usually exhausted before the picture is completed. The result is that much valuable publicity is lost, and the facts are cold by the time the film reaches the exhibitor.

"We have decided to co-ordinate all publicity efforts concerning the title of our film, its theme, and the details concerning the story with the distribution of the picture. By doing this, the important facts will be fresh in the minds of the distributor and exhibitor, and can be closely tied up with the production with valuable results.

"The second important reason is because of the nature of the production and its world-wide appeal. We have kept this information back in order that when the details are announced they will come as a startling surprise to exhibitor and public alike. We feel we have hit upon a subject which for human interest has been untouched in the picture field. Within the next few weeks this information will be given out, and I feel our reasons for maintaining secrecy will be more than justified."

Loew's New York Houses Show "Wanted for Murder"

DURING the past week, Harry Rapf's latest production, "Wanted for Murder," was presented in all of the theatres of the Marcus Loew Circuit in New York City, and reports indicate that it played to excellent business. At several of the theatres Miss Hammerstein made personal apearances, talking informally to her audiences and reciting several incidents that happened during the making of "Wanted for Murder," which are shown in the picture itself.

Frank Hall, president of the Independent Sales Corporation, which is booking this picture through the Film Clearing House, announces that Miss Hammerstein may also make personal apearances in some of the large cities during the run of the picture. These apearances will be limited to eastern cities.

Rifkin Gets New "Maciste" Film for New England

HERMAN RIFKIN, proprietor of the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston, holder of the New England franchise for "Maciste" in "The Warrior" and many other important specials, signed contracts with Harry Raver for the popular Italian star's newest vehicle, "The Liberator," on January 2, thus bringing to a head a series of negotiations dating back more than six months; in fact, Rifkin's arguments that buyers of previous "Maciste" productions should be given first call on his latest production convinced Harry Raver that a territorial plan of distribution would be more satisfactory than an outright sale to one distributing company, especially as he had similar requests from most of his old customers.

Rifkin's success with "The Warrior" caused no little comment in Boston exchange circles and competition for "The Liberator" in his territory was therefore keen. The figure paid for the new "Maciste" production ran into five figures. The Rifkin buy was a strictly cash proposition and the contracts were signed a half hour after he saw the production. In New York the strongest sort of competition has been created, no less than four exchanges making offers. Charles Streimer, of Greene's Modern Feature Photoplay Company, displays the keenest aggressiveness, having combed the state to learn the opinions of exhibitors before conducting negotiations to purchase.

Priest Announces Sales Made by Film Market, Inc.

THE Film Market, Inc., announces the following sales to independent exchanges during the past week: "The City of Purple Dreams" and "Who Shall Take My Life," both Selig productions, to Bernard Cooke, of Pittsburgh, for West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania.

"The Star Spangled Banner," "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," "The Battle Cry of Freedom," "Home, Sweet Home," and "The Girl I Left Behind Me," miniature productions made by the Gathem Films, Inc., to Southeastern Pictures Corporation, of Atlanta, for North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

Robert W. Priest, president of The Film Market, reports widespread interest in the Selig Productions, particularly in "The City of Purple Dreams" and "Who Shall Take My Life," because of the action and suspense in each.

Thirty-one inquiries have been received by The Film Market, Inc., with reference to the reissue rights to "The Spoilers," which is said to have been one of the biggest money-makers for exchangemen. It is announced that practically every independent who controlled it before is ready to purchase again, and many have already repurchased.

Prominent Buyers Visit New York.

Among the prominent state rights buyers who were in New York during the past week for the purpose of securing attractions for their resepective territories were C. C. Hite, of the C. C. Hite Attractions, Cleveland; Harry Grelle, of Supreme Photoplays, Pittsburgh, and J. G. Connor, who was with the Mutual for four years and has recently opened an independent exchange in Indianapolis.

Perret's "Stars of Glory" an After-the-War Film

THE news that Leonce Perret has completed "Stars of Glory," his second production for the independent market, featuring Dolores Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln, is said to have aroused keen competition between a number of distributing companies, and representatives of several releasing organizations who were invited to a private showing of "Stars of Glory" are in negotiation with Adolphe Osso for this production. It is anticipated that definite announcement regarding the releasing medium for this picture will be made within a short time.

According to an announcement from Perret Productions, "Stars of Glory" is an "after-the-war" story, as the picture opens with the signing of the armistice and the cessation of hostilities. From then on it is replete with love and adventure, and as the story advances there are occasional flash-backs to vivid moments in the great war. These scenes are said to have been produced with great realism and effectiveness, and it is claimed that this picture far exceeds any of Mr. Perret's previous productions.

The Scarlet Trail Arouses Interest.

Many inquiries are being received from state rights buyers and distributing organizations regarding "The Scarlet Trail," according to an announcement from N. R. Greathouse, general manager of the G. & L. Features, which is handling this production. It has just closed a successful engagement at the Thirty-Ninth Street Theatre, New York, and no decision has yet been reached as to how it will be marketed. Mr. Greathouse, however, is in favor of handling it as a road show.

"The Scarlet Trail" is based on the book, "Don't Take a Chance," by Charles Larned Robinson, and is endorsed by the Social Hygiene Division of the American Defense Society. It deals with sex indiscretion.

Houses Report Big Profits with "The Kaiser's Finish"

LETTERS and telegrams received from exhibitors describing the results of their showings of the eight-part special production, "The Kaiser's Finish," according to a statement from A. Warner, in charge of territorial sales, indicates that big profits are being made with this production in all parts of the country. Tony Sudekum, president of the Crescent Amusement Company, Nashville, wired: "'The Kaiser's Finish' is a great picture. In fact it is the best war picture we have so far played."

Hendley Brothers, of the Vogue Theatre, Columbus, Ga., wrote that they used it to meet extremely strong competition, and did exceptional business; while the Bluebird Theatre, of Richmond, booked it for a repeat showing after playing a four days' engagement to exceptionally large receipts.

Bernard Depkin, of the Wizard Theatre, Baltimore, reports that he had the front of his theatre repaired the day after the first showing, as the crowds in the lobby the previous night were so thick they had to be dispersed by the police, and the lobby was wrecked. Walter Johnson, of the Parkway Theatre, Roseland, Ill., wired that "The Kaiser's Finish" paid him a big net profit on a two days' run.

Macauley's Theatre, Louisville, has booked this production for a week's run, according to advice from the Big Feature Rights Corporation, and will advertise it as they would a big road attraction, using extra twenty-four sheets and a large amount of newspaper advertising.

Judge Pictures by Quality, Not Price, Declares Hall

IN commenting upon an article entitled "What's the Price?" appearing in a recent issue of one of the trade journals, Frank Hall says: "I agree with the writer that the 'how much' habit prevalent among exhibitors has a tendency to retard the progress of the industry. Too many are prone to look at an attraction from the price angle instead of from the show angle and the quality of amusement the picture might contain. If the rental price is absurdly low the exhibitor feels as long as he is paying practically nothing for the film he should not be squeamish about the quality.

"But should he overstep the mark and pay too much the danger of lost dollars overbalances the lost patronage of his competitor. Exhibitors also claim even though they do a good business on a special production at advanced prices a reaction sets in, and the falling off of receipts balances up an average week. The danger lies in trying to judge quality by price. How much better it is for both salesman and exhibitor to have fixed prices, equitable to both exhibitor and distributor, and permitting each to make a fair profit.

"It was with this thought in mind, protecting the exhibitor against raising prices on films of more than ordinary merit, that I worked out my ten-twenty-thirty plan, figuring that giving the exhibitors something truly worth while at a price they could afford, that the inducement offered would double the number of playing days for a film, which would more than offset the difference in the lower rental.

"Since announcing the first four pictures in this series the exhibitors were quick to recognize the calibre of the attractions, and at the close of our first month's business I am more than convinced that it is not 'how much' or 'how little,' but the staple price for quality film that will prove the exhibitor's salvation and the greatest boon to the industry.

"Occasionally some super-productions may come along and require special treatment. Any exhibitor is justified in playing these and advancing his admission price, for, instead of reacting against the box office, they act as a stimulus. Having pointed out the danger of advancing prices simply because the exhibitor has to pay more rental, it is apparent wherein the difference lies—price does not control, but quality does.

Trade Showing Announced for "The Law of Nature"

DAVID G. FISCHER PRODUCTIONS, Inc., will hold a special showing of its initial feature, "The Law of Nature," Monday, January 13, at 2 p. m. in Wurlitzer Hall. This production is in eight reels, and was written by Mr. Fischer in collaboration with Captain Richard Pearson Hobson, ex-Congressman from Alabama, and prominent in public life since his naval exploit in the Spanish-American war. "The Law of Nature" will be presented first as a theatrical attraction in prominent theatres, after which it will be sold on state rights basis.

The picture was directed by Mr. Fischer, and Vincent Coleman and Dixie Lee appear in the leading roles. Others in the cast include Frances NeMoyer and Harold Salter. Mr. Fischer, who has recently opened offices in the Selwyn Theatre Building on Forty-second street, New York, has been identified with the motion picture industry for several years as director, actor and producer, having been associated with the American Film Company, Essanay, Premier and American Commercial Film Company. He was prior t this stage manager for several prominent stage stars, and for a year and a half director general of the United Play Company. In addition, he has dramatized a number of plays, and is the author of two hundred and fifty photoplays.

Carle E. Carlton.

Carle E. Carlton Speaks of Future of War Films

BEFORE leaving for Chicago to arrange for an extended engagement of Lieutenant Bert Hall in "A Romance of the Air," Carle E. Carlton, president of the Crest Pictures Corporation, said: "There are war pictures and war pictures. By that I mean those pictures which merely portray battle scenes or ridicule and pile up hatred for the defeated enemy. On the other hand, pictures which show the glorification of the noble deeds of our soldiers and the exploits of America and her Allies will keep in favor. War pictures with a real plot will remain as popular as ever. The more so as thousands of boys are now coming home every week for the next few months, and the talk for some time to come will be personal war adventures. This means added publicity for pictures with a war atmosphere or a war background.

"As for 'A Romance of the Air,' this picture at its initial showing at the Rivoli Theatre played to the biggest receipts of any feature picture shown there for the three months, and this should prove conclusively what I have said above."

Exhibitors Are Interested In Plans of S-L Pictures

THE offices of Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, officials of the new "S-L Pictures," have during the past four weeks been flooded with letters from exhibitors in all parts of the country, many being from among the leading exhibitors whose houses specialize in big features, and who have expressed a desire to be the first to present the series of features to be made by Ralph Ince with E. K. Lincoln as the star. Also, two large distributing organizations as well as many prominent state right buyers, have been in communication with the company regarding sales arrangements.

This indication of interest and confidence in the plans of the company is particularly gratifying to Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin in view of the fact that the first production has not yet been completed, and no information has been divulged as to the nature of the story, the title or character of the production.

"S-L Pictures" now announces that when the details of the initial offering are announced, that they will come as a distinct surprise, as Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin believe they will be able to offer a screen entertainment which will be utterly dissimilar to anything yet produced in the way of special pictures.

Two Baltimore Houses Show "Woman" at Same Time

NOT only is the Maurice Tourneur production, "Woman," said to be making a record for sales of rights in the open market, but it also enjoys the unusual record of being presented simultaneously in two prominent first-run theatres in Baltimore, the Parkway and the New theatres, for week runs, commencing January 13. This booking was made through Boyd Cunningham, manager of First National Exhibitors' Exchange, Washington, which controls the rights to Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia for this production.

It is also announced that the fact that "Woman" is a unique production appeals to the open market buyer, and that heavy bookings are being reported by the following exchanges, which have ordered additional prints to take care of the demand: Frank Gersten, handling northern New Jersey; Independent Sales Corporation, for New York; Paragon Pictures, for New England; Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, for Michigan, and R. M. Savini, for Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, North and South Carolina. On its initial showing at the Colonial Theatre, in Detroit, it is said to have been hailed by critics as an epic production sure to be an epoch-maker in film history.

Elaine Hammerstein Still with Rapf.

Harry Rapf announces that Elaine Hammerstein, who has built up a reputation for popularity so that there is a strong demand for her pictures, will remain under his management for a series of productions. Miss Hammerstein has already appeared in a number of Rapf pictures. She supported Robert Warwick in "The Arglye Case," "The Mad Lover" and "The Accidental Honeymoon"; then she was starred in "Her Man" and "The Co-Respondent," and her latest success was in "Wanted for Murder."

Quick Sales by Exclusives on Tom Mix Two-Reelers

HERMAN RIFKIN, of the Eastern Feature Film Company, of Boston, Mass., recently made a trip to New York to obtain pictures for the New England states. He closed a deal with Exclusive Features, Inc., whereby he gains the rights to the series of sixteen two-reel Tom Mix comedy-dramas for the six New England states. Mr. Rifkin declares that these short reelers are some of the best he has ever seen, and predicts that exhibitors in his territory will find them exceptionally valuable in building up their programs and getting extra business.

This deal disposes of practically all of the territory which Exclusive had open on these two-reelers. Exhibitors are now able to book these pictures from exchanges in their territory.

Reports received from exhibitors who have screened "Twisted Trails," the first release in the series, declare that motion picture fans were very much pleased, that it gave universal satisfaction and was received with applause in most cases.

Lubin Points Out Features of First "S-L" Production

HERBERT LUBIN, who, with Arthur H. Sawyer, will shortly present the first "S-L" picture, gives several reasons why it should be considered a "special."

"It is my belief that in order for a film production to be placed in the class of 'specials' it should carry every assurance possible regarding director, star, story and general bigness. I believe that we have more than fully covered these necessary points in connection with out-of-the-ordinary productions. E. K. Lincoln is one of the few popular male stars on the screen, while Ralph Ince stands as one of the few big directors whose productions always possess the necessary commercial and artistic values.

"In the matter of story, we have chosen a theme which for bigness and appeal has thus far been unequaled during the past five years. We have also gone further. This feature contains not one but several extraordinary and spectacular scenes so distributed throughout the production as to keep the audience in suspense from beginning to end. In addition, we have striven to dress the production with a magnificence and beauty excelling the efforts of producers who have achieved a reputation for 'big' pictures."

Bulls Eye Announces Release Dates.

The Bulls Eye Film Corporation announces that the second of the new Billy West comedies, entitled "A Rolling Stone," will be released on January 15, while the third, "The Inspector," will be ready for release on the fifteenth of February. Charles Parrott directed these productions, and Ethel Gibson, who has previously appeared with Billy West, is the leading woman in these two pictures.

Sales Announced by W. H. on "Mickey" and Reissues

THE W. H. Productions Company announces the sale of the following territory on a series of fifteen two-reel Kay Bee Columbia Brand western dramas, also a series of fifteen two-reel Kay Bee Union Brand western dramas: To Southeastern Pictures Corporation, Atlanta, for North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee; to Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey; to Magnet Film Exchange, New York, for Greater New York south of Westchester County; to W. High, Baltimore, for Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and Virginia; also the series of Columbia Brand Kay Bees, to Strand Features, Detroit, for Michigan; and series of Union Brand Kay Bees, to Standard Film Service, 316 Sloan Building, Cleveland, for Ohio, Kentucky and Michigan.

The series of twenty-eight single-reel Eagle Brand Keystones and series of twenty-eight Liberty Brand single-reel Keystone comedies have been sold to Southeastern Pictures Corporation, Atlanta, for North and South Carolina; to Criterion Film Service, Atlanta, for Georgia, Alabama, Florida and Tennessee; to Magnet Film Exchange, New York, for New York City south of Westchester County; to Standard Film Service, Cleveland, for Ohio, Kentucky and Michigan; also the series of Liberty Brand Keystones, to Bee Hive Exchange, Chicago, for Indiana, Wisconsin and northern half of Illinois.

In addition, the W. H. Productions Company reports the following sales on the feature production, "Mickey," starring Mabel Normand: to Lowy & Nielsen, Chicago, for Illinois; Supreme Photoplay Productions, Pittsburgh, for Pennsylvania and Ohio; Wisconsin Film Corporation, Milwaukee, for Wisconsin; Boston Photoplay Company, for New England states; Midwest Greater Features Company, Denver, for Colorado; All Star Feature Distributors, San Francisco, for California and Arizona; to De Luxe Feature Film Company, Seattle, for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana, and to Magnet Film Exchange, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, for New York City.

Exhibitors Feature "Deadly Sins."

According to numerous letters received by General Film Company and McClure Pictures many exhibitors are presenting the condensed versions of "The Deadly Sins" as the main feature event of their programs. These occasions mark probably the only times in the last few years of the industry that two part pictures have been exploited in the same manner as the big features, with special music.

The films have been entirely retitled and cut to their present length, with the idea of preserving the most exciting incidents of the former seven reels of each production, together with emphasizing the magnetic personality of Shirley Mason, the star.

Special advertising and promotion helps are being offered the exhibitor in his presentation of the two-part films as feature productions.

Big Business at Tremont for "Romance of the Air"

ATTENDANCE records for the Tremont Temple Theatre, Boston, are said to have been broken when the Carle E. Carlton production, "A Romance of the Air," opened to capacity business this week for a four weeks' showing, and indications are that the engagement will be indefinitely extended. Manager Plimpton, of the Tremont, has wired the Independent Sales Corporation, which is booking this production, as follows: "'Romance of the Air' complete knockout at Tremont. House sold out, big crowd clamoring for admission. Indications it will break all records. Lieutenant Hall the hero of the hour; special guest of Boston City Club. Many notables present congratulations."

Lieutenant Hall is personally appearing at each performance reciting many thrilling experiences of his combats in the air during three years' fighting on three battle front. According to Frank Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, the reception accorded this picture indicates that the public are still eager to see unusual and novel attractions that have a war flavor, and that they will continue to want exceptional stories of our heroes, with a romance interwoven and war as a background.

Spoor-Thompson Closes Big Contracts.

Ike Schlank, president of the Capitol Film Company, Inc., of Indianapolis, Ind., has signed a long term contract with the Spoor-Thompson Laboratories for the processing of film for all pictures released by that company. This company has now started the release of pictures, the positive prints for which will run into several hundred thousand feet of film each week.

This is the second big contract secured by the Spoor-Thompson Laboratories within the last two weeks, the first having been signed by J. A. Berst for processing all of the film of the United Picture Theatres of America.

This new method of processing by machine of film in one thousand foot lengths is proving highly satisfactory to patrons, as the development is of a uniform, high grade quality throughout while there is no wastage of film ends and no loss of parts.

FRENCH THEATRES THRIVE IN WAR

Influx of American Soldiers Has Revivified National Interest in Screen Productions

France, Nov. 5.

MOVING PICTURE exhibitors are thriving in France, even in the face of adverse circumstances created by the war. I had no idea that conditions were so normal in this particular industry until I walked down one of the main thoroughfares in one of the large cities of France. I was on pass from the sector in which I am now located and, due to the fact that in the villages where I had been hitherto billeted there were no picture theatres I was not expecting to be confronted with a three-sheet poster bearing the likeness of Baby Marie Osborne.

Above and to the left of the poster I read, "Cinema Theatre—Pathe." And America was brought home to me. I looked over the posters in the lobby and among the notables of our own stars I found Lonesome Luke, Molly King, Ruth Roland, Marion Davies, Bessie Love and Baby Marie Osborne. Having been so long away from anything like a movie, I bought a ticket—price "un franc," equal to about 18 cents in our money—and went in to see what was going on.

On all sides was a sea of khaki—American soldiers swarming in the place. The theatre was typically American. Luke romped through two reels of fun and took off honors of the evening. Marie Osborne then kidded through some soldier story, made uninteresting to us because it failed to be a diversion.

The manager of the house, M. Andre Belleau, speaks English and he greeted me warmly when I introduced myself as a correspondent of the Moving Picture World. Speaking of conditions in France, he said:

"The picture show is more prosperous today than it has been since the war started. The Americans have demanded pictures, and we, feeling that a chance for resurrection had come, acceded to the demand and began the operation of our shows, most of which had died from lack of trade during the early stages of the war.

French Patronage Drifting Back.

"It is gratifying to see even the French trade slowly drifting back to us, and as the Americans are assisting us at the front, so are they assisting us in building back a business that shall henceforth be of great moment in the affairs of the nation."

From the day I landed over here, it has been plain to me that the French people look forward to our acts. They expect great things of the Americans, and because we are frequent visitors at the picture shows the French insist in following in our footsteps. Thus we are setting the pace for a more stable trade for the exhibitors after the war. I am told that the French people were always more inclined toward the suggestive burlesque than toward the art of the moving picture. Practically throughout the nation American customs are taking precedence. Naturally, a certain class of soldiers favor the rough stuff, while the more cultured of Uncle Sam's warriors depend on the cinema, where American faces and American scenery bring back vivid and almost tangible remembrances of home.

Burlesque Shows Suffering from Competition.

If the madamoiselle would promenade, "Well, Marie, it's the movies for me." And so Marie goes to the movies. If you've never tasted buttermilk it is impossible to know whether you like it. And so it is with the movie show. The French had an established custom before the war, and it has taken a new era of affairs unconsciously to break them away from it. Throughout France, now, the burlesque show is suffering materially in gross receipts from the effects of the cinema's new era of prosperity. The French people just must be with the Americans—and the Americans are going to be in the picture theatres.

Pathe and Gaumont productions seem to be more widely distributed here than any other brand. At the Y. M. C. A. huts we see an occasional Triangle or Artcraft, but the Y. M. C. A. cannot be classed as a picture theatre and consequently cannot be considered a part of this business in France.

My eyesight seems to have improved. I can see a three-sheet poster of Eileen Sedgwick ten blocks off over here. In the states it was impossible for me to see one a half block off.

"The moving picture business in France," says Mr. Belleau, "is to see a revolution after the war. You Americans are making a new trade. We, that is our people, have been somewhat backward in becoming accustomed to the scientific far-reachingness of the cinema. When they see that you fellows flock to the show houses, they naturally are going to seek out and find the real pleasures and benefits to be derived from this great art.

France Will Make Greater Pictures.

"The producing end of the game will be greatly improved when the struggle is over, because the patrons will encourage the making of better pictures. France is not equal to America in making pictures, because the producers have never been encouraged to the extent of putting their best energies into the making of them. When they realize that France has accepted the cinema show as a national amusement, then will we approach the top rung of the ladder, in the wake of America's progress in this field, and make better pictures."

I have found that the French people do not seem to care particularly for the romantic American plays. They like an ingenious plot as the main thread of the story, with a bombshell climax—something clever, a battle of wits. They like comedy. They like war pictures, but the magazines and newspapers have the photographers of the picture game beat to a frazzle in this instance. So far I am unable to assume that the general public over here will accept a problem play. Give them a brisk western picture—they have no wild and woolly Texas over here—and they fall for it.

It is a fact that William S. Hart is the Frenchman's idea of an American. They have a perverted sense of realization and it is hard to break them away from their beliefs. They generally concede that the Americans are "gunmen" of the Hart and Carey variety. Our great daring on the battlefields has materially substantiated this view in the mind of the French public.

THEATRES CROWDED ON NEW YEAR'S EVE

Seattle Picture Houses Hold Midnight Matinees —Clemmer Keeps Open Until 3:30 A. M.

By S. J. Anderson, 807 Leary Building, Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE motion picture theatres continue to profit by the dryness of the atmosphere in the city on New Year's Eve. Since Seattle holiday celebrators bade farewell to "booze" four years ago, they have invariably sought the solace of the motion picture theatres on New Year's Eve. At times efforts have been made to renew the atmosphere of the cabaret at specially planned affairs in theatres on this holiday night. Most notable of these was the carnival show held at midnight at the Coliseum last year, an account of which appeared in these columns. No special function like that was planned at the theatres this year, but midnight matinees were given at all the first-class downtown houses, in some of which special programs consisting of special music and singing and several short length subjects were arranged.

The biggest crowds strolled up and down Second avenue, and the Clemmer, located near the busiest corner on this street, was not allowed to close its box office until 2 o'clock, the show then running until 3:30. No special program was arranged for the evening, but at 12 o'clock "Happy New Year" slides were flashed on the screen.

The Strand, further down Second avenue, closed its box office at 1 o'clock. A few extras were offered in the form of a Mack Sennett comedy and singing. At exactly 12 o'clock a slide bearing the New Year greeting was thrown on the screen, and immediately afterward the orchestra began playing "The Star Spangled Banner," while the words of the chorus appeared on the screen and the audience joined in the singing of it. Other old and new favorites followed and then the Mack Sennett comedy. The regular program continued for the rest of the time.

The Rex, John Hamrick's special second-run house, which is also on Second avenue, between the Clemmer and the Strand, was crowded until 12:30, no special stunts being offered.

The big, palatial Coliseum, somewhat off the crowded center, had an audience of about 2,000 persons for its special program of picked comedies, and Albert Hay Malotte, who presides over the big, new Wurlitzer, kept them singing all through the show and at 12 o'clock led the chorus of "Nobody Knows How Dry I Am." Patrons on leaving the house were heard to remark about the good music and the manner in which the organist inspired the audience with enthusiasm. The box office at this house closed at 12:45. The special program consisted of eight comedies selected from the best of the last two or three years.

The only unusual feature of the Liberty program was the singing and the music played on the Wurlitzer by Oliver G. Wallace.

The Colonial, John Danz' theatre on Fourth avenue, offered some special singing at midnight by a soprano soloist and a special program of short reels, consisting of a two-reel drama, a two-reel O. Henry, a two-reel Chaplin, a one-reel scenic, and a one-reel Arbuckle.

It had not been planned to have a midnight matinee at the Mission, the smallest first-run house in town, but the crowds were so big at the entrance at 11 o'clock that an extra show was given.

Hamrick on Trip to Kansas City.

John Hamrick, managing owner of the Rex and the Gem theatres, has taken his family for a holiday visit to Kansas City, their old home. They will be gone about six weeks, returning by way of Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Film Men Return from Camps.

George Ring, manager of the Society Theatre, returned in time for the holidays from Fort Worden, where he had been in training for the past three months.

Paul Judkins, formerly a shipper at the Seattle Goldwyn office, has returned to the city from training camp. He will make some connection on film row this week.

Changes in the Local Fox Office.

P. C. Mooney, Western division manager, will arrive at Seattle next week.

C. D. Beale, now a salesman for Fox, will leave next week to go on the road for the Film Clearing House, which has just opened an office on Film Row with A. H. Hout as manager.

W. L. Doudlah, who has been covering the Montana and Idaho territory for Fox, is changing his course to Oregon after the first of the year.

R. O. Clayton, the cashier, will take over Mr. Doudlah's former territory.

Vitagraph Manager to New York.

L. M. Cobbs, manager of the Seattle Vitagraph office, recovered from a case of influenza in time to go to New York this week to attend the convention of Vitagraph managers.

Tomlinson Back on the Job.

L. C. Tomlinson, assistant manager of the Vitagraph office, is back at his desk this week after a hard fight with the influenza, which lasted about three weeks.

Miss Donnelly Ill with Influenza.

Miss J. Donnelly, who left Seattle on December 12 with the "Finger of Justice" or "The Fall of the Barbary Coast" to play the picture on percentage through Montana, is ill in Butte with influenza. She is expected to resume her trip within a week, however.

Washington Brevities.

J. G. von Herberg arrived in Seattle from the East in time to spend the holidays with his family and is leaving this week for California.

The Sumner Theatre, Sumner, Washington, was sold this week to H. M. Bird, formerly an exhibitor of British Columbia.

C. A. Butler, who sold the Terminal Theatre, Auburn, Wash., to B. C. Croft several weeks ago, is in Seattle looking around for a new location.

C. W. Crawford, general manager of the real estate company that owns the Liberty Theatre, Spokane, paid a visit to Seattle's firm row this week.

Shafer New Manager of the Terminal.

FRED M. SHAFER arrived in town last week from Detroit to assume the managerial reins of William Fox's Terminal Theatre, 84 Park place, Newark. Mr. Shafer succeeds Jules Gerstle, who formerly managed the Strand here. Mr. Shafer, while in Detroit, was connected with the J. H. Kunsky Enterprises, and prior to that, with the Lenwood Amusement Company, of Indianapolis. No change in policy of management is contemplated.

Al Goldie in Morristown.

Al Goldie, formerly operator at the Goodwin and Court theatres in Newark, is now in charge of projection at the Park Theatre, Morristown, owned by former Assemblyman James J. Lyons.

New Theatre for Audubon.

H. D. LeCato, of Audubon, N. J., is subletting contracts for the erection of a two-story theatre, 40 by 85. Plans have been prepared by E. E. Seidell, architect. The estimated cost of the work is placed at $10,000.

Catholic Film Shown in Hilton.

For the benefit of St. Joseph's Church, "The Victim," a production of the Catholic Art Association, was shown January 5 at Seth Boyden School, Hilton, N. J. Robert T. Haines is the star.

Amsterdam Theatre to Open.

The Amsterdam Theatre, 77 Sixteenth avenue, which has been closed for a considerable length of time, will be reopened about February 1. The Oraton Investment Company, owners of the building, is expending $4,000 for alterations and additions. Plans have already been drawn and work started on the improvements.

West Hoboken Theatre Corporation.

The Summit Theatre Company, with an authorized capitalization of $60,000, has been incorporated at West Hoboken to take over the Summit Theatre, 254 Summit avenue, West Hoboken. Charles Bollinger is listed as registered agent. The incorporators include, besides Mr. Bollinger, Jennie Bollinger and Fred Hensel.

Benefit at Strand, Newark.

Dustin Farnum, in "The Light of Western Stars," was the attraction the week of January 5 at the Strand Theatre, 120 Market street, Newark, when a benefit for the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Hebrew Education Society was held.

Glassboro Theatre to Expand.

A one-story addition, 40 by 100, will be built this spring to the moving picture theatre at Glassboro, N. J. The addition will cost about $7,000. Charles P. Abbott is the owner of the theatre.

REMOVAL OF BAN IMPROVES BUSINESS

Omaha Exhibitors and Exchangemen Report Decided Increase Upon Lifting of Influenza Restrictions

By Guy Leavitt, World-Herald, Omaha, Neb.

THE influenza ban has been entirely lifted in Omaha, and Iowa and Nebraska towns are rapidly being freed from restrictions imposed during the quarantine. Following this action exhibitors and exchange men report a decided improvement in business. They are looking forward to one of the best six months' periods the middle west motion picture theatres have ever seen.

Some Omaha exhibitors, during the rushes Christmas and Sunday nights, did not carry out to the letter the health order restricting patrons to alternate rows of seats. Health Commissioner Manning as a result declares that at the next signs of a flare-up of influenza in Omaha he will promptly close all theatres. Objection will be made if he attempts to carry out his threat.

Exhibitors in Omaha, immediately the ban was lifted, announced they had booked the best attractions they could find on the market.

Manager Stolte, of the Strand Theatre, said: "I could feel it in the air, when the influenza ban was lifted. Business is almost twice what it was last week. People are coming who haven't been to this theatre for three months. They are still somewhat scared, however. Many people, trying to avoid crowds, are coming to the first shows. They rather got into that habit when we were allowed to use only one-half our seating capacity."

Read Succeeds Crandall at World.

Jean J. Crandall, manager of the World Exchange in Omaha, at his request has been recalled to New York, and S. E. Read has arrived in Omaha to take his place. The change occurred January 3. Manager Read has been with the World nearly four years. "We look forward to our biggest year in Nebraska and Iowa," said he, "because we have the added prestige of releasing the Government films, and because we are permitted to release the McClure pictures." Mr. Crandall, during a stay in Omaha of several months, won a wide circle of friends.

Business Fine with the Sun.

After one week's experience Manager Goldberg, of the Sun Theatre, Omaha, is delighted that beginning January 1 the admission price to his theatre was increased from straight 10 cents to 10, 15 and 25 cents. "I have not had a single complaint," he said, "but a number of people have congratulated me on the higher quality of pictures we are showing. We have a steady patronage, and it has not decreased a bit because of the increase in admission."

Give Midnight Shows.

"See the Sun at Midnight" was the catchy slogan used by the Sun Theatre, Omaha, advertising its annual New Year's Eve show. The Rialto and Empress theatres in Omaha also ran watch party shows, with special music at 12 o'clock.

Picture Shows at the Brandeis.

The Brandeis Theatre, largest and best "legitimate" house in Omaha, this winter has been given over almost entirely to pictures, running each for a week or longer. "Hearts of the World" ran five weeks. "Borrowed Clothes" started at the Brendeis January 5 for a week. The advertisements played up the recent marriage of the star, Mildred Harris, to Charlie Chaplin.

Hamilton Theatre Reopens.

The Hamilton, one of the prettiest suburban houses in Omaha, reopened on New Year's Day after being closed several weeks during the influenza epidemic. The picture shown on opening day was Nazimova in "Revelation." A local singer sang solos at the two afternoon and two evening shows.

The Muse Entertains 400 Kiddies.

The children's page editor of the Daily News, Omaha, with Exhibitor Robert Shirley, of the Muse, gave a party Saturday morning, January 4, to 400 children, readers of the page. The picture was "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," which had been running in story form on the children's page. Children who had won prizes in movie jingle puzzle contest, conducted by the editor, received invitations. Hereafter, it was announced, children who win the puzzle prizes will get tickets to the Muse, Sun, Rialto, Strand or Empress theatres, the first five winners to answer being given the prizes.

THE new Hearst news films, released through the Universal Exchange, are off to a flying start in this territory, the initial bookings having been very satisfactory, in spite of adverse conditions. They are being shown at the Alhambra, Casino, Hippodrome, Imperial, Orpheum, Rialto and Strand theatres, all downtown houses, as well as in the following district theatres: New Fillmore, Grand, Wigwam, Queen, Royal, Lincoln, Irving, Broadway and Lyceum. In the east-bay suburbs they will be shown at the Franklin, Avenue and Regent theatres, Oakland; the Berkeley, Lorin and Strand, of Berkeley; The Bay Station Theatre, Alameda; Brown's Theatre, Fruitvale, and the T. & D., at Richmond. The theatres in the interior that will feature the new releases include the Hippodrome, Stockton, Cal.; the Bijou and Ryan, Fresno, Cal.; the Lyric, Tulare, Cal.; the T. & D., San Jose, Cal.; the Liberty and Lyric, Marysville, Cal.; the Broadway, Chico, Cal.; the Marquee, Palo Alto, Cal.; Opera House, Madera, Cal.; Rialto, Eureka, Cal.; Rialto, Vallejo, Cal.; Bijou, Visalia, Cal.; Strand, Monterey; Redding Theatre, Redding, Cal.; Fink Theatre, Gridley, Cal.; Elite and Rose theatres, Santa Rosa, Cal.; Princess, Sausalito, Cal.; Elite, Merced, Cal., and Orpheum, Benicia, Cal.

New Orchestra Leader for the Rialto.

J. Wharry Lewis and his orchestra made a great hit at the Rialto Theatre during Christmas week, his first appearance at this house, the audiences being captivated by his unique and entertaining methods of conducting. His program for the following week opens with themes from "Il Trovatore," followed by a musical novelty arranged by him entitled "Smiles on a Rubberneck Wagon." Slides are projected on the screen, showing various points of interest around San Francisco while the orchestra plays appropriate music. For instance, when scenes in Chinatown are presented, Chinese airs are played, while a view of Fisherman's Wharf brings forth a rollicking sea tune. The program concludes by a return to the Rialto Theatre and the audience is invited to join in singing "Smiles." Cecil Teague, the new organist, also takes a prominent part in the musical program. A special performance for children has been inaugurated at this house, this being given each Saturday morning, when selected pictures of educational value are offered.

Pathe Sun Brightens San Francisco.

The Chistmas and Victory Edition of the Pathe Sun, bearing the unmistakable stamp of the right redoubtable Tom North, reached San Francisco in time to dispense some real Christmas cheer on Film Row. A more interesting or valuable edition of a house organ would be difficult to conceive, and when one makes its appearance it is a pretty good bet that that man North will have his hand in it. Manager Child only allowed the Moving Picture World representative a peek at the Sun, but he saw a lot at that, including a really good photo of Child, another of Ralph Proctor, Western division manager, and one of C. A. Meade, who once paid us a visit as special representative.

Sunrise Film Company Ready Soon.

The Sunrise Film Manufacturing Company, organized by Ben Brodsky, who recently returned from the Orient with a number of moving pictures produced in Japan under his direction, has taken over the quarters at 100 Golden Gate avenue, recently vacated by the Peerless Film Service, and will occupy these as soon as the necessary alterations are completed. This office will be in charge of R. E. Hasbrook, who has had much experience in managing film exchanges, particularly in the Far East.

Film Manager Studies Law.

H. F. Moore, local manager for the George Kleine System, has been devoting himself to the study of law for some time and is now in a position to give advice on legal questions to the boys on Film Row. When he passes his examinations and becomes a full-fledged barrister he plans to specialize on law as applied to the moving picture business.

Texas Manager Visits Home Town.

Vivian Preston, manager of the Independent Film Exchange at San Antonio, Tex., spent the holidays in San Francisco, where he formerly resided. He reports that the influenza has brought business largely to a standstill in Texas.

Sol L. Lesser Returns Home.

Sol L. Lesser, head of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., returned from his New York buying trip in time to spend the Christmas holidays with his family. He brought back with him the California, Arizona and Nevada rights to the Mack Sennett production "Mickey," featuring Mabel Normand, and this will soon be given its first showing. He also has the rights in this territory to the propaganda film, "The Spreading Evil."

Film Clearing House Ready for Business.

The former quarters of the George Kleine System at 183 Golden Gate avenue, recently taken over by the Film Clearing House, Inc. and the Independent Sales Corporation, have been fitted up under the direction of District Manager D. J. Chatkin and business is now being booked. The first picture to be offered is "Her Mistake," the Julius Steger production featuring Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw. The J. Stuart Blackton production, "Life's Greatest Problem" featuring Mitchell Lewis, is expected shortly. Manager Chatkin is fitting up a place designed for the accommodation of visiting exhibitors and plans to make this headquarters for visits to Film Row.

Portable Projectors in Demand.

A splendid demand is being experienced for portable projection machines, these being wanted for both home and small theatre use. The Atlas Educational Film Company has disposed of a number of Devry projectors of late, including one to Herbert Fleishacker, of this city; one to the Noble Electrical Steel Company, Heroult, Cal., and one to the Montezuma Ranch School, Montezuma, Cal. It has also sold a used machine to the Giant Powder Company for use at Giant Cal.

Two Chico Houses Sold.

I. D. Stanford, of the Lyric Theatre, Chico, Cal., has purchased the Majestic and Broadway theatres. He now controls the moving picture business in that city.

Baltimore News Letter

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

Form New Film Company.

THE Baltimore State Rights Film Company, Inc., has been incorporated under the laws of the state of Maryland with a capital of $5,000, by R. B. Palmore, L. H. Homand and George C. Easter. The offices of the new film distributing company will be located at 412 East Lexington street. This is the same location which is now occupied by Palmore & Homand, who have been engaged in the film business for some time in the Monumental City and are well known to the trade in this vicinity. The new company will handle state rights features and reissues. They have already bought the Tom Mix reissues for Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Appointed Universal Representative.

Edwin A. Tracey, who has been engaged in the film business for the past six years, and who is well known in the Philadelphia and Pennsylvania territory, has joined the boys in Baltimore as the representative of the Universal Film Company and will work out of the Baltimore Film Exchange, 412 East Baltimore street, which is managed by P. Oletzky. Mr. Tracey has been associated with the Government for the past six months in the Division of Films, under George Creel, and was located in Philadelphia. Prior to this time he spent about six months with the World Film Corporation in Philadelphia and at one time ran the Tracey Film Advertising Company, of Erie, Pa. He will handle the Maryland, West Virginia and Baltimore territory for Universal.

Welch Visits Baltimore.

J. Edward Welch, who is known to the film trade, having been connected with the Bud Fisher Film Corporation, as general manager before "Bud" went overseas and who later became associated with the William Fox Film Corporation, spent the Christmas holidays with his wife at their home in Baltimore. Mr. Welch was associated with Fox Film Company until a recent illness. He expects to join "Bud" Fisher again as soon as it is certain that Mr. Fisher will remain in the United States.

Universal Star Makes Address.

Dorothy Phillips, the well known Universal star, whose name in real life is Miss Mary Stribic, visited Baltimore during the holidays and spent Christmas with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John J. Strible, 1206 North Eden street. On Thursday, December 26, at the personal invitation of Frederick Clement Weber, manager of the Gertrude McCoy Theatre, Fulton avenue and Baker street, Miss Phillips spent the evening at the playhouse and made an address to the crowds that assembled to see her, as Mr. Weber had advertised her coming in the morning Sun. After her talk to the patrons of the theatre Miss Phillips greeted many of them personally.

Seligman Released from the Army.

Abe Seligman, well known to the film boys of the Baltimore territory as having been associated with the Nixon-Nirdlinger interests, and prior to his being called to the colors was located at Nixon's-Victoria Theatre in Baltimore, has been released from the army and has again returned to the Monumental City and become associated with the Victoria.

How Hartlove Advertised "Kaiser's Finish."

As a unique form of advertising "The Kaiser's Finish," J. J. Hartlove, manager of the Crescent Theatre, 1110 South Charles street, dressed up an effigy of the Kaiser and had it hung in front of his theatre on Monday, December 30, with a sign stating "The Kaiser's Finish" would be seen there on Thursday, January 2.

SOURBIER TO BUILD ELABORATE THEATRE

Indianapolis Exhibitor Perfecting Plans for Big Picture House in Downtown Section of City

By Indiana Trade News Service, 69 Layman Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

PLANS are being perfected by Edward Sourbier, treasurer of Marion county and president of the Ed G. Sourbier Amusement Enterprises, consisting of the Palms, Keystone and Bijou theatres, in Indianapolis, for the building of an elaborate motion picture theatre in the downtown business district of the Hoosier capital. He says work on the project will start just as soon as he is able to obtain possession of the property for which he closed a ninety-nine-year lease this week.

The property, which includes three large business buildings adjoining the Bijou motion picture theatre, 130 East Washington street, is owned by Harry W. Fuehring, of Indianapolis. The Bijou Theatre, under different ownerships and managements, was the pioneer moving picture house of Indianapolis. Mr. Sourbier says the plans for the theatre will be announced at a later date.

Hammond's First Exhibitor Dies.

"Col." Fred Lash, the first man in Hammond, Ind., to realize the future of the motion picture business, died at his home there last week after a life of great activity and usefulness. He was seventy-three years old. He retired several years ago from active life by reason of failing health and left his various interests in the hands of his wife and son, Fred Lash, Jr.

Mr. Lash gave Hammond its first motion picture theatre. However, he lived to see millions invested in the industry in which he had great faith, and his son, Fred, conducted the theatre until a few years ago.

Detail of New South Bend Theatre.

Details concerning the construction of a new motion picture theatre at South Bend, a project announced a few weeks ago in the columns of the Moving Picture World, were made public last week. The business property owned by J. P. McGill and Frank C. Toepp, on the east side of Michigan street, just north of Jefferson Boulevard, have been transferred to J. Handelsman, of Chicago, and Charles Edgar Potts, of Indiana Harbor, under a ninety-nine year lease, and plans for the theatre, which is to be erected there, are now in the hands of the architects.

Work of razing the present structures and erecting the new building will begin soon, and it is planned by the new owners to open the theatre, which will be known as the Blackstone, about October 1, 1919. The structure will cost approximately $350,000. The frontage of the property leased is about 100 feet.

The plans contemplate one of the finest motion picture theatres in the state. The front elevation shows a commodious lobby for the theatre, flanked on each side by two storerooms.

The theatre will have no balcony, but will be equipped with mezzanine boxes. A pipe organ will be installed and a big symphony orchestra employed, according to the lessors. Mr. Handelsman is sales manager of the Kimball Piano Company and Mr. Potts is the general superintendent of the Indiana Steel Company, of Indiana Harbor.

Johnson Entertains Ambulance Unit Members.

Through the kindness of Manager Johnson, of the Luna Theatre, at Lafayette, and the Lafayette Council of the Knights of Columbus, members of a United States ambulance unit, which passed through the city on Christmas Day, were honor guests at the theatre.

To Open the Tolleston Theatre.

R. Gollenstein, formerly manager of the Lyric Theatre, at Gary, is making arrangements to open the Tolleston Theatre, at Tolleston, in the near future. The Tolleston was closed during the summer and has not been opened since that time.

News from the Maritime Provinces

By Alice Fairweather, Standard, St. John, N. B.

Allens May Open Theatre in St. John.

A NEW theatre seems to be the gist of the rumors which are going about in St. John motion picture circles. Louis Rosenfeldt, the personal representative of Jule and J. J. Allen, of Toronto, has been in the city for some weeks interviewing property owners, and has also spent some time in Halifax on the same errand.

Beeman Transferred to Sydney.

Harry Beeman, who has been the manager of the new Strand at Sydney, has been transferred to the Strand at Halifax; Keltie taking his place at Sydney.

The Strand, Sydney Mines, Opens.

The opening of the new theatre, the Strand, built by William Cuzner, of Sydney Mines, was a gala occasion. A capacity house was seen at the opening, and many were the favorable comments made on the beauty and up-to-dateness of the theatre and the enterprise of the owner, who has surmounted many difficulties, having been burned out no less than twice.

The building is constructed of tile and concrete, with metal finish; is one hundred and forty-two feet by forty-four, with a seating capacity for seven hundred. The dimensions of the stage are forty-two by twenty-five feet, with an elevated scenery loft forty feet high. Below the drop curtain is the orchestra pit, where fine electrical effects are to be seen with pretty fixtures. The music is to be made a special feature. Two Power's 6-B machines are used. On the opening night a profusion of flowers and palms made the whole house most attractive, and the owner, W. H. Cuzner, was congratulated heartily upon his enterprise and the success of his undertaking.

World Correspondent Extends Thanks.

The correspondent of the Moving Picture World for the Maritime Provinces takes this opportunity of thanking all exhibitors and exchange managers who have co-operated so heartily with her in her efforts to give the news, and wishes them and all readers of the World a Happy and Prosperous New Year.

The Empress Is an Up-to-date House.

The accompanying cut is a view of the stage of the Empress Theatre, Amherst, N. S., probably the most attractive of F. G. Spencer's amusement houses. Built less than a year ago, it is up-to-date in every way, and seats between eleven and twelve hundred, including boxes. The Empress plays motion pictures, vaudeville and road attractions. The Empress enjoys excellent patronage under C. E. Allen.

WEISFELT NEW FOX EXCHANGE MANAGER

Succeeds Dennison at the Minneapolis Branch Who Has Been Called to the New York Office

By William Edward Mulligan, Minneapolis Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

D. LEO DENNISON, manager of the Minneapolis Fox Exchange, has been called to the New York home office of Fox, being succeeded by his assistant, Max Weisfeldt. Mr. Dennison had charge of the local Fox branch for three months.

Mr. Weisfeldt is well known in this territory. Several years ago he was associated with Mutual in Minneapolis, and later went to Omaha to manage the Mutual branch in that city. His success at Omaha led to his transfer to Chicago, where he acted as assistant under B. N. Judell. When the Wholesale Films Corporation was formed in Chicago two years ago, Mr. Weisfeldt was chosen by the directors as general manager, holding that position until he joined Fox several months ago.

Elliott Back on Job.

Frank York Elliott, manager of the Elliott Film Corporation, of Minneapolis, who served Uncle Sam for a brief period of ten weeks at the Dunwoody military training school, has been released from the army and is back on the job again.

Malone Heads Milwaukee Branch.

George W. Malone, for several years associated with Minneapolis film interests, has been appointed manager of the Milwaukee exchange of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation. He was with Mutual in Minneapolis when the local exchange was under the management of Dan Donnellan. When Mr. Donnellan was transferred to Chicago recently, Mr. Malone requested that he also be allowed to go with him. His request was granted. That he made good is evidenced by his promotion to the important Milwaukee post.

Donnellan's Romance.

"Peggy and I were married this morning. Get a new booker."

This telegram, received by Manager Mantzke from Dan Donnellan, manager of the Chicago Exhibitors' Mutual Exchange, nearly had the effect of a bomb in the Minneapolis Mutual branch.

The announcement was a delightful surprise, and brought to light a hidden romance covering a period of two years, during which Dan Donnellan was manager of the Minneapolis branch and Miss Peggy Sutcliffe was his stenographer.

Peggy Sutcliffe, who had recently been promoted to the position of booker, worked steadily in the office until Saturday. Monday she failed to appear for work, and the mystery of her disappearance was not solved until Wednesday, when the telegram explaining it all came.

New Year's Celebration.

The first event sponsored by the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade, Inc., organized last month, was a New Year's eve celebration at the Radisson Hotel. Invitations were extended to every exchangeman, exhibitor and supplyman of Minneapolis and the larger cities in this territory.

Accompanying this article is a group picture of the officers of the new organization, which has as its primary object the general betterment of conditions in the industry. They are, left to right: Vice-president, E. R. Pearson, manager First National Exchange; president, E. A. Eschman, manager World Exchange; secretary, W. C. Lestico, manager Triangle Exchange; treasurer, Benjamin Friedman, president Friedman Film Corporation. Mr. Lestico is standing.

News Brevities.

Karl Ebert has been added to the sales force of the Film Clearing House, Inc., and Independent Sales Corporation, of Minneapolis.

Joseph M. Fieldman, popular film salesman in this territory for several years past, has returned to civil life from the army, joining the sales force of the Minneapolis Pathe Exchange.

St. Louis News Letter

By Richard D. Howe, 914 Star Building, St. Louis, Mo.

Reilly Signs for Select and Paramount.

J. J. REILLY, manager of the Princess Theatre, Alton, Ill., was a visitor in St. Louis last week. Mr. Reilly, who is one of the live-wire exhibitors in this district, came here to arrange some future bookings with Select and Paramount.

Loew Takes Over the Garrick.

Marcus Loew has added another house to his long list of holdings. The Garrick Theatre, St. Louis, which was formerly a Shubert house, will open Sunday, January 19, as a first-class vaudeville and moving picture theatre. Mr. Loew has arranged for first-run Select pictures, and will also play four or five acts of vaudeville.

The Garrick, which formerly played road attractions, has a seating capacity of 1,200. The house is now being remodeled and a few repairs made before the opening.

Sella & Tate Acquire the Players Theatre.

The beautiful half million dollar Players Theatre, on Grand street, near Oliver street, here, has been secured by Sella & Tate, who already own or hold interests in nearly a dozen theatres in St. Louis.

The old Players Theatre will open about January 15. It has a seating capacity of 2,200 and is one of the finest houses in the city. A new name will be selected for the house. Several are under consideration at present. Among them are Pershing, Capitol and Rivoli.

Sella & Tate, who hold the franchise for Western vaudeville, plan to transfer the vaudeville from the King's Theatre to the new one and institute a straight feature picture policy at the King's.

Deitz Gets His Honorable Discharge.

Former employes of the film exchanges here who enlisted in the fighting service are commencing to return to their old positions. The first to arrive back in the film circle is A. R. Deitz, office manager of Select Pictures Corporation, who resigned to enter the air service two months ago. He was stationed at Garden City, L. I., and was discharged last week.

Officers of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade.

Dayton News Letter

By Paul Gray, Dayton Theatre Building, Dayton, Ohio.

Work Progressing on Two New Theatres.

GILBERT BURROWES, who is to manage the Auditorium Theatre when it is opened, states that construction work is progressing rapidly. The Auditorium will have no steps and will be provided with about 1,000 seats. The palm room, which was a feature of the old theatre destroyed by fire, will be incorporated in the new building. The Victoria Theatre, which was destroyed by fire sometime after the Auditorium, is also being razed so that work can begin on its rebuilding.

Rauh Home from Army.

Elmer Rauh, part owner of the Auditorium Theatre, is home, having been discharged from the army recently. Mr. Rauh was one of the draftees from Dayton and left big business interests to become part of Uncle Sam's army.

New Sign at Columbia.

The Columbia Theatre, under the management of Charles Gross, has installed a new electric sign on the front. On the top of the sign is a large American flag. It presents a much better appearance than the sign formerly used.

Nann Held Up and Robbed.

George Nann, of the Strand, Dayton (management of Clay Brehm), was held up and robbed by an armed desperado on Thursday night, January 3. Mr. Nann was relieved of a diamond ring and a gold watch, but the thief did not take twenty dollars in money that he had in his pocket.

Fox Representative Visits Dayton.

Lew Foster, of the Fox Film Corporation, spent several days in the Gem City last week watching the progress of Les Miserables, one of that company's films playing at the Dayton.

Increase First National Sales Force.

Roy Haines, Cincinnati manager for the First National, announces that he has added to his staff of salesmen P. A. Schmidt, who was recently discharged from the army. Previous to his enlistment Mr. Schmidt was special representative of the Mutual handling. Mr. Haines has placed Mr. Schmidt in charge of the territory under his supervision in Ohio.

Washington News Letter

622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

Cable New Year Greetings to Wilson.

A. BRYLAWSKI, the Sidney B. Lust Film Exchange, the Crandall theatres, Loew's theatres and the Cosmos Theatre Company joined with a group of merchants in sending New Year greetings to President Wilson. These were in the form of a cablegram to Mr. Wilson in Paris, reading: "We of Washington, at the dawn of the new year, salute you. May your vision of world peace take early shape and substance in reality. In council may yours be the pleasurable honor, as master-spokesman of democracy, of friendly spirited dominance. And may there be granted you safe voyage, when on the high seas homeward bound, and heaping measure of happiness and good cheer, continuing throughout the year, on your return to this international capital."

This cablegram was reproduced in full as a page advertisement in the Washington Post on New Year's Day and created a great deal of attention.

Moss Goes Into the Exhibiting End.

C. O. Moss, who has been traveling in this territory for Pathe, Inc., has left the exchange end of the game to become manager of the Palace Theatre in Petersburg. Mr. Moss' home has been in that section of the country and he has been anxious to return there for some time. When he left Washington he carried with him the best wishes of all of his former associates for his success in this new undertaking.

Two Former Employes of General Return.

Two of the former employes of the Washington office of the General Film Company are back in the fold again. Robert Vondergoltz, who has been out in Grand Rapids, Mich., and Toledo, Ohio, managing offices for the Universal, will again cover the Virginia territory for General. James Burns has obtained his discharge from the army and is again superintending the shipping of the General's films. When it became known that it would be possible to secure the release of the soldier boys, Manager Jake Flax of this office sent a telegram to Mr. Burns, offering him his old job back again at an increased salary. Private Burns showed the wire to his superior officer, who made the comment that any firm who would hold open a position for a man as long as the General had deserved consideration. He recommended the release of Mr. Burns and he was accordingly transferred to Camp Meade, Md., and there honorably discharged.

"Silent Mystery" Released January 15.

Sidney B. Lust, of the Super Films Attractions, Inc., announces that he will release "The Silent Mystery" in the territory comprising Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, North Carolina and the District of Columbia, about January 15. Mr. Lust states he has had quite a number of inquiries as to when this subject would be available for exhibition.

To Reopen Theatre in Connellsville.

Harry M. Crandall, operator of a string of theatres in Washington, D. C., is about to reopen a theatre in Connellsville, Pa., which has been closed for some time. He has taken charge of this proposition as the result of a realty deal involving the "swapping" of five pieces of property in this city. Interested in the transaction with Mr. Crandall is Harry Wardman, a local real estate operator. The Pennsylvania Theatre is located in an apartment house property, the value of which is placed at in the neighborhood of $125,000.

Fire in Theatre Cellar.

A fire in the cellar of the Zenith Theatre caused some little excitement in the neighborhood of its location, 715 Eighth street, Southeast. The fire, caused by spontaneous combustion, was quickly extinguished.

CLEVELAND'S ARGUS TO OPEN MARCH 1

Will Be Under the Mall and Alhambra Management—Balcony of Concrete a Feature—1600 Seats

By M. A. Malaney, 206 Sloan Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

THE Argus Theatre, now in the course of construction in Cleveland, will open about March 1. This announcement was made by Joseph Laronge, who is financing the proposition, including the building.

The Argus Theatre is a downtown house, and will have 1,600 seats. It is located on East Ninth street, about 200 feet north of Euclid avenue. There will be a balcony of concrete, which is said to be the largest span between New York and Chicago.

The Argus will be operated under the same management as the Mall and Alhambra theatres. This will give Mr. Laronge and his associates, Fred Desberg, E. P. Strong and Mark Greenbaum, three large first-class theatres in Cleveland.

The new house will follow the policy of the other two, changing pictures twice weekly, except for special productions, which will be shown a week. The Argus will be 80 by 100 feet in size, with a lobby of 24 feet wide. It is fireproof.

Will Show Same Film Simultaneously.

When the Strand Theatre, a downtown Cleveland house, came under the management of the owners of the Orpheum last week a new policy was put into operation. The two houses starting the first of the year will show simultaneously the same subject.

This is not entirely new to Cleveland, however, because for two years the Mall, a downtown house, and the Alhambra, a large neighborhood house, have been showing the same picture at the same time.

However, the Orpheum and Strand are both downtown houses, within two blocks of each other, and the idea is being watched with much interest by exhibitors of Cleveland.

Smith Gets a Diamond Stick-Pin.

E. J. Smith, manager of the Cleveland Universal Exchange, was surprised Christmas day when his employes presented him with a diamond stick-pin.

"We like you as a boss, and want to show our appreciation," said Lew Thompson, speaking for the employes. Smith was so pleased he could hardly find words for reply.

Alhambra Employes Remember Greenbaum.

Employes of the Alhambra Theatre, Cleveland, presented Manager Mark Greenbaum with a handsome nickeled coffee percolator for Christmas. In making the presentation speech, Assistant Manager Smith was forced to acknowledge that they would have bought him a case of Old Crow, but they found out that he had discontinued the use of such in order to be thoroughly familiar with coffee by the time Ohio goes dry, May 27. "Any way," said Smith, "we didn't know if you ever took a little cheer."

Exchange Heads Give Boutall a Humidor.

As a slight mark of appreciation for his co-operation during the past year, L. J. Boutall, who has charge of the parcel post business of the Cleveland post office, was presented with a handsome humidor cabinet filled with cigars the day before Christmas.

It was presented by S. E. Morris, president of the Exchange Managers' Board of the Chamber of Commerce, for that organization in the offices of the Select Pictures. On top of the humidor was a silver plate with Mr. Boutall's name engraved thereon and the date.

Exchange managers of Cleveland are strong for Mr. Boutall because he has shown himself a courteous hard-worker, and always ready to help untangle anything that comes up. He has done much for the success of the parcel post in Northern Ohio as regards shipping films.

Hoffman Succumbs to Influenza.

C. P. Hoffman, pioneer exhibitor, and manager of the Star Theatre, Carrolton, Ohio, died recently from an attack of influenza.

Seattle News Letter

By S. J. Anderson, 807 Leary Building, Seattle, Wash.

Children See Official Films.

WHEN the official war films, "America's Answer" and "Under Four Flags," opened at the Clemmer within a few weeks of each other the superintendent of schools each time instructed his teachers to tell the children to have their parents escort them to see the pictures. The superintendent of the Tacoma schools did the same thing, with the result that the official films played to good business in both cities.

Anderson Buys the Gem.

T. M. Anderson has bought the Gem Theatre, a small motion picture house on lower Second avenue, from John Hamrick.

Sison Comes to Seattle.

William Sison, an operator from Local No. 359, formerly employed at the Strand Theatre, New York City, has come to Seattle to live, because his people are making their home here. He is now working at the Victory Theatre.

Coliseum's Christmas Decorations.

One of the most effective Christmas decorations ever seen on the exterior of a theatre in Seattle was that of the Coliseum Theatre. In the arc above the marquee was a country snow scene with the hillside and the lone house glittering with diamond-glass. Just below it on the top of the marquee was a forest of small Christmas trees. The lobby was decorated with hanging backets of red and gilt Christmas bouquets, and in the foyer the indirect lighting fixtures were alternately red, green and white, with red and green streamers hanging from them and holly above. Just inside the foyer, at the foot of the incline leading to the balcony, was a huge pedestal decoration of poinsettias and holly.

Koerpel Boosts Showing of Official Film.

J. A. Koerpel, manager of the Seattle World office, who consistently preaches service, gave a concrete example on a recent Saturday of an exchange manager's service to an exhibitor. The new Government film, "Under Four Flags," was just beginning its run at the Clemmer Theatre. A big motor truck, appropriately decorated, was lent by the Red Cross salvage department, and a band of six pieces volunteered their services. Mr. Koerpel also mounted the truck, and, after the national anthem had been played at noon in front of the Clemmer, the truck started down Second avenue, stopping at street corners along the way, while the eloquent World manager made ten-minute speeches. They proceeded in this way down Second avenue, up First, down Third and up Fourth, the band playing at each corner where the truck stopped, and Mr. Koerpel following the music with a ten-minute talk on patriotism and the Government war pictures, "Under Four Flags" in particular. This continued until three o'clock, by which time the Clemmer was turning them away from its doors.

Rosenberg Buys More Features.

Mike Rosenberg, president of the De Luxe Feature Film Company, has bought two big, new features for the Northwest, "Mickey," and the Warner special, "The Kaiser's Finish."

RAPF'S PICTURE UNIQUELY ADVERTISED

Dallas Exchange Manager Scatters Pamphlets Captioned "Wanted for Murder" from Housetops

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

AN elaborate advertising stunt was pulled off in Dallas during the last week of the year by W. L. Merrill, manager of the Film Clearing House, Inc., boosting Harry Rapf's "Wanted for Murder."

In local newspapers Mr. Merrill carried a one-line query, "Who is wanted for murder?" These lines in black type were scattered through the sheets.

Then from the roofs of a couple of sixteen-story buildings in the business district he threw down thousands of pamphlets carrying the picture of the Kaiser with the "Wanted for Murder" caption. Thousands of paper bags with "Wanted for Murder" printed on them were distributed among local grocery stores, fruit stands, candy stores, etc.

As a finale the town woke up one morning with big billboard sheets staring them in the face announcing that "Wanted for Murder" was to be featured at the Old Mill Theatre.

Dugger Connects with Hodkinson.

J. B. Dugger, formerly manager of Vitagraph, has assumed the management of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation business in this territory. He has his offices with the Pathe Company on Commerce street, and will take care of the Paralta interests in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. He takes the place of Hoyt Morrow, who has resigned to enter the oil business.

View in the World Gives Idea for Stunt.

Taking a tip from a photograph which he saw in the Moving Picture World, Jose Davenport, of the Waxahachie Amusement Company, Waxahachie, erected a gallows in front of his theatre and hanged the Kaiser in effigy in order to advertise "The Kaiser's Finish" on Christmas day. The stunt quickly resolved itself into a patriotic demonstration on the part of Waxahachie citizens, and the Davenport Theatre did a record business.

Short Texas Items.

Harry Owens, former Paramount manager, is now with the Universal in Oklahoma City. He visited Dallas during the holidays.

Al Bartlett, of Pathe, is now with the S. A. Lynch Enterprises.

Lieutenant Truly B. Wildman, well known Texas film salesman, visited film row Christmas Day on furlough from Fort Sill, Oklahoma. He will come back into the film game when he receives his discharge.

Stanley Employes Remembered on Christmas.

OLD ST. NICHOLAS paid his annual Yuletide visit to Philadelphia and left many pleasant remembrances among the film men and theatre managers. A substantial gift in the way of a $10 gold piece was received by all the managers employed by the Stanley Company, while they, in turn, gave Frank W. Buhler, the managing director, a handsome traveling bag fully equipped, as a mark of esteem and appreciation on their part for the many acts of kindness which he displayed towards them during the past year.

Inaugurate Big Advertising Campaign.

John Clark, manager of the Paramount-Artcraft local exchange, announces that they have inaugurated an extensive advertising campaign in the leading newspapers of this city, thereby giving the exhibitors an added amount of co-operation.

Colonial Theatre Will Reopen.

The Colonial Theatre, which was seriously damaged by fire some time ago, will reopen in a few days, having been completely repaired and redecorated.

Children Entertained at the Cedar.

The South Sixtieth Street Improvement Association entertained 1,500 children of that section in the Cedar Theatre, Sixtieth street and Cedar avenue, Monday afternoon, December 31. That no children of the district might be overlooked, the doors of the theatre were thrown open to youngsters of all ages, irrespective of color or race. Columbus Stamper, the general manager, announced that he would be pleased to co-operate with the Association whenever the occasion arose again. E. J. Cattel, City Statistician, made an address, after which every child was given an orange and a candy cane. J. E. Trainer was chairman of the entertainment committee, while Manager Sisty carried out every arrangement to perfection.

Sale Lake City News Letter

By W. H. Bennett, Jr., Desert Evening News, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Do Good Business on New Year's Day.

SALT LAKE CITY appears to be getting over the influenza scare. Business is showing a material improvement and the two largest moving picture houses in the city did record business on New Year's day. The American Theatre took in $66 more than on any previous day in its history, and the Paramount-Empress Theatre did $63 more business than on New Year's day, 1918.

The Select picture, "The Forbidden City," featuring Norma Talmage, did a great business at the American Theatre. Manager George Mayne received many congratulations upon this offering, with requests for more pictures of the same sort.

"Sporting Life," Maurice Tourneur's picturization of the famous Drury Lane melodrama, played at the Paramount-Empress during the fore part of the week, and the thrilling war picture, "Stolen Orders," presented by William A. Brady, did good business at the Salt Lake Theatre.

The Paramount-Empress Theatre has increased its admission for best seats from 20 to 25 cents. The latter pays the war tax, however, while the former did not, so the actual increase amounts to but 3 cents a seat. Patrons seem to be entirely satisfied with the change of admission.

Announcement is made by Manager Mayne of the American Theatre, that the orchestra for matinees is to be increased to sixteen pieces beginning next week. While it has been customary for a sixteen-piece orchestra to play for the evening performance, the matinee orchestra has been considerably smaller. The house also employs two organists.

Allen Consulting with Marcus.

J. W. Allen, special agent for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with headquarters in New York, is visiting in Salt Lake City, consulting Louis Marcus, district manager for the company, with reference to types of pictures, new systems of distribution to bring about more efficiency, new accounting systems and kindred business matters.

Levin Buys Swanson-Nolan Company.

Samuel Levin, who for some time has been connected with the district office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has purchased the control of the Swanson-Nolan Company of Salt Lake City. The company will hereafter be known as the Sale Lake Theatrical Supply Company, and its stock will soon be greatly increased. It has the agency for all kinds of motion picture machines and other accessories. The company will be ready for business on January 10. The concern was formerly owned by W. H. Swanson, head of the Swanson circuit of motion picture theatres, and head of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

S. Handel, traveling auditor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was in the city this week.

Gardening Film Made.

The Extension Division of the University of California has completed an eleven-reel production in co-operation with the National Government, and will distribute this among the schools of the state. The title of the film is "Making the Home Gardens," and the production is divided into four parts, one for each season of the year. The film will be distributed through the State Council of Defense.

Louisville Trade Letter

By Ohio Valley News Service, Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

Negro Boys Rob S. & P. Film Company.

THE S. & P. Film & Supply Company, 418 West Liberty street, reported to the police that thieves had entered the store, stolen a moving picture machine, several lenses, a number of reels and supplies sufficient to start a moving picture theatre. In fact, everything necessary but tickets and chairs were taken. The thieves gained admittance by removing a plate glass window in the door.

The second chapter of affair was written a few days later when the police raided a new moving picture show that had been secretly established by two fifteen year old negro boys in a basement under a negro tenement at 613 South Eleventh street. The youngsters had calcimined a rear wall, secured a lot of boxes, planks, etc., and arranged seats, and had been having the time of their young lives until officers got wind of the fact that a private picture show was doing a thriving business in the district.

It is claimed that if the show hadn't been discovered when it was it would have been necessary for the youngsters to do some more raiding in order to secure fresh supplies of films to keep the show going. Just how current was secured, and how the boys knew enough about the machine to operate it, is something that will probably come out in a third chapter, which will be written on the records of the police court.

Opened House in Defiance of Regulations.

D. D. Smith, operator of the Capital Theatre, Frankfort, on December 25, Christmas Day, opened his theatre regardless of the regulations of the State Board and local Health Board. Mr. Smith contended that the exhibitors were discriminated against, as other businesses were not interfered with. Just one show was run off, and that well attended, when officers served an injunction on Mr. Smith and stopped the show. Dr. John G. South, president of the State Board of Health, handled the warrant. Mr. Smith alleges that the theatres will either have to run or get out of business, and claims that it is unfair to close picture houses and dance halls, and allow everything else to run. He doesn't contest the right of the State Board to close up business houses, but does contest its right to show discrimination.

Heads Co-operative Bureau of Cement Association.

Henry A. Guthrie, who was formerly connected with several moving picture and theatrical interests in Louisville, including the old Aladdin Film Company, has recently been named chief of the Trade Co-operative Bureau of the Portland Cement Association, one of the largest organizations in the country.

Had Extra Shows on New Year's Eve.

Theatres in the downtown district of Louisville generally ran extra performances on New Year's Eve, starting the last performance at around 10.30 and lasting until about midnight. The Walnut had on the "Common Cause," the Majestic, Marguerite Clark, in "Little Miss Hoover"; the Strand, Theda Bara, in "The She-Devil," and the Alamo, Norma Talmadge, in "The Heart of Wetona." Theda Bara drew well at the Strand, while all of these shows were good drawing cards.

Harry J. Lyons Dies.

Harry J. Lyons, of Louisville, a large stockholder and officer of the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, operating the Alamo Theatre, and father-in-law of Dennis Long, vice-president of the company, is dead, having been stricken in the theatre building a few days ago, and having died shortly after being removed to his home. Mr. Lyons was one of the most prominent stockbrokers of the city, and head of the firm of W. L. Lyons & Co.

FOLAND BOOKS FILMS TO CENSOR BOARD

General's Manager Installs System Which Insures Kansas Exhibitors Pictures Passed by Review Body

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

EXHIBITORS are sometimes subjected to annoyance because exchanges send them prints of pictures that have not been "cut" as prescribed by the state censors. The General Film Exchange, Kansas City, has a plan that obviates any danger of this sort. J. E. Foland, manager, has adopted the scheme of booking to the Board of Review all pictures destined for Kansas, just as prints are booked to a theatre. The print, therefore, is entered on the books, and the record of its movement is preserved. This particular print, when censored, is then booked to Kansas theatres—and no print that has not been censored and cut bearing the stamp of the Board of Review can get to a Kansas exhibitor. As long as the law requires pictures to be reviewed and stamped before being shown, the exchanges are trying to make it as easy on the exhibitors as possible.

Storm Reduces Theatre Patronage.

A cold wave and snow-storm that hampered traffic severely hit Kansas City two days before Christmas. It hit the moving picture industry about as hard as any, too. The street car service was already curtailed to about 30 per cent. of its daylight schedule, with no night service at all, because of the strike. And the storm nearly put the few cars running out of commission. The expected big Christmas patronage of the theatres was seriously affected.

The storm had less effect than expected on shipments of films. Express companies issued an order that all shipments would be accepted subject to delay, but there were surprisingly few complaints of delayed shipment from exhibitors of the territory.

Establishes Exhibitors' Service Department.

Sam Bornstein has been made manager of a new department of serials established by the Universal Film & Supply Company. Mr. Bornstein will pay particular attention to service for exhibitors.

Universal Star in Kansas City.

Eddie Polo was a recent visitor in Kansas City and was welcomed in a large number of local theatres. Milton Feld, manager of the local Universal office, with L. B. Douglass and others of the Universal personnel, accompanied Mr. Polo on his rounds, which occupied two days.

Elsea Joins A. H. Blank.

S. M. Elsea, formerly of the Paramount office here, has become a member of the office force of the A. H. Blank Enterprises. Mr. Elsea has been regimental sergeant-major attached to headquarters company at Camp Funston.

With the Exhibitors.

Wichita, Kan.—The Wichita Theatre, the city's newest motion picture and vaudeville house, was formally opened December 23. Officers of the Peerless Theatre Company, which owns the new Wichita Theatre and the Star theatres, are W. D. Jochems, president; J. H. Cooper, vice-president, and C. C. McCollister, secretary and treasurer. The management of both playhouses will be under Mr. McCollister.

Osawatomie, Kan.—Fred Parrish has succeeded Henneberry & Evar as manager of the Empress Theatre in this city.

North Little Rock, Ark.—Louis Rosenbaum, of the Princess Theatre, is heading an enterprise to build a new opera house at Florence, Ala., in which a picture program will be run in conjunction with the Princess Theatre program. Excavations have started on the new building, which will cost $50,000.

Harrison, Ark.—H. H. Jackson has sold the Lyric Theatre to D. E. Fitton, who has been conducting the moving picture house at Searcy the past year. Mr. Fitton will continue the business at Searcy, but will make Harrison his home. Mr. Jackson expects to go back into the picture business in the spring, probably in Dallas, Texas.

Bristow, Okla.—C. W. Griffin and associates, of Oklahoma City, have bought the De Luxe Theatre from F. L. Griffith and reopened the show December 23 with high-class pictures.

Wichita, Kan.—The new Winter Garden is being rapidly completed and will be open about the middle of January. The opening night will soon be announced by Manager J. T. Nuttle.

Great Bend, Kan.—The Lyric Theatre has opened for business. This theatre was formerly known as "The Elite."

Mt. Pleasant, Texas.—The Martin Theatre has installed a $3,000 Wurlitzer organ.

Orange, Texas.—The American Theatre was opened in the new Holland Building December 24. Harry Kitterman is the manager. The theatre will seat about 1,000 persons.

Moberly, Mo.—Fred R. Corbett has disposed of his interest in the Grand Theatre to the Grand Amusement and Advertising Company, Inc.

Pomona, Kan.—The Campbell Novelty Show people have rented the lots between the garage and the city bakery and will erect an airdome which they will put in fine shape for the picture show business for the coming season. It will be equipped with the latest type of machine and a stage for vaudeville work.

Parsons, Kan.—The Parsons Amusement Company succeeds T. J. Behmyer as lessee of the Elks' Theatre and will conduct a fine playhouse in the future. The new parties are S. D. Newton, owner of the Elks' Building; C. R. Linsey and Wallace Mathis. Messrs. Mathis and Linsey have both had considerable experience in the theatrical management line.

Pretty Prairie, Kan.—Messrs. Barr and Bixler are the new owners and managers of the Gaicty Theatre here.

Hampton, Ia.—The Star Theatre has been leased to James Keefe, who will operate it in connection with the Windsor.

Doniphan, Mo.—L. L. Lewis, of Success, Ark., has closed a deal with W. W. Gary and C. O. Booker in which Mr. Lewis becomes the owner of the Princess Theatre. He expects to remodel and make extensive changes before opening for business soon.

File Suits Against Washington Receiver.

FOUNDATION for another suit against the receiver of the Washington Motion Picture Corporation, with studios at Minnehaha Park, was laid when George N. Barnes obtained an order appointing C. R. Dixon as receiver for the Northwest Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Barnes, a stockholder in the Northwest Picture Corporation, which formerly opened its studio in this city, arranged for the appointment of a receiver so that a $1,000 suit may be started to recover damages from the Washington Motion Picture Company, which is also in the hands of the receiver.

Officer Lee Markwood was granted permission by court to sue the receiver of the Washington Motion Picture Corporation for injuries received by his son, alleged to have been bitten by a dog owned by the company. The boy died.

ACTIVITIES OF PITTSBURGH FILM MEN

Sybert's Theatres Open After a Ten Weeks' Close—Exchanges Buying New Subjects

By Elmer H. Mayer, 231 Collins Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Quality Secures Tom Mix Comedies.

HARRY A. LANDE, manager of the Quality Film Corporation, Pittsburgh, has contracted for a series of two-reel Tom Mix reissues for release in this territory. Many exhibitors here have already voiced their approval of this, as Mix is popular with the fans of this section. Many bookings on the series have already been made, although the release date has not as yet been set.

The S. & S. Buys Several New Features.

The S. & S. Film & Supply Company, Inc., the latest of Pittsburgh independent exchanges, is enjoying a rapid growth, and has just contracted for several new features. The intention of the company is to release one a week, beginning January 13. Among the new purchases are Al Jennings, in "The Lady of the Dugout"; Alma Hanlon and Jack Sherrill, in "The Profiteer"; the six-reel version of "The Million-Dollar Mystery." This firm also has short subjects, such as Chaplin reissues, Ann Little and Jack Richardson in a series of two-reel Western reissues.

Clark Plays Santa Claus to Employes.

J. B. Clark, head of the Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, played Santa Claus on Christmas Day. Each and every one of his employes, from scrubwoman to theatre manager, was presented with an appropriate gift. The employes, in some instances, didn't forget their bosses either. Manager Casper, of the Liberty, East Liberty, was presented with a handsome desk set by his force, and Manager Donovan, of the Regent, also in East Liberty, was given a humidor filled with cigars by the force at the Regent.

Parents of Williams Succumb to Pneumonia

R. J. Williams, of the Colonial Theatre, Troy Hill, was obliged to suspend business practically all of New Year's week, owing to the death of both his father and mother, who passed away within three days of each other, victims of pneumonia, superinduced by influenza. His wife and two children also were victims of the epidemic, but recovered.

Open After a Ten Weeks' Close.

M. A. Sybert, of the Park Theatre, Moundsville, and the Midway, at McMechen, W. Va., is getting things in running order after a ten weeks' close-down as a result of the influenza epidemic. He reopened last week and reports business above normal.

Mr. Sybert operates the only two theatres in the two towns mentioned, and, although local physicians and business men were in favor of keeping the theatres open, the local health boards ordered them closed, in spite of the fact that there were a comparatively small number of cases in the towns.

Baltimore Back on the Job.

Dave Baltimore, formerly manager of the Strand Theatre, New Castle, Pa., is back on the job again after six months spent in the service of Uncle Sam at Newark, Del. He was doing special work for the Government.

McGinnis Connects with the United.

Lieut. F. J. McGinnis, recently discharged from the army, has accepted a position as projection expert at the Pittsburgh branch of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation, of which D. C. France is manager.

Mr. McGinnis is one of the pioneer operators of this section, having started in the business ten years ago. He has also had ample sales experience, having been employed by the old Calcium Light Company in Fourth avenue, five years ago. Subsequently he spent a few years in New York, where he was traveling for a supply house.

Mr. McGinnis enjoys a wide acqualntance among exhibitors of this section. He is a member of the operators' union; in fact, he was one of the organizers of the local branch.

Employes Give Rippard Traveling Set.

William H. Rippard, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, was not forgotten Christmas Day by his employes. He was presented with a toilet traveling set in a genuine Walrus case, the clasp of which is Sterling silver, and on which his name is engraved. He didn't forget to play Santa Claus to his employes, either.

Lacey Gets His Discharge.

Fred Lacey, formerly an exhibitor in Pittsburgh, but of late connected with the Canadian Tank Corps, has been discharged from that service. He is now head of the film inspection department at the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation here.

Braun New Manager at American.

T. C. Braun is the new manager of the American Film Productions in Pittsburgh. He has already made many friends in this territory and says he likes it immensely. Before coming here he was manager of the Atlantic, one of the largest movie theatres of Chicago. Previous to that he was advertising manager for the Paramount-Artcraft at St. Louis.

Grand Employes Honor Mason.

The employes of the Grand Theatre, Pittsburgh's million-dollar photoplay house, recently tendered a big reception to William F. Mason, film booker for all the Harris & Davis houses, of which the Grand is one. The affair was held at the William Penn Hotel, was largely attended, and many prominent film men were present. During the course of the evening Mason was presented with a Masonic charm and a diamond stud in appreciation for his valuable services.

Israhl Company Opens Its Fourth Theatre.

The Israhl Amusement Company, of Homestead, Pa., on Saturday, December 21, threw open the doors of their newest and fourth theatre in that town. The name of the new house will be determined by the people, the person whose suggestion is accepted to receive a suitable prize. The house is a large and beautiful one, and seats 750. Business on the opening day was far beyond expectations, and indications are that it will be a great success. The other theatres controlled by this company are the Crescent, Elite and Grand.

New Pyramid Comedies Ready.

The new line of Pyramid Comedies, to be handled by the Standard Film Exchange, Pittsburgh, is now ready for exhibitors. according to A. A. Weiland, manager of the exchange.

Hatch Buys "Wives of Men."

J. Frank Hatch announces the purchase of another big feature for the states of Pennsylvania, West Virginia and New Jersey. It is "Wives of Men," starring Florence Reed.

Influenza Closes Woodles Theatre Again.

W. R. Wood, of Woodies Theatre, Apollo, Pa., was in Pittsburgh recently, and stated that his town is again closed as a result of the influenza epidemic. He was closed up for six weeks in the first place, then allowed to open a week, and has now been closed again for four weeks.

Edlis Joins the Penn Film.

B. C. Edlis, well-known roadman of Pittsburgh, formerly of the Universal, has accepted a position with the Penn Film Service, and started on the road for this exchange, Monday, December 29. He will handle the entire Penn line and make special efforts on the new Francis Ford serial, "The Silent Mystery."

Lyon Appointed Sherry's District Manager.

B. F. Lyon, formerly manager of the Sherry Service in Pittsburgh, has been appointed district manager for the same company, traveling over the General Film Company's exchanges west of Chicago. He is now on his way to the Coast.

Cincinnati News Letter

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Holiday Business Good.

CINCINNATI exhibitors entered the New Year under the most favorable conditions, with the various handicaps under which they have labored for several months finally and completely removed. They experienced a splendid holiday week owing to the permission of the health authorities to allow children to attend theatres as usual with the diminution of the influenza epidemic.

Invites Attendance of Children.

Manager I. Libson, handling the affairs of the Strand, the Walnut and the Family theatres, capitalized the removal of the restrictions on the movements of children by using in his advertising a special invitation to them to visit his theatres during the holiday season.

To Distribute Demobilization Film.

The Associated Film Exchanges of the Chamber of Commerce, comprising most of the managers of film distributing concerns in Cincinnati, is making arrangements for the distribution of a film depicting the demobilization of the troops at Camp Sherman. The film has been made by War Department photographers, and will be handled without charge by the film men in order to give it the widest possible showing.

The Cincinnati Motion Picture Company, Clarence E. Runey's film producing concern, is devoting especial attention just now to its industrial department, which has for several years been making films for advertising purposes. The company is working with the United States Government in obtaining and spreading information regarding foreign business, and incidentally points out to interested manufacturers the value of moving pictures in carrying abroad messages which might not arrive by any other medium. Mr. Runey believes that the use of films for commercial publicity purposes is going to increase considerably in the future, and he intends to push this branch of his work vigorously.

Midnight Shows in Cincinnati Theatres.

The new year was rendered somewhat noteable in moving picture circles by the fact that for the first time in Cincinnati midnight shows were scheduled in several of the leading downtown houses in order to enable those who wanted to see the old year out to amuse themselves in the meanwhile. The three Libson houses, the Walnut, the Strand and the Family, with McMahon & Jackson's Gifts, were the ones which offered performances in the evening after the usual closing hour, starting at 11:15, and all four of these houses were well patronized for these shows.

Announce Starting Time of Shows.

A plan which has proved a great convenience to the public when multiple-reel pictures occupying an hour or so are being run has been suggested for general use, being the public announcement of the starting time of each performance. While it is not always possible to adhere to a rigid schedule, the exhibitor can approximate the hour of starting his performances, and at the Walnut, the Strand and the Family this is now being done, with the supplementary suggestion that patrons intending to visit any of these houses take the precaution of calling up to find out just what the schedule is if time is important.

"UNDER THE TOP"

Fred Stone Brings His Acrobatic Ability to the Fore in Artcraft Picture of Circus Life.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WHEN a screen actor combines a pleasing personality with the ability to perform all the acrobatic feats of the circus ring, the logical thing to do is to provide said actor with a scenario which calls for a display of such manifold and captivating talent. And that is what "Under the Top" does for Fred Stone, the star of a long line of stage successes and the creater of "The Scarecrow" in "The Wizard of Oz." An Artcraft picture, "Under the Top," was written by John Emerson and Anita Loos. Gardner Hunting turned it into scenario form and it was directed by Donald Crisp.

The story is a happy-go-lucky affair, most of the action taking place in the dreams of an ambitious youngster after he has been knocked off a slack wire in the back yard and is lying insensible on the ground. Smitten with a burning desire to become a circus performer, the boy, Jimmie Jones, has made the acquaintance of a tight-rope walker and his little daughter, and his dreams are of them and the romantic way in which he rescued the charming young lady in after years from a set of deep dyed villains and she became his bride. Jimmie is endowed with a great imagination by the authors of the story, and does his dreaming so cleverly that streaks of comedy and streaks of melodrama are blended together in just the right proportion. Donald Crisp has reproduced the circus scenes admirably, and these are the most important of all.

According to Jimmie's forecast of his future he becomes a sign painter who combines his skill with the brush with his cleverness at doing acrobatic stunts, and is able to paint a church tower while amusing the population with a series of hair-raising feats in midair. One day the Great O'Neill Circus comes to town and Jimmie finds that the proprietor is his old friend, the tight-rope walker. The circus man is killed by a fall and Pansy, his daughter, is left to the guardianship of two members of the circus. Both are rascals. They plan to cheat Pansy out of her property by marrying her off to Jay Trimmer, one of the schemers. This is where Jimmie gets busy. He seizes the marriage license and leads the circus men a chase that takes Jim around and over and inside and outside and on top of the tent and permits him to perform the entire list of acrobatic feats known to the sawdust ring. He is rewarded by securing the hand of Pansy for himself.

Fred Stone is probably the only man who could play Jimmie Jones and not be obliged to cut out the best scenes in the picture. He keeps things moving at a lively rate and is a three-ring circus all by himself. Ella Hall is an attractive Pansy, and clever characterizations are given by Lester Le May as Terry O'Neill, Sylvia Ashton as Lotta Crust, James Cruze as Foxsy Stillmore, Guy Oliver as Jay Trimmer, Charles Ogle as Otto B. Shott, Noah Beery as Professor De Como and Gordon Griffith as the boy Jimmie.

Publicity Points.

There are two kinds of circuses in "Under the Top"—the grown-up kind, with real actors and animals and everything complete, and the kind a feller has in the back yard when he's a boy. Both are the genuine article.

Fred Stone performs more high-class circus feats in this picture than one sees in many a regular show. These are merely incidental to the plot, but each one is done with a finish that only artists of the highest rank in the sawdust ring could equal.

The sub-titles for this picture were written by Anita Loos, and that means they are laugh-getters of the best sort.

"THE SILVER KING"

William Faversham Excellent in Paramount Production of Famous English Melodrama.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

HENRY ARTHUR JONES made his first international success with "The Silver King" when it was produced in New York by the celebrated Wallack's Theatre stock company over thirty years ago. It had the two most important requirements of melodrama—brisk action and strong emotional appeal. These qualities are retained in the screen version of the stage play produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with William Faversham in the title role. The scenario is by the fairminded and entertaining New York dramatic critic, Burns Mantle. George Irving directed the production.

"The Silver King" is the story of a man's regeneration, and has been put together with uncommon skill. The sympathy of the spectator is always with the young Englishman whose love of the race track almost wrecks his life. While the plot is made up of well tried material, time has shown that the majority of amusement-seekers never tire of plays of this class, when intelligently handled in production. The cast, direction and completeness of scenic demands of the screen version are excellent in every way.

Wilfred Denver, open-hearted and unsuspecting, makes a bitter enemy of Godfred Ware when he marries the woman that Ware had hoped to win for himself. Denver is induced to put all his money on the wrong horse in the opening scenes of the story, and, to add to his ruin, he is led to believe that he killed his unsuccessful rival while under the influence of liquor. He escapes from England and goes to the United States and his wife and two children are left penniless. After a hard struggle Denver becomes a wealthy miner and is known in the West as "The Silver King." The moment he strikes it rich he sends money home, but his wife is prevented from receiving it by the man who really killed Ware.

The murderer is a gentleman crook known as "The Spider," and now owns the old home of the Denvers. Receiving no answer to his letters, Wilfred goes back to England under an assumed name and succeeds in bringing "The Spider" to justice and reuniting his family in the old home. The scene where he finds his own child being jeered at by the other school children because her father killed a man and she takes him to the humble cottage where an agent of "The Spider's" is threatening to have Mrs. Denver and her sick child dispossessed is one of those sure-fire situations that never fails of its mark.

William Faversham easily proves his right to head the cast as Wilfred Denver. Barbara Castleton as Nellie Denver, Warburton Gamble as "The Spider," John Sunderland as Geoffrey Ware, Cecil Yapp as Henry Corkett, and John Sutherland as Jaikes have the principal characters in the support.

Publicity Points.

"The Silver King" has been played more times in the United States than any other English melodrama. For years after its first production in this country it was played continuously. "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "East Lynne" and "Rip Van Winkle" are probably the only plays that beat its record.

William Faversham, the star of the picture version, is the most prominent English actor that has confined his starring tours exclusively to the American stage for over fifteen years.

Henry Arthur Jones, the author of "The Silver King," is as well known in this country as he is in England. He has a long line of international successes to his credit and has been given a title by the King of England.

The racing scenes in "The Silver King" are particularly well done and have the correct English atmosphere. The trick by which the jockey throws the race is cleverly handled.

"JANE GOES A-WOOING"

A Paramount Production with Sweet Vivian Martin in the Leading Role.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A VERY sympathetic characterization is presented by Miss Vivian Martin, that of a spirited young working girl who gets what she wants by going after it, though circumstance, as usual, in easily-made stories of this kind, contributes such a large per cent. of the result that the old Arab motto, "Go, don't send," proves only to be fortuitous in an isolated instance.

The term "easily-made" applies to all stories in which the truly dramatic element of struggle against circumstance and environment is replaced by mere luck, such as forms no part of the lives of most of us, and is therefore of limited significance.

The young girl goes to work for an irritable old dramatist, admirably depicted by Spottiswoode Aitken, who is annoyed by the extravagances of his spendthrift nephew. The spendthrift gives a ball in his uncle's house at a time the latter and his stenographer are at work. She chances to see the young man under favoring circumstances and idealizes him. On that night the old playwright dies, leaving a vast property to the girl who has ably assisted him in his final work.

At this point all suspense ends. The sacrifice idea has become so common and commonplace that it is easily foreseen the infatuated girl will destroy the will and restore the vast property, with which she might accomplish great good, to the "rightful heir," though, in this case, she tries to make a man of him before turning over property he does not deserve, which was given to her as a sacred trust. The eccentric will of a convenient uncle with a million or two is so obsolete as to be mid-Victoria, discarded long ago from all but amateur efforts. Through a maze of inconsistencies, delightfully presented by a competent cast and director, there emerges little but fine treatment and the winning personality of sweet Vivian Martin. It is superior treatment and interpretation shown of inferior subject-matter.

"THE GOLD CURE"

Viola Dana the Star of an Excellent Comedy Adapted from a Popular Magazine Story.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

A RATTLING good comedy is "The Gold Cure," Viola Dana's starring vehicle, released by Metro January 6, in five reels. It is an adaptation from a story by Alexine Heyland published in the Woman's Home Companion under the title "Oh! Oh! Annice," which lends itself admirably to screen portrayal. The production starts off well and keeps up a rapid pace throughout, interspersed with many laughs due to good, clean comedy work.

Annice Paish and Edna Pawson, two small town girls, bemoan the fact that one of their friends has captured the only "live" fellow in the village, and Annice decides to try strenuous measures to secure a soul-mate. A handful of tacks spread on the road threatens to bring about the desired result, as a good looking city chap gets caught in the trap, his car overturns and he is badly hurt. However, he proves to be a blond, while Annice longs for one who is tall, dark and handsome. Success indirectly crowns her efforts, as the boy's Uncle Mike fills the bill, and she turns the boy over to her chum Edna. The road to her goal, however, is far from smooth, as many complications arise, due to the machinations of a detective who is hounding the boy in error and who kidnaps him and has him "take the cure' as a rum-hound or booze-comedian. From this dilemma the indomitable Annice extricates him and restores him to his uncle.

This picture was directed by the late John Collins, and in it Viola Dana, as Annice, has one of the best comedy roles of her screen career. Her work throughout is excellent, the scenes in which she masquerades in boy's clothes and endeavors to simulate inebriety being particularly humorous. She is supported by an excellent cast throughout, including John McGowan as the boy, William B. Davidson as Uncle Mike and Elsie MacLeod as Edna. Particular attention has been given by the director to the comedy types, which are unusually good.

Publicity Points.

Viola Dana, by her excellent comedy work in this production, gets into the Chaplin class. Particularly funny is the awful ordeal through which she goes in endeavoring to button a standing collar on a dress shirt.

An unusual feature of this production is the fact that there are two leading men, the boy around whom most of the action revolves has to give way to his tall, dark and handsome uncle, who wins Annice.

This production can be played up as a particularly good adaptation of a much read story appearing in a popular magazine, and one which will please your patrons who read the original story.

"THE SECRET GARDEN"

Lila Lee Shows Artistic Advance in Paramount Production of Frances Hodgson Burnett Novel.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ADMIRERS of Frances Hodgson Burnett's widely read novel, "The Secret Garden," are informed that a well executed screen version has been produced by Paramount with Lila Lee as Mary Lenox. Marion Fairfax prepared the scenario and G. Butler Clonebaugh directed it. The story opens in India, is transferred to England and has a plot that keeps the interest taut from start to finish. Some spectators will find too many scenes showing the physical condition of Colin Craven, the invalid boy whose uncle is trying to put him out of the way. To offset this there are touches of amusing comedy and revelations of kindly human nature, and the scenes in the secret garden are very attractive. The picture has been well put together, when the rambling character of the plot is considered.

One of the agreeable features of the production is the acting of Lila Lee as Mary Lenox. The part suits her personality and she shows a marked advance in her grasp of screen technique. She makes a charming figure of the fearless, clear-minded young girl who comes to the rescue of the unhappy youth whose brutal uncle and misled father are taking his strength away day after day.

Mary is left an orphan by the death of her father and mother in India and is sent to England where her guardian lives. His name is Archibald Craven and his home is a beautiful old manor. The death of his wife when the boy Colin was born has left him in a dejected state of mind and the easy prey of his brother, who is anxious to get his nephew out of the way. The boy has spinal trouble, and Warren Craven, a doctor by profession, makes him wear a torturing brace. Mary arrives in England, accompanied by a pet tiger kitten, and proceeds to upset the household.

Hearing Colin groaning with pain from his brace one night, Mary goes to his room and helps him take it off. She also finds the key to the secret garden, which has been locked up since its mistress died. Colin is taken there by the little girl and his brace is buried in the ground. Finding that he can walk without it, and that his uncle is trying to poison him, Colin allows Mary to direct his actions and makes her his wife when he regains his health and has served in the British army.

Dick Rosson as Colin, Spottiswoode Aitken as Archibald Craven, Clarence Geldart as Warren Craven, Ann Malone as Martha, Paul Willis as Dickon and Lucille Ward as Mrs. Sowerby are the leading members of the support.

"THE BLUFFER"

Five-Reel World Picture Features June Elvidge in Strong Society Story.

Review by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel subject, "The Bluffer," besides being well-made and quite absorbing in plot, gives the observer a good insight into the motives animating certain types of persons who move in what is called high society. June Elvidge, in the role of Sybil Van Norden, portrays a formerly rich girl who finds herself suddenly facing the direst form of poverty. Through the wrong sort of advice she determines to "bluff" her way through life, as her father had done before her, and the story of her struggles in the grip of adverse circumstances is well worth seeing.

The story opens with Sybil contemplating the wreck of her father's fortune, her sire having killed himself and left her to meet the world single-handed, knowing nothing but a sheltered social life. She visits Richard Vaughn, her father's former partner, also ruined in the crash. It is Vaughn who advises her to bluff and make her way on her looks. Sybil sets out to make a rich marriage and soon encounters Wallace Duncan, who has the same design. Each thinks the other rich and they marry. When the truth finally comes out that neither has a cent they become card sharps and make their way playing crooked bridge. In the end of course disaster overtakes them and the husband is killed in a fight with one of Sybil's admirers. She then weds Vaughn, who sees what his advice brought her to and desires to make amends. The number closes with them living happily in the West.

This narrative, which was written by Clara S. Beranger and directed by Travers Vale, has more body to it than the ordinary feature and is therefore more worth while. Irving Cummings has the role of Vaughn, Frank Mayo that of Wallace Duncan, and others appearing include George MacQuarrie, Muriel Ostriche, Elizabeth Garrison, Louis Grisel, Jack Davidson and Jack Raymond.

Publicity Points.

The story gives a satisfying delineation of social life, without the usual exaggeration of types.

June Elvidge plays easily and naturally the part of a rich girl suddenly forced to make her way through life without training or guidance of any sort.

The social scenes have an atmosphere of universal interest, and include a game of bridge whist and a masked ball.

The narrative as a whole gets into conditions existing in real life and the characters represent genuine human beings.

"THE PROFITEER"

Arrow Film Corporation Presents War-Time Melodrama in Six Reels.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

NOT a great deal about the war enters into this six-reel feature, presented by Arrow Film Corporation, except the fact that the villain is a profiteer, who beats the government consistently on war contracts, and that the hero has invented a machine for raising sunken ships. The subject is one of the frankly melodramatic type and contains many situations of a crude, elemental type. There is an attack on the heroine by a chauffeur, an instance of drugged wine and a "frame-up" to compromise the girl with the hero, a mutiny on shipboard and hand-to-hand tussles with the villain. These and other incidents give character to the offering as a melodrama of the old-fashioned sort and one which will have appeal with audiences which like that style of production. It will not be taken seriously by others.

Alma Hanlon is cast as the heroine. She is an attractive girl of the blonde type and has the merit of filming well. Jack Sherill plays the hero, Tom Merritt, and has a rather engaging way with him. The love scenes between the two at the beginning are quite attractive. In the story Tom, who really wishes to enlist, is obliged to "carry on" in the machine shop which employs him. The owner of the plant, Henry Fair, is the profiteer, and being a villain himself, he has a sister of the same stripe. The latter, Veda, loves Tom and seeks to part him from the heroine.

In the closing scenes there is one more touch of the war when a party of Uncle Sam's marines board the ship with the mutinous crew and restore order.

The number was directed by J. K. Holbrook. Others in the cast are Robin H. Townley, Charles Bowell, F. W. Stewart, Dorothy Kingdon and E. L. Howard.

Publicity Points.

In the love story at the beginning some good scenic effects are pictured, including a river, spanned by a huge dam, which the heroine crosses.

The views of the returning American fleet at the close give a pleasing patriotic thrill.

"THE CALL OF THE SOUL"

Gladys Brockwell Commands Sympathy for Stellar Role in Fox's Latest Release.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

IN a recent issue of the Moving Picture World a fellow worker on the next bench in this office composed an editorial on the subject of "The 'Wronged Gal' Story." The caption and a great deal of the subject matter of Robert C. McElravy's editorial might well be called upon to quote in this report of Gladys Brockwell's latest Fox issue, "The Call of the Soul." Those concerned enough might turn to page 205 of The World dated January 11 and get further details.

Before "The Call of the Soul" has passed its first reel we see the heroine beguiled into a trip to an island near shore but too far away to swim the distance. The boat that carries her with her betrayer is stolen and the couple is left on the island all night. The caption inserted at the "next morning" point of the film indicates what has happened and then the story goes on with the results of a life of deception the heroine practices upon the man she ultimately marries without revealing her "past."

Fox showed two pictures of practically the same type at one session in his projection room, and it can be said that Miss Brockwell's picture was the lesser of two indiscretions. It is due almost entirely to Miss Brockwell's personality that sympathy goes out to the character she so skillfully plays—even when she has, through lack of moral courage to confess, entered upon a marriage that must lead to a lifetime of deceit, if not ultimate exposure, and, inevitably, continuous mental distress.

Risking repetition the opinion is advanced that there must be audiences for "wronged gal" stories and there remains but to single them out in such reports as trade paper opinions amount to that exhibitors may be acquainted with the subject matter and thus be apprised in advance how to deal with the booking. Because "the gal" was betrayed by a master of circumstances over which she had no control it is all the greater problem (from the viewpoint of a promiscuous theatre audience) to arrive at any personal expression of opinion.

Suffice it here to say that for such audiences as delight in "wronged gal" stories Gladys Brockwell enacts a role that will meet all specifications; that there will be sympathy for the girl, and not too much of final detestation for the villain. This last mentioned type of picture characters does what he can to atone by telling the deceived husband the gospel truth and then "fading out" with a "gun" in his hand. We presume he shot himself. The husband, knowing the truth, gave the story its happy ending by folding the wife in one arm and "the child" in the other.

As a final word Miss Brockwell must be accorded unstinted praise for supplying the story with a sympathetic touch that centers in the character she portrays and thereby lessens what might be the objectionable tension that would be created if the star character were less skillfully presented.

"THE DANGER ZONE"

William Fox Presents Madlaine Traverse in an Exposure of a Woman's Past.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THE fact that producers continue to make pictures reflecting the dark past of beautiful women would seem to indicate that there is an exhibitor market for them, and it is logical to presume that there is a public demand, as reflected by the showman's bookings. Such being the case, it seems to be the proper mission of a trade paper review to tell theatre managers that "The Danger Zone" is that kind of a picture, and let the showman use his own judgment in handling it.

The villain in this case is a cad—one hundred per centum rotter. He discards his "affinity" to go abroad, and returns to find her famous as an opera singer. At the theatrical performance where he occupies a box to witness the triumph of his ex-love he meets a girl whom he has become acquainted with while in London. The girl's father gives a week-end party to the famous singer, and invites the villain to be one of the guests.

High spots in the plot pass speedily thereafter. The cad makes love to the sweet, young girl, and the father marries the opera singer. Beset by pressing debts, the rotter makes his ex-love give him money under pain of exposure. When the woman with the past learns that her ex-lover is to marry the daughter of friend husband the woman declares that it cannot be, and the father sides against what seems to be his daughter's ideas of happiness.

On the evening of a planned elopement with the clean, young girl, the rotter calls to demand a final sum as tribute from the unhappy woman he has blackmailed, and, in a struggle, he is stabbed to death by the beautiful creature who, momentarily, has revived his smoldering passions. The girl who has been waiting alone to elope with the rotter decides that something has gone wrong, and returns to her father's house. She bursts into the room where the man she foolishly loves is lying dead. The real murderess contrives to bring the girl's father on to the scene while the wretched young creature holds in her hand the dripping implement of death.

Murderess Is Acquitted.

When the girl is accused of murder, and is about to be tried, the woman who committed the crime confesses. At her subsequent trial the murderess is acquitted on her own confession, coupled with a complete revelation of her shady past. Ultimately husband and wife are reunited, and the ending is thus made as "happy" as conditions will permit.

Madlaine Traverse is the star of the occasion. She is a handsome woman, "looks the part" and gets everything possible out of the role she plays—except the very vital note of sympathy. Never for an instant is there set up an illusion; she seems to be "playing the game" of feathering her own nest just as the rotter is likewise forwarding his individual schemes. One is most inclined to sympathy (if sympathy there be) for the clean, old man who made the woman with an uninvestigated past his second wife.

Publicity Points.

Public interest in incidents bearing on theatrical life is always waiting to be capitalized. The Majestic Theatre, Los Angeles, was used to stage the scene wherein the heroine makes her great hit as a public singer. "Back stage" is pictured, and the theatre auditorium is shown filled with an enthusiastic audience.

Madlaine Traverse is a new Fox star—this is, we believe, her second picture. Her physical charms are an asset to exhibitors, who may appeal to that great host of people who always like to see a pretty woman. The fine gowns Miss Traverse wears will catch the eye of the ladies, and mere man will find the star mighty easy to look at.

"A VAGABOND OF FRANCE"

Four-Reel Pathe Program Feature, Adapted from Jean Richepin's Poem, "Le Chemineau."

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

JEAN RICHEPIN'S poem, "Le Chemineau," has already served as the basis of a play written for Otis Skinner some years ago, and it now lends itself to a very pretty film story in four reels. The leading role, that of a wandering vagabond, is played by M. Henri Krauss, who appeared as Jean Valjean in the Pathe version of Les Miserables.

The tale is one of the open road and has for a background some beautiful rural settings in France, where the picture was made. The cast is entirely one of French extraction and this gives an artistic coherence to the narrative. It also goes far to make acceptable some rather broad situations, perhaps typical of life among the Breton farmers, but which might seem out of place in an American made film.

M. Henri Krauss makes an appealing figure as the Vagabond when he first comes swinging into view on the farm of Pierre. He pauses a while after making merry with some haymakers and decides to work in the hayfields. Here he encounters a buxom lass named Toinon and steals a kiss from her. The Vagabond possesses certain curative powers and makes friends by breaking up an epidemic among the sheep.

Francois, one of the farm hands, is in love with Toinon and wishes to wed her, but she falls in love with the Vagabond and practically lives with him until the lure of the road again overtakes him and he steals away. A strong heart interest is developed in these situations, despite their broad character, and this is intensified by the scenes which follow. Twenty years have elapsed and Toinon is married to Francois, though she has a grown son of which the Vagabond is the father. The son is about to kill himself because Pierre will not let him wed his daughter when the Vagabond again appears and works happiness for all concerned. He then once more takes to the road.

The effect of the whole story is one of unusual artistry. Others in the cast are

Mme. Charlotta Barbier as Toinon, M. Charlier as Pierre, M. Anthonin as Francois and M. Colsy as the son.

Publicity Points.

This film is remarkable for the beauty of its French rural settings and the charm of the open road.

M. Henri Krauss, who appears as the Vagabond, is an actor of unusual ability and was featured as Jean Valjean in the Pathe version of Les Miserables. Mme. Charlotta Barbier also makes an admirable heroine of the buxom type.

The production is one of unusual artistic quality and, while rather broad in certain situations, is no doubt true to the phases of Breton farm life depicted.

The story itself strikes a very human note throughout.

"FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE EAST"

Goldwyn Special Produced by Betzwood Film Company Features Lady Tsen Mei.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IRA M. LOWRY is responsible for the story and direction of "For the Freedom of the East," a five-part Goldwyn special produced by the Betzwood Film Company and featuring the Chinese actress, Lady Tsen Mei. The star is well known on the vaudeville stage, and shows real ability in her motion picture debut. She has perfect repose and an individuality that proclaims excellent breeding and good mental powers. Her physical development is remarkable, and the manner in which she climbs down the side of a house while in evening costume and throws the villain after a short and sharp encounter is an interesting sight. As a stunt performer Lady Tsen Mei could more than hold her own with the native article.

"For the Freedom of the East" opens in China. Von Ritchman, a German official, has bribed a Chinese Viceroy by promising that Germany will make him the ruler of his country if he will assist his ally to conquer Russia. Princess Tsu, the Viceroy's niece, has been won over to democracy and is the leader of a secret society pledged to make China of that political faith. She is loved by Prince Kang, but meets an American Secret Service agent named Robert Kenyon and becomes infatuated with him.

The Princess gets hold of the agreement between her uncle and Von Ritchman and turns it over to Kenyon long enough for him to make a photograph of it. Prince Kang tells her that Kenyon is engaged to an America girl, and Princess Tsu gives way to her jealousy and informs the German agent that the American has the photograph. He is waylaid, but love of country prompts the Chinese girl to save him. After following Kenyon to the United States and again saving him from Von Ritchman, the Princess returns to China and marries Prince Kang.

The production is of good quality and the acting of the supporting company meets all demands. Lai Mon Kim as the Viceroy, Herbert Horton Pattee as Von Ritchman, Robert Elliott as Kenyon, Benjamin Hendricks, Jr., as Prince Kang and Neil Moran as an American Consul have the leading roles. The picture was photographed by David Calcagni.

Publicity Points.

The star of "For the Freedom of the East" is a type of Chinese woman that is only met in the best society in this country . She shows her birth and breeding, and the scenes in her own country indicate the manners and customs of her walk in life.

Lady Tsen Mei is an athlete of long training and fine skill, and does a number of stunts in the picture that would do credit to Douglas Fairbanks. The modern evening gown she wears in the last reel shows her splendid muscles, and the ease and sureness of her movements are fascinating.

The picture is a novelty and reveals that China is ready to do her part in the struggle for democracy.

COMMENTS

Exhibitors-Mutual.

VACATION LAND (Rothacker).—One of the best of the Outdoor Series. This is a well photographed number and contains a collection of delightful views taken in Colorado and the Rockies. The sub-titling in this number is also good and exhibitors will find it an attractive addition to their programs.

THEY DID AND THEN THEY DIDN'T (Strand).—This comedy number has to do with a boast made by a young married man that his wife had not asked him to give up any of his former habits, such as smoking. No sooner said than his wife asks him to forgo his usual after dinner smoke. He promises to do so on condition that she give up using face powder. A number of mildly amusing incidents occur in connection with the bargain, and the affair ends by each leaving the other to the enjoyment of their usual customs.

ACCIDENTAL HEROES (Strand).—This number of the Strand comedies, featuring Elinor Field, is moderately amusing. It treats of what happened when a young woman who had promised to elope changed her mind. A burglar entering her room locks her in a closet and after clearing the house of its valuables attires himself in her clothes and meets the hero at the bottom of the ladder, rides away with him and is finally collared by the detective. A reconciliation between the father and his daughter's sweetheart takes place.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW, NO. 29 (Pathe).—A timely number picturing the trip of President and Mrs. Wilson to France on the George Washington. Their experiences are shown from the time the ship left the New York dock until the arrival and reception in France. Numerous incidents en route are shown, and some interesting demonstrations of exploding depth bombs are included.

JAPAN OF TO-DAY (Post-Pathe).—This is the first installment of the Post Travel series dealing with Japan. This first number shows the location of the various islands, which have all told a population of some 70,000,000, and includes views of numerous Japanese cities. Native sports and industrial pursuits are an entertaining feature.

HUSTLING FOR HEALTH (Rolin-Pathe).—A comedy number featuring Stan Laurel. He appears in this as a henpecked husband who goes to the country to recuperate. He mets with some funny misadventures, but there is no very definite connecting plot and the number on the whole is only fairly strong.

THE REWARD OF PATRIOTISM (Pathe).—This episode, No. 15, brings to a close the Pathe serial "Wolves of Kultur." It witnesses the escape of Bob and Alice from the clutches of the gang and the subsequent rounding up of all the German spies, in which the detective, Barclay, directs matters. A double wedding at the close is a feature. The serial as a whole has provided innumerable thrills.

CORINNE, COME HERE (Pathe).—An amusing two-reel juvenile subject, featuring Gloria Joy, assisted by Doris Baker and a host of other children. The scene is laid at an orphan asylum, where the children are poorly cared for. The adoption of Gloria and her friend by a childless young couple is a touching feature of the subject. This contains plenty of humor and a good heart interest.

Directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

The Story: Herod, King of Judea, is the object of the wiles of Salome, who seeks the power that is his. His chief rival she disposes of, and his wife she also causes to be killed through her own treachery. Then comes a new factor of danger. John, known as the Baptist, who has secured a powerful hold upon the people, denounces Herod and his court. Herod has him thrown into jail for fomenting sedition. There Salome meets him, and becomes crazed by passion. John will not respond to her appeals, and she is determined upon revenge. With a sensuous dance she gains the approval of Herod, and demands as her reward the head of John, but the act brings its own punishment. She is crushed beneath the sharp-spoked shields of the Roman legionaries.

Feature Theda Bara as Salome.

Directed by J. Stuart Blackton.

The Story: Gen. Crowder's famous work or fight order hit many classes of life. It drew into its meshes the son of a shipbuilder, his butler and a pair of tramps. The raid was engineered by the shipbuilder himself in the hope that it might steady his son down. The four men become fast friends, and are instrumental in averting the destruction of the shipyards by a bomb planted by I. W. W. agitators. The war's end finds all four men reborn, and real and lasting happiness comes through work.

Feature Mitchell Lewis as Big Steve Reardon and Ruby de Remer as Alice Webster.

Mrs. Peale, his mother.....Matilda Baring
Hal, his sister.....Gene Burnell
His Father.....Frederick Truesdale
Governor of New York.....Tefft Johnson
Honora Mairs.....Violet Reed
"Old Foord".....James Fury
Mrs. Sparhawk.....Norma Seifert
Latimer Burr.....Captain Harry Lambert

Directed by Ralph Ince.

The Story: John Sparhawk, a New Englander, newly widowed, takes his daughter, Patience, West, and they settle in a mining town beyond the bounds of civilization. There he marries a dance hall woman, who seeks to force Patience to capitalize her beauty in the dance hall. Sparhawk dies, and the woman's insistence drives Patience away. In this she is partly influenced by a few words of advice from Garon Bourke, a noted criminal lawyer, there on a hunting trip. She goes East, and eventually marries Beverly Peale out of gratitude to his aunt. Peale is found poisoned after an attack upon his wife, and Patience is sentenced to die for the murder in spite of the efforts of Bourke, who comes to her aid. How she narrowly escapes the death chair is thrillingly told.

Feature Olga Petrova as Patience Sparhawk and Rockcliffe Fellowes as Garon Bourke.

Program and Advertising Phases: Olga Petrova Star of Impressive Photoplay Based on Gertrude Atherton's Celebrated Novel.
"Patience Sparhawk and Her Times" Visualized on the Screen.
How a Jealous Girl's Perjured Testimony Nearly Sacrificed Life.
Innocent Victim of Conspiracy Saved from Death in Electric Chair.
How a Newspaper Story Sent a Great Criminal Lawyer to Woman's Rescue.

Advertising Angles: Unless you play to the sensation seeker it is best to work along dignified lines, but this picture can be handled either way. Make a deep shadow box for the lobby large enough to take a one-sheet which shows Patience in the electric chair. In front mount a green door on a spring hinge, and letter, "The little green door and what it leads to in 'The Panther Woman'." Put this close to the street. Don't make the mistake of trying to rig up an actual death chair—use the poster. Try and use a couple of the 24 sheets in either campaign. If you play for dignity use the name of the star and of the author of the book. It should bring the money either way according to your clientele.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, one three-sheet, one six-sheet, one twenty-four-sheet. Ad and scene cuts. Music cues. Slides. Heralds. Electrical lobby display. Photos for lobby display.

"SMILES"

William Fox Presents the Famous Lee Kiddies in a New Combination of Smiles, Giggles, Laughs and Yells.

Cast.

Jane.....Jane Lee
Katherine.....Katherine Lee
Lucille Forrest.....Ethel Fleming
Tom Hayes.....Val Paul
Madame Yelba.....Carmen Phillips
Wagner.....Charles Arling
Housekeeper.....Katherine Griffith

Directed by Arvid E. Gilstrom.

The Story: Jane and Katherine are sent by parcels-post to their aunt, Lucille Forrest. Lucille loves Tom Hayes, but when he resigned his commission in the army she denounced him as a slacker and gave back the ring. The kiddies drive their aunt close to the verge of distraction with their pranks, but, when their efforts result in the capture of a Prussian spy and reveal Captain Hayes as a secret service man who has retired from the army to engage in more important work, all ends happily.

Feature the Lee kiddies, Jane and Katherine.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Here's the Lee Kiddies Back to the Screen With Another Gloom Dispeller for Young and Old.
Fox's "Baby Grands" Have a Grand "Baby" Photoplay for Grown-Ups.
Hun Spy Plots Thwarted by "Cut-Up Kiddies," the Little Lee Darlings.
Laughs, Thrills and Sensations Brought to the Screen by Lee Kiddies.
Lee Kiddies Shipped by Parcel Post to Great Joy for Screen Fans.

Advertising Angles: Your big card is the appearance of the children. Play that for all it is worth, giving the title to show that the vehicle is new. Try a few extra sheets of paper on boards away from the house, and for the lobby use extra sets of stills. Use plenty of cuts in the newspaper work, and pick up the smile angles from the press sheet for newspaper copy.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets, two styles of each. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).
Released January 12.

"THE REGENERATION"

William Fox Presents Rockcliffe Fellowes and Anna Q. Nilsson in a Story Based Upon Owen Kildare's "My Mamie Rose."

Cast.

Owen Conway.....Rockcliffe Fellowes
Marie Deering.....Anna Q. Nilsson
Skinny the Rat.....William A. Sheer Assist. Dist. Attorney.....Carl Harbaugh
Jim Conway.....James Marcus
Owen, at age of ten.....Johnny McCann

Directed by Raoul A. Walsh.

The Story: The powerful story of the awakening of the soul of a Bowery loafer whose better instincts were awakened by the appeal of a woman's voice. The story is largely that of the author's own life, but vivid spectacle vies with the tensely told story of the underworld written by a man who knew its every angle.

Feature Rockcliffe Fellowes as Owen Conway and Anna Q Nilsson as Marie Deerlng.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Rockcliffe Fellowes and Anna Q. Nilsson Stars in the Screen Story of "My Mamie Rose."
Life Story of Bowery Derelict Pictured According to His Own Story.
The Regeneration of Owen Kildare, Bowery Derellct, Pictured on the Screen.
Powerful Picturization of Great Human Interest Story of Regeneration.
The Tragic Life Story of a Reformed Bowery Derelict Who Became a Man.

Advertising Angles: Tell that this is a revival and that it has been revived because it still stands as one of the really powerful stories of the underworld. Apart from the players, the best angle to play up is that this story is virtually that of the author, who, by the way, was the literary protege of Hall Caine.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets, two styles of each. Lobby dlsplays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).
Released January 12.

"TONGUES OF FLAME"

Bluebird Presents Marie Walcamp in a Spectacular Version of Bret Harte's Wonderful Story, "In the Carquinez Woods."

Cast.

Teresa.....Marie Walcamp
L'Eau Dormante.....Al Whitman
Sheriff Dunn.....Alfred Allen
Jack Brace.....Hugh Sutherland
Rev. Wynn.....J. P. Wilde
Nellie Wynn, his daughter....Lilly Clarke

Produced by Colin Campbell.

The Story: Teresa, a dance hall girl, who has killed her lover in a fit of jealousy, is being taken to jail. She escapes from her captors in the Carquinez woods, and is befriended by L'Eau Dormante, an educated half-breed, who lives in the hollow trunk of one of the great redwoods. The sheriff grows jealous of Dormante, whom he thinks has stolen the love of Nellie Wynn, and stumbles upon Teresa while waiting for the breed. Then Dormante discovers that the sheriff is his own father. Events are moving fast, but the fates write the final chapter of the tangled romance, for fire sweeps the woods, and the trio find a wonderful pyre in the giant redwoods that have stood since before man was.

Feature Marie Walcamp as Teresa and Al Whitman as L'Eau Dormante.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Marie Walcamp, Daring Star of Sensational Serials, Becomes Heroine in Famous Bret Harte Story.
Bret Harte Story Filmed in the Heart of California's Redwood Forests.
Unusual Screen Sensation in Vizualizing a Great Forest Fire.
Bluebird's Latest Picture Vizualizes Famous Bret Harte Story.
"In the Carquinez Woods," By Bret Harte, Is "Tongues of Flames" in Bluebird's Picture Version.

Advertising Angles: In all your advertising link the Harte tltle wlth the playing title for identification. Play up the author as well as the star, and make an appeal to the literary societies and to the English literature classes. Get your bookseller to display a copy if he has one, supplying a set of stills to be shown in the wlndow display. If you can get pine boughs make a bower of the lobby.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six sheets. Stock one-sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays. Slide. Heralds. Players' cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two columns wide. Press book.
Released December 2.

"WHEN A MAN RIDES ALONE"

American Presents William Russell in an Ingenious Story of the Ruse of a Gang of Bandits to Escape the Texas Rangers.

Cast.

William Sykes.....William Russell
"The Vulture".....Carl Stockdale
Guadalupe Moreno.....Lule Warrenton

Directed by Henry King.

The Story: William Sykes is a Texas ranger, assigned to the duty of escorting a shipment of gold. The train is attacked by bandits, who nearly wipe out the small escort, but, hard pressed, take refuge with a rancher, who protects them against the supposed thieves, who in reality are the rangers. The bandits escape while the rancher holds off the attackers, but he soon learns their true character, and Sykes finds a bride in the girl who had been most determined in her efforts to kill the supposed bandit king.

Feature William Russell as William Sykes and Lule Warrenton as Guadalupe Moreno.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Men Who Live Obscure Lives Upon the Ranches of America Figure in Authentic Photoplay.
You Live Among Neighbors—These Men Live Alone Upon the Plains.
Isolated Men of Brawn and Daring Figure as Heroes in Photoplay.
When a Man Rides Alone He Meets Climaxes That He Must Conquor.
Brave men of Red Blood Figure As Heroes In Thrilling Photoplay.

Advertising Angles: Ranger stories are generally popular because they possess abundant action. Tell that in this William Russell is seen in a story that gets away from the beaten track, and that the rangers have by no means an easy time. Play up the situation in which the bandits adroitly win the support of the rancher, but make your chief appeal with the angle of the girl who comes to love the man she has been most determined to kill.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 11x14, both in sepia and color; also 22x28. Slide. Campaign book. Cuts.

Released through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"LITTLE WOMEN"

William A. Brady Presents the Story Dear to Every Man and Woman from the Book by Louisa M. Alcott.

Cast.

Mr. March.....George Kelson
Mrs. March.....Kate Lester
Aunt March.....Julia Hurley
Jo.....Dorothy Bernard
Meg.....Isabel Lamon
Beth.....Lillian Hall
Amy.....Florence Flinn
Hannah.....Mrs. Anderson
Laurie.....Conrad Nagel
John Brooke.....Henry Hull
Mr. Laurence.....Frank de Vernon
Prof. Baer.....Lynn Hammond

Directed by Harley Knoles.

The Story: The story of "Little Women" is known wherever English is read, and the book has been translated into many tongues. It is one of the stories of childhood that lives in the mind of the child grown up, and the sympathetic production and the care given in casting brings a new vividness to the ever new old story.

Feature the four "Little Women," Dorothy Bernard as Jo, Isabel Lamon as Meg, Lillian Hall as Beth and Florence Flinn as Amy.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Louise M. Alcott's Famous Story Brought to the Screen in Realistic Pictures.
Most Famous Characters in Literature Vizualized With Charming Effect.
Famous Story of American Youth Vizualized in Impelling Pictures.
Every Grown Up Has Read "Little Women"—See It Pictured Now.
"Little Women," Most Famous of Juvenile Stories, Presented as Photoplay.

Advertising Angles: Do not make the mistake of appealing merely to the children, for their elders all know and love the story. Get a six-sheet of the four girls near every school in your district, and try and use at least one 24-sheet. Get the schools to let you announce the play through posters in the corridors, and give a special performance for the children. In your newspaper work direct your appeal to their elders. If you have never read the book, get someone who has to help you with the advertising copy, and give it the personal touch. Advertise liberally. It will bring back money.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising lay-out mats. Slides. Press book.

Released January 5 through Famous Players-Lasky.

"LOVE IN A HURRY"

World Pictures Presents Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in the Story, "A Huge, Black One-Eyed Man," from the Saturday Evening Post.

Cast.

Charles Conant.....Carlyle Blackwell
Lady Joan Templar.....Evelyn Greeley
Lady Dartridge (her mother), Isabel O'Madigan
George Templar.....George MacQuarrie
John Murr.....William Bechtel
Shorty.....Kid Broad
Captain.....Dick Collies
Gardener.....Louis Grizel
Secret Service Men..Barrington and Dewey

Directed by Dell Henderson.

The Story: Charles Conant, in reality the son of Hamlin, an American millionaire mine owner, arrives in England on a mule transport. He eludes the rule that all muleteers must be returned to the states, and makes his way into the country partly assisted by Lady Joan Templar, whose mother is an American. Her cousin, George Templar, is chief constable of his district, and determines to arrest Conant, who eludes him with the aid of Lady Joan, who has learned of his identity, and Conant proves that his seeming escapade is really an effort to prevent the delivery to the Germans of titanium he had innocently sold German agents, and the discomfited chief constable finds that one of his own tenant farmers is in league with the Huns.

Feature Carlyle Blackwell as Charles Conant and Evelyn Greeley as Lady Joan Templar.

Program and Advertisng Phrases: Amazing Story of a Muleteer's Adventures in High Society Circles of the titled English.
Love and Adventure Coupled with Secret Service Dangers.
Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley Stars of Sensational Screen Play.
Another Saturday Evening Post Story Finds Expression on the Screen.
How a Mule's Chambermaid Found His Way Into England's High Society.

Advertising Angles: You have two well known stars and a vivid story to work with. In handling the story avoid the climax. Tell of the mysterious American who breaks into England with a map of the country in a hollow boot heel, and get them guessing as to what his motive is. Then hammer on the aid Lady Joan gives him to add to the mystery. You can work up a decided interest in the mystery.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, two six-sheets, two eight-sheets and one 24-sheet. Eight 8x11 black-and-white, eight 11x14 colored and two 22x28 colored lobby displays. One two-column cut, two one-column cuts. Slides, press sheets and music cues.

Released January 13.

"DAY DREAMS"

Goldwyn Presents Madge Kennedy in a Dainty Fantasy, Half Imaginative and Wholly Real, by Cosmo Hamilton.

Cast.

Primrose.....Madge Kennedy
Dan O'Hara.....John Bowers
George Graham.....Jere Austin
Grandfather Burn.....Alec B. Francis
Grandmother Burn.....Grace Henderson
Housekeeper.....Marcia Harris
Rumplestilzen .....Himself

Directed by Clarence G. Badger.

The Story: Primrose, a country girl, has lived so much alone that she has peopled her empty world with the knights and fairies of her story books. She disdains the commonplace suitor who comes a-wooing, and tells him that she is waiting for the White Knight. The White Knight comes, but he is the tool of the rejected suitor, who plans to be revenged upon Primrose by shattering her dreams; but her fairy friends are faithful to their queen, and day dreams become pleasant realities.

Feature Madge Kennedy as Primrose and John Bowers as Dan O'Hara.

Program and Advertisng Phrases: If Dreams Ever Come True This Picture Will Be the Proof.
When All the World Loves a Lover—He Goes Into Moving Pictures.
Dreams Come True When Madge Kennedy Is the Screen Necromancer.
Here Is a Love Story Everyone Will Be Glad They Saw Pictured.
The Screen Realizes Its Best Purpose in Making Everybody Happy.

Advertising Angles: Cash in on the popularity of Miss Kennedy by giving widespread publicity to the fact that in this story she has a unique vehicle. Frame your appeal particularly toward the better class of your patrons. Do not advertise it as a fairy story. It is not. But advertise it as a fantasy which admirably suits the dainty personality of the star. Make them realize that there is a dual attraction—Miss Kennedy and a story of real charm. Work the Peter Pan line, "Do you believe in fairies?" adding that Madge Kennedy did in "Day Dreams." Pick up the phonograph stunt from the press book if you have not used it lately. In any event, work on the song of that title.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six and one 24-sheet. Rotogravure one-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Coming and current slides. Advertising and scene cuts. Photographic line-cut copy for ads. Press book. Music one-sheet.

Released January 12.

"THE SIREN'S SONG"

William Fox Presents Theda Bara in the Story of a Singer Who Gave Her Voice to France.

Cast.

Marie Bernais, later known as Marinelli, Theda Bara
Jules Bernais.....Alfred Fremont
Aunt Caroline.. .....Ruth Handforth
Raoul Nieppe.....L. C. Shumway
Gaspard Prevost.....Albert Roscoe
Hector Remey.....Paul Weigel
Paulette Remey.....Carrie Clark Ward

Directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

The Story: Marie Bernais, a Breton village girl, is the possessor of a wonderful voice, which her father regards as a gift of the devil. Raoul Nieppe loves her, but fears to marry beneath his station. His rejection causes Marie to attempt suicide. She is rescued by Hector Remey, once a famous tenor, but now a punch and judy showman, who makes her a famous singer. Raoul finds her, the mistress of Prevost, a rich manufacturer, who cannot marry her because he has a wife. He persuades her to give up the liason, and all too late she discovers that his anxiety is due to his own desire to possess her. Distraught, she persists in singing for the soldiers, though she is warned that her voice will be ruined. She once more becomes a humble peasant girl, but Prevost, now free, seeks her out on the death of his wife, and she at last finds happiness in honorable marriage.

Feature Theda Bara as Marie Bernais and Albert Roscoe as Gaspard Prevost.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Theda Bara Star of Gripping Vampire Photoplay That Tells of Woman's Vengeance.
A Story of a Woman's Soul Redeemed by Woman's Sacrifice.
Theda Bara's Super Production Introduces the Queen of Vampires.
Best Screen Role Ever Enacted by Theda Bara, Queen of Vampires.

Advertising Angles: Most of your appeal should be made through the favor with which your patr ns regard the star. Work largely on this angle, merely suggesting the high lights of the story to show that it is a typical Bara offering.

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets, two styles of each. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Announcement slide. Cuts, mats and press sheets (cuts are made on special order at rate of 20 cents per column; mats and press sheets are mailed gratis).

Released January 12.

EPILOGUE.

The Woman.....Florence Billings
The Man.....Warren Cook

Directed by Maurice Tourneur.

The Story: "Woman" does not class as the usual photoplay with a conventional story. It is a highly imaginative study of woman in all the ages and in many civilizations. It is a series of gorgeous stage pictures in which the interest is gripped through the deductions of the author rather than through the recital of a plot. It is a vivid essay in the most graphic of all forms of expression; a new form of picture presentation of charm and originality.

Feature Florence Billings as the Woman and Warren Cook as the Man.

Program and Advertising Phases: Maurice Tourneur's Masterpiece More Wonderful Than "The Bluebird," by Same Creator.

An Enchanting and Fascinating Silverscreen Photoplay.

The Story of Eden and Eve's Appetite for Ripe Apples.

Screen-story of Great Beauty Pictured in Brillian Episodes.

The History of Creation Brought to Modern Realization.

Advertisinq Angles: Usual methods of exploitation will not hold good here. You will find it difficult to explain to your patrons just what the picture is, so instead of trying to do so, seek rather to arouse their curiosity through lack of explanation. Use little text. Trust to the pictures to arouse curiosity and cause comment. Get several sets of stills and the lobby display.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet, eight 8x10, eight 11x14 and two 22x28 photos; three one column, two two column and one three column cuts; 30x40 and 40x60 scenes with easel back for lobby display; heralds or plates for same; slides.

"FAIR ENOUGH"

American Presents Margarita Fisher in the Story of a Girl Who Would Not Have as a Husband "a Little Structure with a Misplaced Eyebrow."

Cast.

Ann Dickson.....Margarita Flsher
Mrs. Ellen Dickson.....Eugenie Forde
Jas. Dickson, Esq....Alfred Hollingsworth
Madame Ohnet.....Alice Knowland
Frederick Pierson.....Harry McCoy
Carey Phelan.....Jack Mower
"Happy" Flanigan.....Bull Montana
Chief of Police.....J. Farrell McDonald

Directed by Edward Sloman.

The Story: The Dicksons have not the slightest claim to social recognition, but Mrs. Dickson is ambitious and a climber, and is determined that her daughter, Ann, shall marry for position. Ann classifies Freddie Pierson, her mother's choice, as "a little structure with a misplaced eyebrow." She refuses him, and falls in love with a handsome policeman. After a breezy tangle a kindly chief of police holds her parents in the station house while the youngsters slip out and get married, and it develops that the policeman is a millionaire who joined the force merely to get a little excitement, and Mrs. Dickson is content.

Feature Margarita Fisher as Ann Dickson and Jack Mower as Carey Phelan.

Program and Advertisng Phrases: How the Newly Rich Try to Climb Into High Society and Sometimes Miss Their Step.

What Happened When a Green Driver Took the Wheel Off a New Car.

How a Chief of Police Decided a Question That Would Perplex Solomon.

Photoplay Tells Story of Human Interest in Natural Sequence.

The Screen Here Shows How Easy It Is for Mortals to Be Mistaken.

Advertising Angles: After the star use the angle of the social climber who married a policeman, intimating that something unusual happened, but without giving a clue to the climax. Paraphrase "You can lead a young girl to the altar, but you can't always make her get married," and hang some of your advertising on this.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 11x14, both in sepia and color; also 22x28. Slide. Campaign book. Cuts.

Released through Pathe exchanges.

"THE ENCHANTED BARN"

Vitagraph Presents Bessie Love in a Charming Arrangement of Grace H. L. Lutz's Idyllic Story of the Same Title.

Cast.

John Barnard.....Joe Singleton
Walter Graham.....Wm. T. Horne
George Hollister.....Frank Butterworth
Mrs. Hollister.....Ella Wolbert
Harley Hollister.....Darbey A. Walker
Mrs. Walter Graham.....Jene Hathaway

Directed by David Smith.

The Story: Shirley Hollister, a plucky little stenographer, who is supporting an invalid mother, desires a home a little distance from the city where her mother can have the country air. She hires a barn from Sidney Graham and solves her housing problem. Also she arouses the young millionaire landlord's interest. She succeeds in saving her own employer and Graham's father from a million-dollar swindle, and Sidney gives his home to her mother, planning to build a home for himself and Shirley near by.

Feature Bessie Love as Shirley Hollister and J. Frank Glendon as Sidney Graham.

Program and Advertising Phrases; Title and Photoplay Appeal to Imagination of Screen Fans Everywhere.
Bessie Love Star of Latest Vitagraph Seen to Unique Advantage.
If You Think You Could Live In a Barn See This and Be Convinced.
Prince Charming Converts a Regular Old Barn Into a Modern Flat.
Can a Friendship of Chance Break a Young Girl's Heart?

Advertising Angles: Get all you can from Miss Love's name, and work on the oddity of the story. If your house is in the city the barn idea will appeal strongly to most patrons. Work on the lines of, "Want a country home? See 'The Enchanted Barn' and find out how." For small towns try, "Hire a barn and win a husband. See how it's done in 'The Enchanted Barn'." If you can get hold of some old boards, you can turn your entrance into an enchanted barn. In your newspaper work contrast love in a cottage with Bessie Love in a barn.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six sheets. Window cards. Lobby display, 11x14 and 22x28. Heralds. Slides. Plan book. Press sheet.
Released January 13.

"AFTER THE WAR"

Universal Presents as a Special Attraction Grace Cunard in a Story of the Far-Reaching Results of the Hun Bestiality.

Cast.

Gerve .....Grace Cunard
Phillippe .....Edward Cecil
Karl Wetz.....Herbert Prior Vyera .....Dora Rogers

Directed by Joseph De Grasse.

The Story: In Paris, after the war, Gerve, of the opera, meets Karl Wetz, of the German army, and his wife, Vyera. The latter becomes suspicious of their attitude. Meanwhile Gerve has explained to Phillippe that she sacrificed herself to Wetz to save his (Phillippe's) life, when he fell into the hands of the Germans. A child was the result, and stands as a bar between them. Wetz, seeking to renew his relations, is killed by his wife, who has come to question Gerve, and the road is thus cleared to the happiness of Gerve and Phillippe.

Feature Grace Cunard as Gerve and Edward Cecil as Phillippe.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Grace Cunard Daring Heroine of Many Universal Serials Now Blossoms Forth As Dramatic Star.
Picture That Shows Hun Hellishness In Authentic Detail.
Grace Cunard Actress Supreme Star of Stiring Photoplay.
Aftermath of the War Pictured in Vivid Scenes That Fascinate.
Romance of Beautiful Singer Who Fell Victim to Hun Intrigue.

Advertising Angles: Give emphasis to the fact that this is an after-the-war story and not one remade after the armistice. Play on Miss Cunard's popularity. Hammer on the after-the-war angle in all your advertising and tell that this is one of the thousands of tragedies now being enacted in France and Belgium. In all your advertising carry the prominent line, "Not a war picture." It will pay you.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six sheets. Stock one-sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays. Slide. Heralds. Players' cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two columns wide. Press book.

"THE MIDNIGHT STAGE"

The Anderson-Brunton Company Presents Frank Keenan in a Remarkable Story of the West in Which He Plays a Dual Role.

Cast.

John Lynch } .....Frank Keenan
Bige Rivers }
Mary Lynch.....Mignon Anderson
Harvey James.....Charles Gunn
Nita.....Maude George
"Rat" McGrough.....Ernest C. Warde
Boggs.....Richard LaReno
Pasquale.....Arthur Allardt
Elias Lynch.....Thomas Guise
"Twisted" Tuttle.....Jos. J. Dowling
Joe Statler.....Wardsworth Harris

Directed by Ernest C. Warde.

The Story: John Lynch is a professional gambler in the West in the early sixties, when gambling was recognized as an honorable calling if the game is played fairly, but his old father, coming to the West in search of health and wealth, refuses to recognize him as his son. In a stage hold-up the elder Lynch recognizes his son as his murderer, and lives long enough to tell those who come to the rescue. John Lynch is among the rescuers, and is about to pay the penalty to Judge Lynch, when a girl of the camps discovers that he is the victim of mistaken identity, and the real bandit falls a victim to Tom Lynch's accurate aim.

Feature Frank Keenan as John Lynch and Bige Rivers, and Mignon Anderson as Mary Lynch.

Program and Advertising Phrases: When East Meets West the Handicap Is Too Much to be Suddenly Overcome.
There Is Mystery in the Crimes Until the Last Reel Is Disclosed.
Suspense and Action Keep Interest Palpitating Through Entire Story.
The Mexican Situation Takes On New Light When America Takes a Hand.
Love and Conquest May Mean Either Hearts or Fortunes.

Advertising Angles: Tell that this is a real Keenan picture, showing this sterling actor in a fine dual role. Play on the angle of the man accused of killing his own father and about to be strung up for his crime, leaving the reader in doubt as to the outcome. Also use the general atmosphere of the story in your displays and reading notices. You can use a street man dressed as an old-time gambler of the Bret Harte days or perhaps you can get your doorman to dress the part, with a black frock coat, white cuffs and slouch hat.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 11x14, both in sepia and color; also 22x28. Slide. Campaign book. Cuts.
Released by Pathe Exchange, Inc., January 12.
